This Great King sendeth this Letter of Salutation to IAMES, King of Great Britaine, viz. England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, To signifie the great content he hath received by his Highnesse Letter, deliuered by the hands of Arancaia Pulo, Thomas Best his Maiesties Embassadour, at the receipt whereof, his eyes were surprized with a Celestiall brightnesse, and his spirits raniſhed with a Diuine ioy: the opening thereof rendred a sauour more fragrant then the most odoriferous Flowers, or sweetest perfumes in the World. For which cause, I the great King of Sumatra, doe professe my Selse to bee of one heart, of one mind, and of one flesh with the most Potent Prince IAMES K. of England, and do earnestly desire that the League begun, may be continued to all Posterities. And herein I take my greatest Felicitie, there being nothing in the World more pleasant or ioyfull to me. And for a Testimony of my desire, that the League and Amitie begun may be continued betwixt Vs, I haue returned this Letter vnto your Maiestie, making also my Prayers vnto the Great GOD for the continuance of the same. And it shall be my greatest Honour, to receiue Memorials from so Great a Potentate, and so remote a Nation. And for a Pledge of my Love, and Honour, and continuance of Our League, I send your Maiestie a Creeſe wrought with Gold, the Hilt thereof being beaten Gold with a Ring of Stones, an Assagaya of Swasse, halfe Copper halfe Gold, eight Purſlan Dishes small and great, of Camſire one piece of ſowring ſtuffe, three pieces of Calico Lawne: Which your Maiestie accepting as from a Brother, I shall rest satisfied, and much honoured. And so with my Prayers to the Great GOD, Creator of Heauen and Earth for your Maiesties long life, with Victory ouer your enemies, and Prosperitie in your Land.

Given at our Pallace of Achen, the 1022. yere of Mahomet, by the accompt of the Moores.

Description of the King and Court.

This King of Achen is a proper Gallant man of Warre, of thirty two yeares, of middle size, full of spirit, strong by sea and land, his Countrey populous; his Elephants many, whereof wee saw one hundred fixtie, or one hundred eightie at a time, his Gallies and Frigats carry in them very good Brasse Ordnance, Demicanon, Culuerin, Sakar, Minion, &c. his building stately and spacious, though not strong; his Court at Achen, pleasant, hauing a goodly branch of the Maine Riuer about and through his Pallace, which branch he cut and brought fixe or eight miles off, in twenty dayes, while we continued at Achen. Sumatra is very Mountainous and Woodie: the people courteous: wept at our departure, leauing little without his chop. Strangers may neither come at him, nor depart from him. He desired the Generall to commend him to the King of England, and to entreat him to send him two white women. For (said hee) if I beget one of them with child, and it prooue a Sonne, I will make him King of Priaman, Passaman, and of the Coast from whence you fetch your Pepper: so that yee shall not need to come any more to mee, but to your owne English King for these Commodities. Iuly the twelfth we tooke leaue of Achen.

The aire and water at Passaman naught.

The ninth of August they went on shoare at Tecoo: here they stayed eleuen weekes, bought one hundred twenty Tunne of Pepper, buried twenty five men, which got their death at Passaman, for Tecoo is healthfull. Pepper growes most at Passaman, and the Countrey about.

I haue thought good also here to adde a word or two taken out of the Iournall of Nathaniel Salmon, Master of the Salomon.

Ian. 3.

The Sabandar counſelled the Admirall Nunha del Cunha, to cause his Frigats to ride betwixt the shoare and vs, so to keepe vs from watering, which he refused: yea, M. Canning (which had been taken by them) was deliuered at our house in scorne, they professing this their only feare and care, least we should run away. The three that were driuen a ground had there perished, but for their Frigats. Out of the fire-Frigat were taken vp eightie foure men drowned. The Dragon in these fights hath spent fixe hundred thirtie nine great shot, and we three hundred eightie foure.

§. II.

Notes taken out of M. Robert Boners Journall, who was then Master in the Dragon.

THe first of February, hauing receiued in all prouisions for so long a Voyage, we set saile from Grauesend, and the same day at ten of the clocke we anchored in the Hope.

Departed from Grauesend.
The generall wind blowed betwixt East South-east, &
South-east.
Ternadoes.

April the thirteenth, wee had the generall wind. Note that you shall seldome meete with the generall wind, till you come in two or three degrees to the South-ward of the Line, and then, when you cometo meete with the Ternadoes, (as you shall be sure to meete them in two or three, and sometimes in foure degrees to the North-ward of the Line: you must be very diligent to ply to the South-ward) for therein lyeth the mayne of your good or bad passage, and likewise for the health of your men, or they are very vnhealthfull, and for passing the Line, order it so by your course from Mao, that you may passe the Line betwixt seuen and ten degrees of longitude from the Lizard. But couet not to come within sixe degrees, for feare of the calmes vpon the Coast of Guinea, and not without ten degrees of longitude from the Lizard, if it be possible, for feare of meeting with the West North-west streame, that sets alongst the Coast of Brasil, and so into the West-Indies. And so passing the Line in seuen, eight, or nine degrees to the West-ward of the Meridian of the Lizard, you shall not feare the flats of Brasil. For the generall wind will blow at the East South-east, and at South-east; so that you shall make a South South-west way commonly, and so keepe the ship good full, that she may goe through, for there is losse of time, in hawking of the ship crosse by the wind; therefore giue her a fathome of the sheete.

This endanged
red and much hindered the Dragon and He-bor in the third Voyage, as you may read in the Relations

Note, he that comes out of the Sea, bound in for the of Bay of Soldania, let him keep himselfe betweene thirtie three degrees fiftie minutes, and thirtie foure degrees twentie minutes of latitude, so shall you be sure not to come much wide of the Bay. If seeing the land you find it high, then you are to the South-west-ward of the Bay; if low land hills, then know that you are to the North-ward of the Bay of Soldania. But falling with the high land to the South-ward of the Bay, which is betwixt the Cape and the Bay, the land lyeth North North-west; and South South-east from the Cape seuen leagues, and then it trents away North-east and South-west, towards the point of the Sugar-loafe, some foure leagues: and from this point of the Sugar-loafe lyeth Penguin Iland, but keepe faire by the point: for two miles from Penguin Iland lyes a shoales: it is from the point to the Iland some seuen or eight miles North and South, and so borrowing on the said point, at eight or nine fathome, your course South-east, and East South-east, vntill you bring the Table South South-west, and the Sugar-loafe hill South-west and by West, and so you may anchor in sixe and an halfe or sixe fathome, as you will, and then will the point of the land by the Sugar-loafe beare from you West North-west, and Penguin Iland North North-west some three leagues off, and the point some two miles off. The latitude of the Bay of Soldania, I meane of the point going in, is thirtie foure degrees five minutes, the variation of the Needle is fortie minutes Easterly: when you come in with the land heereabouts (although it be thicke) feare not: for the land is bold within a Cables length.

Soldania.

I am of opinion that the Current neere Cape Das Aguilhas sets Southerly not past fiftie or sixtie leagues off the land, and therefore being bound to the East-ward haule off the land sixtie leagues, after you are to the East-ward of Cape Das Aguilhas, so shall you find no Current. The land lyes from the Cape Das Aguilhas, ninetie or one hundred leagues East Northerly, and not as in the Cards East North-east.

Current neere
Cape Das Aguilhas.

Ino de Noua, is a low ragged Iland, about foure miles in length, lying South South-east, and North North-west. This Iland hath latitude seuentene degrees thirtie minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope, nineteene degrees fortie minutes, &c. Wee had no ground at one hundred fathome: we can perceiue no danger from it, only at the South South-east end of it lies a small breach about a mile off: therefore feare not to haule in sight of it, being bound this waies, for if you shall haule ouer for the Maine, you shall be mightily troubled with a strong Current setting to the South-ward, and there are likewise many dangerous bankes, whereon many Portugals haue lost their ships, wherefore be sure you haule not much to the West-ward of this Ile Ino de Noua, for you may very boldly haule in sight of it without danger, and so shall you not meete with the Current.

Note.

The eight & twentieth day of Nouember, we receiued a Letter from M. Canning, & our Purser concerning foure Gallions of War, with thirty saile of Frigats, which were comming to fight with vs. And this day we saw them some two leagues to the South-ward of the Barre of Surat. This day the Sabandar of Surat came aboard to view vs as wee iudge being a friend to the Portugals, but the more he looked the worse he liked, we hauing all things readie, &c.

Foure Gallions
& 30. Frigats.
Sabandar a Spyc.

The nine and twentieth day, at two in the after-noon we set saile, and stood with the foure Gallions and Frigats which were come within some two leagues of vs. The first which we met withall was the Vice-Admirall: wee gaue her such a welcome, as that she was glad to haste vnto the rest with all speed: night being neere and our long Boat sunke, at our sterne with an vnluckey shot, we anchored.

This day wee began our fight.

The

Three of the ships aground.

The thirtieth day, early in the morning wee set saile, and stood with them, and after some houres fight put three of the Gallions ashore on the offermost sand, and then wee stood into deeper water, and anchored: their Frigats were straight aboard the ships aground, and shoared them vp with their yards, or els I thinke they had neuer come off. Alloone as the Floud came wee weighed, but they were afloat ere wee could get to them: wee fought with them till it was darke, and had one man kild, and another hurt.

The first day of December, 1612. we roade within a league one of the other, alwayes we had thought they would haue come to vs, we hauing gone to them three seuerall times, but they are not so hastie, I thinke they haue more minde to goe for Goa againe.

The nineteenth day, there came a second Messenger from a great Lord of the great Mogels 10 from a place called the Castellet, which place this great man lyes in Campe against, sending our Generall word that if he will but come thwart that place with his ships to grace him, hee will be a sworne friend vnto the English for euer. The Generall hearing that hee was a great man in fauour with the King, resolved to goe spend a day or two with him, to see what his desire was.

The twentieth day, we anchored thwart of the Campe beeing close by the Sea-side, for the Castle be sieged butted vpon the Sea, they in the Castle being a companie of Rebels and Routers on the Sea.

The one and twentieth day, vpon the receipt of good caution for his person, our Generall landed, and at three returned to ship.

The two and twentieth day, we saw the foure Gallions and Frigats againe in sight, hauing 20 beene at Diu for more fresh Souldiers, to haue a bout more with vs. At night they anchored within a mile of vs.

The three and twentieth day by day light, we were vnder saile, and stood with the Admirall, and so fought till two of the clocke, at which time they cut their Cable, and began to runne, the Admirall hauing receiued a shot vnder water: but the helpe of the Frigats brought her vpon the Carine presently, and stopped it, and so for this time fled, all the Campe standing by the Sea-side looking on vs, within a league or two miles of vs. For a great Commander did there iust by vs besiege a Castle holden by Rebels and Pirats, and were willing Spectators of this Sea-fight.

Portugals faine
to flye.

The number of shot spent in our five fights.

The foure and twentieth day, we stood with them againe, and fought with them till two or three of the clocke in the after-noon. They fled, and being light ships and cleane, went from vs: 30 one man kild, and no more hurt, prayesd be God for all his mercies. Note, that wee haue spent sixe hundred eightie great shot, and three thousand small shot out of the Dragon, and some sixtie Barrells of Powder: their Admirall had thirtie eight Peeeces, and the rest thirtie by ship, very good Ordnance. This night we steered for Surat South-east, to haue without the sands. South from Mea some sixe leagues off lyes the first spit, on which sand the Ascension was lost.

The fourth day of February 1612. wee set saile and stood to the South-ward, wind at North North-west.

Sunken rocks.

The fifth day, being some eight leagues short of Cape Comorin, wee met with the wind at East very much wind, so that we plaine see there is no going to the East-wards, the Easterly 40 Monson not being done. Heere we anchored at a point of the land, from which point the land trents away East South-east with the Cape of Comorin, and distant eight leagues: but beware how you come neere this point, for thwart of it foure miles off lyes two sunken Rockes close by the edge of the water, and lyes in the streame of twentie or twentie two fathomes: wherefore keepe off in twentie eight or thirtie fathome, and feare them not. But bee sure that you keepe within thirtie five or fortie fathome, for the Current sets off South with the Maldines, and being calme some Portugall ships haue beene driuen to the Maldines, and beene in great danger. You shall know this point from the which these two sunken Rockes lye, by this. Thwart of the point lye two bigge Rockes a good height about the water: a league right off from the Eastermost of the dry Rockes lye the two sunken Rockes, where we roade, the two dry rockes did beare from vs South-east and by East foure miles of the Northmost: here the people will come 50 aboard of your ship every day with prouisions as Hens, and Hogges with linnesse in their little Canoes.

Note, for the Cape of Comorin, for longitude,
latitude,
and variation.

The five and twentieth day at foure a clocke, the Cape of Comorin did beare North North-west some foure leagues off. Note, that the Cape it selfe is very low land with two craggie 60 Rockes lying a little from it, but vp in the Countrey, high ragged land; the Cape of Comorin hath latitude seuen degrees fiftie minutes, and longitude from the Meridian of the Cape of Good Hope, fiftie seuen degrees twentie minutes East. The variation is foureteen degrees thirtie minutes Westerly: we haue very faire shoallding off from it twentie foure fathomes, foure leagues of sand, from the Cape the land trents away East North-east.

Many wormes
at Surat.

I doe thinke that the Gulfe of Cambaya is the worst place in all the Indies for Wormes, and therefore the ships which goe for Surat, must haue good prouision. The Barre of Surat hath latitude twentie one degrees ten minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope fiftie three degrees thirtie minutes Easterly. Variation sixteene degrees fiftie minutes Westerly. Latitude of Swally is twentie one degrees twentie minutes. Variation seuenteen degrees no minutes. The

The Road of Achen hath latitude five degrees fortie minutes South, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope of seuentie three deg. thirtie foure min. East. And from the Cape of Comorin about sixteene degrees twentie minutes East. The variation is sixe degrees thirtie minutes Westerly. As you ride in the Road one high great Iland will beare North of you, distant some sixe leagues, and the two other bigge Ilands will beare from the West South-west to the North-west and by West, anchor hold good: in the Westerly Monson, you shall haue many times very much wind, with gusts of raine, but you shall ride very well: there goes a small Current to the Eastward, and West-ward in manner of a tyde, but not so certaine, and heights and fells some five or sixe foot water.

The latitude, longitude and variation of Achen.

The King loueth our Generall exceeding well, in so much that hee maketh no sport, but hee commands some one of his Nobles to goe for the Arrankaia Putee, for so hath hee named him: so that all the Citie through is he called by that name, and all our men by the common people very kindly entertayned, more then euer any strangers heretofore haue beene.

In steering North North-west from the little Iland, which lyes South-west and by West seuen leagues from Priaman Iland, wee saw a shoald bearing from the said little Iland South-east and by South five miles off. We sent our Boat to it, who found it but three fathome Rockes. From this shoald the Homockes of Tecu beare North and by West: wherefore beeing bound for Tecu, keepe off, so that the Homockes may beare North, or North and by East, and feare not. The Homockes are two round hills standing vpon the low-land close by the Sea-side. At two a clocke we saw the three little round Ilands of Tecu, which Ilands you must ride vnder, they beare of vs, North and by East some foure leagues off, wee steere North, keeping the Ilands open on our starboord bow.

Note, that by good looking out you shall perceiue any danger by this: it will shew it selfe in white spots. For otherwise the Sea is of his perfect colour, as in the maine Ocean. At night wee anchored within two leagues of the two outermost Ilands of Tecu in thirtie fathomes, the Ilands bearing North and by East, and the Homocks North Easterly.

Note, the Homockes doe stand some three leagues to the Northward of the Ilands of Tecu, there being in all three of them, but the Northermost of the three Homockes doth not shew it selfe so perfectly, as the other doe.

Variation of Tecu is 4. degr. 40. minutes Northeasterly.

The seuenth of August in the morning, weighed and plyed in, the wind at the North North-east of the land we see a shoale, bearing from the two offermost Ilands of Tecu South-west & by South foure or five miles off, right in the faire way. We sent our Boat to it and found it but two fathome & a halfe, being a Rocke of two Cables length long. This is the vnluckey Rocke whereon the Princely Trade receiued her destruction, as we vnderstand by those people. About eleuen of the clocke we anchored on the Easter-tide of the vttermost Iland in nine fathome, soft, Ozie, praysed be God. Riding vnder this outward Iland of the three we saw a breach, bearing South halfe Easterly, and another South and by East some three or foure leagues off, which breach as you come for this place, you must leaue betwixt you and the shoare: wherefore keepe this outer Iland North and by East, or North North-east, and feare nothing. But beware when you come within two leagues of this Iland. For South-west and by South two leagues or five miles off lyes the Rocke whereon the vnhappie Trade grounded. Wherefore keepe this Iland North and by East, and vpon life feare not, your depth as you come neere the Iland will bee from thirtie to ten, nine and eight fathomes soft, Ozie, you shall haue nine fathomes within your ships length of either side of the Iland.

A ledge of Rockes. The Rocke whereon the Trades-Increase was bruised.

The ninth day, some people came aboard: we find them very base and subtle.

The eleuenth day, the Hozlander departed for Priaman, to shew them likewise that wee haue brought the Kings Letter of Achen, without the which you cannot trade. Note, that as wee ride here vpon the Poope, we see the foure Ilands of Priaman bearing South-east and by South some seuen leagues off.

This day at nine of the clocke wee sailed into the inner Roade, which is betwixt the Mayne and the innermost Iland, halfe a mile from the Mayne, and a Cables length from the Iland, your depth foure fathome soft, Ozie, our depth in was twentie two foot beeing halfe tyde, it highes and fells some five or sixe foot water, the tyde, as I perceiue, runnes twelue houres North North-west, and twelue houres contrarie. To the North-ward of all the Ilands in comming in you shall haue foure fathomes and an halfe: but keepe neere the inner Iland, for from the Mayne on that side lyes a shoald. The Ilands are all of one bignesse, being halfe a mile a piece in circuit, they will beare from the South-west and by South to the North-west: your best water is on the Ilands: digge a Well, and presently water comes. Thus much out of Master Boner; the rest you haue before in Captaine Best.

Extracts of a Tractate, written by NICHOLAS WHITHINGTON, which was left in the Mogols Countrey by Captaine BEST, a Factor, those the baser, and (as the one affirmed to him) were slaves, the others marked with this note of Genric.

He eleuenth of Aprill, 1612. we crossed the Equinoctiall: foule weather eight daies together, wind and raine. Soldania sheepe are hairy: the Beeres large, and most leane; the people Negros, woolly pates, flat nosed, very straight of body: the men haue but one stone a peece; the other is cut out when they are yong: apparelled with a skin about their shoulders, which reacheth downe to the waste, the skin of a Ratte before their members, another on their bumme, else naked: some cappes of leather close to their pates, and shoes to their feet, much broader and longer then their feet: their armes very small: Lances with heads artificially made: Bowes and Arrowes of little or no force: they are very expert in throwing their Darts, wherewith they kill many fish in the Sea: they weare about their neckes guts of sheepe and oxen, smelling, which being hungry they eate; and would scramble for our garbage like dogges, and eate it raw and foule.

The six and twentieth of Iuly, they had sight of Saint Lawrence. The thirteenth of August, crossed the Equinoctiall, temperate weather: on the thirtieth, they saw Snakes in the Sea in eightene degrees and a halfe, one and thirtie min. white water at nineteene fathoms. The first of September, they saw land. The second, anchor against Daman Towne, inhabited and conquered by Portugalls. The Fluxe infested them all that remained on land at Surat. Master Aldworth was sicke forty dayes. Strangers heere present any Inhabitants of fashion whom he visits; and they returne presents. Notwithstanding Sir Henry Middleton taking their ships in the Red-Sea, yet they promised vs good dealing, considering else they must burne their ships (said Mill Jessed, one of the chiefe Merchants of Surat) and giue ouer their trade by Sea. Impossible it was to haue any trade at Surat, by reason of Portugall Frigats in the Riuer's mouth. Therefore the Generall repaired with his ships to Swally, whence he might by land go and come without danger.

Master Canning
sent to Agra.

The third of October, Sheke Shuffe, Gouverneur of Amaduanar, chiefe Citie of Guzerat, came to Surat, and so to Swally, and agreed vpon Articles. Master Canning had been taken by the Portugals, but the Vice-Roy commanded to set him ashore at Surat, saying, Let him goe helpe his Country-men to fight, and then we will take their ship, and the rest of them altogether. But the Parfer made an escape, and so came to vs on land: Master Canning was set on shoare at Surat, according to promise, and so went aboard. And the same day, being the twentieth ninth of October, the foure Portugall Gallions, with a whole Fleet of Frigats, came in sight. The Generall, after words of encouragement, met them, and neuer shot one shot, till hee came betweene their Admirall and Vice-Admirall, gaue each a broad side, and a volly of small shot, which made them come no more neare for that day. The other two ships were not as yet come vp; and the Hosiander could not get cleare of her anchors, and shot not one shot that day. In the euening all came to an anchor in sight of other; and the next morning renewed their fight: the Hosiander brauely redeemed the former dayes doing nothing: the Dragon droue three of them on ground, and the Hosiander daunced the Hay about them, so that they durst not shew a man vpon the Hatches. In the after-noone they got ashore with the flood, and fought till night; then anchored, and lay still the next day.

The next day after, the Dragon drawing much water, and the Bay shallow, remooued to the other side of the Bay, rode at Mendafrobay, where all that time Sarder Cham, a great Noble-man of the Mogolls, with two thousand Horle, was besieging a Castle of the Raz-booches (which were before the Mogolls Conquest, the Nobles of that countrey now liuing by robbery). He presented our Generall with a horse and furniture, which he againe gaue to the Gouverneur of Goga, a Port Towne to the West of Surat. After ten dayes stay heere, the Portugalls hauing refreshed, came thither to our ships. Sarder Cham counselled to flee: but the Generall chased the Portugals in foure houres, driving them out of sight, before thousands of the countrey people, Sarder Cham relating this to the King (after the Castle razed) to his admiration, which thought none like the Portugalls at sea. The seuen and twentieth of December, they returned to Swally, hauing lost three Saylers, and one mans arme shot off: Portugals confesse of theirs an hundred and sixtie, some report three hundred and odde.

The thirteenth of January, I was entertained Factor, and bound to the Company in foure hundred pound. The ship departed the eighteenth of January, the Gallions neuer offering one shot. Anthony Starkey was sent for England. Master Canning was seuentie dayes on the way betweene Surat and Agra, with many troubles, set on by the enemy, who shot him into the belly with an Arrow, and another English man thorow the arme, and killed and hurt many of his Pi-ons. He was cured before his arriual at Agra. Two of his English fell out with him and returned, leauing two Mulicians onely to attend him. The ninth of Aprill he arriued: the tenth present the King with our Kings Letter, and a Present of little value. He asked if our King sent that present : who answered, it was sent by the Merchants. The King graced him with a cup of wine from his owne hands, and referred him to Moracke Chan. One of the Musicians dyed, and was buried in the Portugalls Church-yard, whom they tooke vp, and buried in the high-way : but vpon complaint, were compelled by the King to bury him there againe, threatening to turne them all out of his Countrey, and their buried bodies out of their Church-yard,

After this Master Canning wrote of the feare hee was in to be poysoned by the Iesuits, and therefore desired that I might come vp to assist him ; which amongst vs at Surat was concluded. The nine and twentieth of May, 1613. he dyed : and so Master Kerridge went the two and twentieth of Iune. I should haue been sent by the way of Mocha to England, but the Master of the ship which went, said it was impossible, except I were circumcised, to come neare Mecca.

Master Canning
the Iesuits.

The thirteenth of October, 1613. the ship returned, and our Messenger taken, notwithstanding their late passe at the Barre of Surat, by the Portugalls Armada of Frigats, worth an hundred thousand pound, with seuen hundred persons going to Goa. This is like to be their ouerthrow heere, for no Portugall might passe without a suretie, nor in, nor out. Merchants of Surat are by this meanes impouerished, and our goods left in our hands : with which we went to Amadabar. John Alkin which had runne from Sir Henry Middleton to the Portugalls, came now to vs, told vs of diuers their Townes besieged by the Decanes, and other neighbouring *Moore*s : in so much that they were faine to send away many hundreths of Banians, and many others that dwelt amongst them, for want of victuals : three Barks of which came to Surat, and diuers others to Cambaya. Their weaknesse in fight with vs caused all this. Robert Claxon of the Dragon, fled to Portugall for feare of punishment, and came to vs with an Almayne, which had been slaue in Turkie. Robert Johnson came to the Portugals, and thence intending to vs, passing thorow the Decanes Countrey, was perswaded by another English man, which was turned Moore, and liued there : and was circumcised, and receiued seuen shillings six pence a day of the King and his diet at the Kings table : But eight dayes after his Circumcision he died. Robert Trully, the Musician in Agra, not agreeing with Master Kerridge, went to the King of Decan, and carrying with him a German for interpreter, offered both to turne *Moore*s. Trully had in his Circumcision a new name giuen, with great allowance from the King, with whom he continues. But the German formerly cut in Persia, now thought to deceiue the Decan, but was not entertained : he returned to Agra, and serueth a French man, and goeth to Masse againe. Robert Claxon also turned Moore, at the Decan Court had good allowance : but not content, came to Surat, and prouoked pitie with seeming penitence, but getting some fortie and odde pounds, vnder pretence of buying commons, gaue them the slip, and returned whence he came. So there are foure English with the Decan, and diuers *Portugal Moore*s.

Portugal perils.

Fugitiues and Rencgado's.

The seuen and twentieth of October, 1613. we receiued letters from Mesulopatan of Master Gurney, written by Captaine Marlo of the James, of their arrivall and trade. From Surat I went to Periano three Course : to Cosumbay a little Village 10 c. Baroch 10 c. a prettie Citie on a high hill, compassed with a wall, a great Riuer running by, as broad as Thames ; diuers shippes of two hundred tunnes and odde there riding : best Calicoes in the Kingdome, store of Cotton : to Saringa 10 c. to Carron 10 c. to Boldia a lesse Citie then Baroch, but faire built, a strong wall, and three thousand horse vnder Mussuff Chan : to Wassach a Riuer 10 c. where Mussuff was ready to fight with the Razbooches or Radgepoots that lay on the other side the Riuer : the chiefe of these of the race of the old Kings of Surat : to Niriand 14 c. a great Towne where they make Indico. To Amadabar 10 c. chiefe City of Guzerat, neare as great as London, walled with a strong wall, situate in the Plain by the Riuer side, store of Merchants *Moore*s, Christians, Heathens : Commodities are Indicoes, Cloath of gold, siluer Tissue, Veluets (not comparable to ours) Tassataes, Gumbuck, coloured Bassataes, Drugges, &c. Abdalachon Gouvernor, a man of five thousand horse pay. I went from thence to Cambaya, seuen course to Barengeo, where euery Tuesday the Casily of Cambaya meete, and so keepe company for feare of theeuers. Hence sixteene course to Soquatera, a fine Towne well manned with souldiers. Departed at midnight, and about eight of the clocke next morning came 10 c. to Cambaya.

A Course is a mile and halfe
English.

In Nouember, we rode to Serkeffe, three course from Amadabar, where are the Sepulchres of the Kings of Guzerat, a very delicate Church and faire Tombes, which are kept very comely, much resort to visite them from all parts of the Kingdome : a course off is a pleasant House, with a Garden a mile about, by the Riuers side, which Chou Chin Naw, the greatest of the Mogoll Nobilitie, built in memoriall of the great victory which he got of the last King of Guzerat, whom he tooke prisoner, and subiected his Kingdome, the battell being fought in this place. No man dwells in this house, but a few poore men keepe the Orchard. We lodged one night in it, and sent for six Fisher-men, who in halfe an houre tooke vs more fish then all our company could eat.

The eight and twentieth of Nouember, we had newes at Amadabar of three English shippes arriued at Lowribander, the Port Towne of Gutu Negar Tutta, chiefe Citie of Sinda. A French Iesuit at Amadabar made poore, by the Portugals imbarquement, begged of our Agent, who gaue him ten Rupias. I was sent thither, and the thirteenth of December came to Cassampara, where where I ouertooke a Caphilo, traueiling to Radenpare, six dayes journey on my way, fourteene to Callatalowny, a faire Castle: thirteene 7 c. to Callwalla, a pretty Village, which Ecbar gaue to a company of women, and their posterity for euer, to bring vp their children in dancing, &c. they did this in our Carauan, euery man giuing them somewhat; and then they openly asked if any wanted a bed-fellow. The sixteenth 8 c. to Carrya, where is a well manned Fortresse: and the eighteenth (till which, for feare of theeues, wee stayed for another Carauan) to Deccanaura, our Camell itolne, and a man slaine. The nineteenth 10 c. to Bolodo, a Fort kept by Newlock Abram Cabrate, for the Mogoll, who that day came with an hundred sixtie nine heads of the Coolies (a robbing people.) The twentieth 13 c. to Sariandgo, a Fort. The one and twentieth 10 c. to Radempooore, a bigge Towne with a Fort. Heere we stayed to prouide vs of water and necessa- 10 ries for our desert journey: and the three and twentieth trauelled 7 c. and lay in the fields, met a Carauan robbed of all from Tutta. The foure and twentieth 12 c. dispeeded one of my Pions to Lowribander with a Letter, which promised to doe it in ten dayes; but I thinke was slaine. The five and twentieth 14 c. lodged by a well of water so salt, that our cattell could not drinke it. The six and twentieth 10 c. to such another well, there gaue our Camells water, not hauing drunke in three dayes.

The seuen and twentieth, 14 c. lodged in fields. The eight and twentieth, 10 c. to a Village called Negar Parkar. In this desert we saw great store of wild Asles, red Deere, Foxes, and other wild beasts. The nine and twentieth, we staid and met with an other Carauan, robbed within two dayes journey of Tutta. The thirtieth, we departed from Parkar, which payes a yearly tri- 20 bute to the Mogol: all hence till Inno, halfe a dayes journey from Tutta, acknowledge no King, but rob and spare at pleasure. When any army of the Mogols comes against them, they fire their houses, and flee into the Mountaines: their houses are made of straw and mortar like Bee-hiues, soone rebuilded. They take for custome what they please, and guard Passengers, being loath any but themselves should haue the robbing of them. We trauelled 6 c. and lay by a Tanke or Pond of fresh water. The thirty one 8 c. and lay in the fields by a brackish Well.

The first of Ianuary, we went 10 c. to Burdiano, many were sicke of this water, we prouided vs yet of it for foure dayes, and trauelled more the second 18 c. all night. The third in the afternoone till midnight 10 c. the fourth 12 c. Here I fell sicke, and vomited by reason of the water. The fifth 7 c. and came to three Wells, two salt, one sweetish. The sixth, to Nuraquimire a pretie 30
Towne 10 c. Here our Raddingpoore company left vs. We remained, two Merchants, my selfe, five of their seruants, foure of mine, with tenne Camels, five Camel-men. This Towne is within three dayes of Tutta, and seemed to vs after our Desert a Paradise. We agreed with one of the Ragies or Gouvernours kinred for twenty Laries (twenty shillings) to conduct vs, who departed with vs the eighth, and we trauelled 10 c. to Gundaiaw, where we had beene robbed but for our guard. The ninth, we were twice set on, and forced to giue each time five Laries: wee came to Sarruna, a great Towne of the Razbootches, with a Castle, whence it is 14 c. to Tutta. We visited the Gouvernour Ragee Bouma, eldest sonne to Sultan Bulbul (who lately captiued by the Mogol, had his eyes pulled out, and two Moneths before this had escaped) now liuing in the Mountains, and causeth all his kinred to reuenge. This Ragee was kind to me as a stranger, asking many que- 40 stions of our Countrey, made me sup with him, gaue me Wine till he was itared. A Banian here told me, how Sir Robert Sherley had been much abused by the Portugals, and Gouvernour at Lowribander, his house fired, men hurt in the night: and arriuing at Tutta thirteene daies iourney thence, Mersa Rusto vsed him vnkindly. He aduised to get this Ragee to guide vs, told of the great trade of Tutta, the chiefe that he had seene, and that a shippe of three hundred Tunne might come to Lowribander.

We hired the Ragee for fortie Laries with fifty horsemen to the gates of Tutta: and on the eleuenth departed from Sarruna 5 c. and lay by a Riuer side. At two in the morning we departed, and he lead vs a contrary way, and came about breake of day into a Thicket, where he made vs vnload, then caused vs to be bound, and tooke our weapons from vs, sudainly hanged the Mer- 50 chants and their five men, with their Camels ropes fastened about their neckes with a Truncheon; stripped and threw them into a hole they made in the earth. He tooke from me my horse, and eightie Rupias, sent me and my men 20 c. vp the Mountaines to his brothers, Ianuary the foureteenth, where I continued two and twentie dayes shut vp. February the seuenth, order came to send me to Parkar to the Gouvernour of their kinred, to send me to Radingpoore. But I was robbed by them in the way of all my clothes, and all I had. February the twenty eighth, we begged for our victualls, finding the inhabitants charitable: for my horse (which not beeing worth the taking, they left me) I could get but foure Mamoodies, or foure shillings: but chancing on a Banian of Amadabar whom I had knowne, I was releued with my men. Wee were five dayes between Parkar and Raddingpoore, whither I came March nineteenth. I came to Amadabar, April 60 the second, being absent one hundred and eleuen dayes. Thence I went to Brodia, Barengeo thence 16 c. to Soquitera, 10. to Cambaya: then the large Riuer 7. course broad, yeerly swallowing many hundreds to Sauran. On the other side the Riuer is a Towne and Castle of the Razbootches. The sixteenth of Aprill, I trauelled 25 c. to Borocho: the seuenteenth, passed that Riuer, and 10 c. to Cassimba: the eighteenth, 13 c. to Surat. Con-

Concerning Sinda, no Citie is by generall report of greater trade in the Indies then Tutta, the chiefe Port Lowribander, three dayes iourney from it; a faire roade without the Riuer's mouth, cleare of Wormes, which about Surat especially, and in other places of the Indies, after three or foure Moneths riding (if it were not for sheathing) would hinder returne. The Ports and Roads of Sinda are free. In two Moneths from hence by water they goe to Laheer, and returne in one downe. There are these Commodities, Bassitas, Stuffles, Lawnes, Indico course, not so good as Biana. Goods may be conueied from Agra on Camels to Bucker twenty dayes, which is on Sinda Riuer, thence in fiftene or sixtene dayes aboard the ships. One may goe as soone from Agra to Sinda as Surat, but there is more theeuing, which the Mogoll seekes to preuent.

10 Inhabitants of Sinda are most Razbootches, Banians, and Boloches: in Cities and great Townes, Razbootches, the Gouernours are Mogols. The Countrey people are rude, naked from the waist vpwards, with Turbants contrary to the Mogoll fashion. Their Armes, Sword, Buckler, and Lance; their Buckler great, in fashion of a Bee-hiue, in which they will giue their Camels drinke, and Horses prouender, their horses good, swift, strong, which they ride vnshod, most desperately. They back them at twelue Moneths old. The Mogoll sayes, the Razbootch knowes as well to die as any in the world. They eate no Beefe nor Buttol, but pray to them.

The Banians kill nothing: there are thirtie and odde seuerall Casts of these that differ something in Religion, and may not eat with each other; but all burne their dead. When the husband dies, the wife shaueth her head, and weares her iewels no more, so continuing till death. When 20 the Rasbut dies, his wife accompanies his bodie going to be burned, in her best array, accompanied with her friends and kinred, and Musique, and the fire beeing made at the place appointed, compasseth the same twice or thrice, bewailing first her husbands death, and then reioicing that she shall now liue with him againe, after which, embracing her friends, she lastly sits downe on the top of the pile, and dry sticks, taking her husbands head in her lap, and bids them put fire, which done, her friends throw oile and other sweete perfumes on her, she enduring the fire with admirable patience, loose and not bound. I haue seene many, the first in Surat, the woman but 30 tenne yeeres old, and a Virgin, he a Souldiour slaine in warre, from whence his cloathes and Turbant were brought home. She would needs burne with his cloathes; the Gouernour forbad her, which she tooke grieuously, bidding them put to fire presently, her husband was a great way before: which they durst not, till her kinred intreated, with a Present giuen; the Gouernours licence, to her exceeding ioy. The husbands kinred neuer force this, but the womans holding it a disgrace else to their family. They may choose, (but few doe) but then must shaueth their haire, and breake their iewels, and thenceforth are not suffered to eat, drinke, sleepe, or company with any body, and so continue till death. If after purpose to burne they leape out of the fire, her father and mother will bind her, and throw her in, and burne her perforce. But this weakenesse is seldom.

The Boloches are of Mahomets Religion. They deale much in Camels; most of them robbers Boloches, by land, and on the Riuer, murdering such as they rob. When I was in Sinda, they tooke a boat with seuen Italians, one Portugall Friar, the rest slaine in fight, this was ripped by them for 40 Gold. There are very honest of them in Guzerate, and about Agra.

Banian marriages are made at the age of three yeeres, and vnder; sometimes they make mutual promise if two pregnant women prooue to haue one a male, the other a female. But alwayes 50 one of their owne cast and religion, and of the same trade, as a Barbar, &c. When they be three or foure yeere old, they make a great Feast, set the two thus espoused on horsebacke (a man behind each to hold them) in their best clothes, accompanied with the Bramens or Priests, and many others according to their state, and so lead them vp and downe the Citie where they dwell, and then to the Pagod or Church: and after Ceremonies there done, come home, continue certain dayes feasting, as they are able. Being tenne yeeres old they lie together, of which they giue this reason, not to leaue them wiuelesse, if their Parents die and leaue them Parentlesse. Their Bramens 60 keepe their Pagods, and haue Almes or Tithes, esteemed maruellous holy, married and follow occupations, good workemen, apt to learne any patterne. They eate but once a day, and wash before and after meat all their bodies, as also after vrine or stoole.

John Mildall * an Englishman had bene employed with three English young men, which hee poisoned in Persia, to make himselfe Master of the goods, but he was likewise poysoned, yet by 60 preseruatiues liued many Moneths after, but swelled exceedingly, and so came to Agra, with the value of twenty thousand dollers: thither therefore I went, May the fourth, 1614. from Surat: came to Bramport, where Sultan Perues lies, situate in a plaine, the Riuer of Surat running by in a great breadth, hauing a large Castle. Hence to Agra twenty sixe dayes, betweene Surat and Agra are seuen hundred courses, 1010. English miles, which I trauelled in seuen and thirty daies in Winter, wherein it almost continually raineth. From Surat to Bramport is a pleasant and champion Countrey, full of Riuers, Brookes, and Springs. Betweene Bramport and Agra, very Mountainous, not passable for a Coach, hardly for Camels; by Mando is the nearest way: there are high hills and strong Castles in the way many, Townes and Cities euery dayes iourney, well inhabited, the Countrey peaceable, and cleare of theeuers.

Iesuites.

The Iesuites haue a very faire Church built by the King, and a house: the King allowes the chiefe seuen Rupias a day, and the rest three, with licence to conuert as many as they can: which they doe, but alas, it is for moneys sake. For when by the fact of the Portugalls, they were debarred of their pay, their new conuerts brought them their beads againe, saying, they had beene long without their pay, and therefore would be Christians no longer. The Portugals not deliuering the goods taken in Surat, the King caused the Church-doores to bee locked vp, as they haue continued euer since: so the Padres make a Church of one of their Chambers, where they say Masse twice a day, and preach euery Sunday in Persian, first to the Armenians and Moors, after in Portuguese, for themselves, the Italians and Greeks. These told me the particulars of Mildnals goods, who gaue all to a French Protestant, himselfe a Papist, which he denying, was put in prison. After foure Moneths all were deliuered.

The second of March, 1614, tenne Gallions, two Gallies, sixtie Frigats fight.

Pilgrimage.

Betweene Agminere and Agra euery tenne course (which is an ordinarie dayes iourney) a Serailia, or place of lodging for man and horse, and Hostesses to dresse your victuall, if you please, paying a matter of three pence for both horse and meat dressing. Betweene these places (120 c.) at euery course end is a great pillar erected, and at euery tenne course a faire house built by Echar, when he went on Pilgrimage from Agra to Aggimere on foot, saying his prayers at euery course end. These houses serue the King and his women, none else. This King lies in Agimere, vpon occasion of warres with Rabna & Razboch, who hath now done homage, and peace is betweene them.

Ganges.

I rode to the Riuer Ganges, two dayes from Agra. The Banians carry the water of Ganges many hundred miles thence, and as they affirme, it will neuer stinke, though kept neuer so long. By Agra runnes a large riuer Geminie. Agra is a huge Towne, the wall two course in compasse, fairest and highest that euer I saw, well replenished with Ordnance: the rest (except Noble-mens houses, faire seated by the riuer) ruinous. The annient royall seat was Fatipoore (twelue course from Agra) now decayed. Betweene these two, the Sepulchre of the Kings Father, to which is none that euer I saw to be compared. And yet the Church of Fatipoore comes neere it, builded by Geometry as is the other.

Agra.

The foure and twentieth of May, 1616. we in our returne entred the Bay of Soldania, where were diuers English ships outward bound, the Charles, Vnicorne, James, Globe, Swan, the Generall was Beniamin Ioseph.

The fifteenth of September, we arrived at Douer.

CHAP. IX.

The eleuenth Voyage to the East-India in the Salomon, begunne in the yeere of our Lord 1611. after the account of the Church of England, and ended in the yeere 1613. Written by RALPH WILSON, one of the Mates in the said ship.

He first of February 1611. we set saile from Grauesend, being foure ships, the Dragon, the James, the Salomon, and the Hosiander; being counted as three seuerall Voyages: the James the ninth; the Dragon and Hosiander the tenth; and wee in the Salomon the eleuenth. The reason was, because we were directed to seuerall parts of the East-India.

In our course betweene the Iles of the Canaries, and the Iles of Capo Verde, we must steere a more Westerly course, then that which the Plats lay downe, without they be Portugall Plats; which lay it a quarter of a point more then the truth is.

A new Island discovered in 19. degrees
34. minutes
Southerly.
Santa Maria
d'agosta.

The seuen and twentieth of Aprill, we in Salomon descried an Island in the South latitude of nineteene degrees, foure and thirty minutes, and it bare from vs, South-east one third part Southerly, fifteene leagues off. This Ile is a place, which in my opinion yeeldeth water, and fish in great abundance: the Sea-fowle were so many, that our people in the galleries of our ship might strike them downe, they were so tame. To the Eastward of this Ile lye two Ilands more, the one about the bignesse of the first, the other a great Ile. By these Iles we found a Current, which setteth to the Northward.

The eight and twentieth of Iune, we departed from Soldanha. I would aduise them which go forth of Soldanha Bay, with the wind at East, or South-east, to get off some pretie distance from the land, before they hale vp to the Southward: for if they doe otherwise, the high land will take their wind from them. And if a man should be becalmed, he should very much be troubled: for most commonly thereabout you shall meete a mightie Westerne Sea. Secondly, the streame setteth setteth to the shoare-ward, if the wind haue been at the North North-west, West or South-west. And thirdly, the shoare is neald to; so that a man cannot anchor.

The sixt of October, wee met a great Current setting to the Northwards, when wee were October 6. within one degree of the Equinoctiall.

The twelfth, wee met with a great deale of rubbish, as Canes, Sties, and many other things, which vsually are on the shoare about Sumatra.

The sixteenth, draue by our ship rubbish, as Rock-weeds, Canes, branches of trees, the huskes of Coco Nuts, and such like.

The seuenteenth at noone, draue by vs a bed of rubbish, which was at least two miles long: 10 it lay North North-west, and South South-east, and draue off West South-west.

The eighteenth in the morning, we descried land, which lyeth by Celeber in the Ile of SUMATRA, which Towne of Celeber standeth about three degrees of Southerly latitude.

They discerie
Sumatra, Ilabat
or Celeber.

The seuen and twentieth, wee had a Current setting to the Southward. The nine and twentieth, the salt hill, or Ile bare East North-east sixteene or eightene leagues from vs.

The first of Nouember, at six of the clocke at night, we were shot within the salt Ile.

Nouember 1.

The second at noone, comming betweene the Land of Iaua and a ragged Ile, which lyeth to the Westward of the point of Palymbam, we met a great tide running out so fast, that we could scarce stemme it with a Riffe gale of wind. And afterward the wind slaked, so we chopped to an anchor, and then I found that tide to runne three leagues and an halfe in a watch. Heere I haue 20 noted, that the tide or streame keepeth no course, but in the day time setteth out, and in the night time in. This day at noone, the point of Palymbam bare North-east by East three leagues off vs. From thence to the Road of Bantam is fve leagues; South South-east one third part Easterly: So the longitude of Bantam is an hundred fortie fve degrees, two minutes. The latitude six degrees, ten minutes. The variation three degrees. This longitude of an hundred fortie fve degrees, and two minutes, is somewhat to Easterly for the Road of Bantam. But for the first falling with the land, for an hundred fortie foure degrees is the truest longitude for Bantam from the Island of Flores.

The eighteenth, nine sailes of Hollanders came into the Road, and the other two, which went out the day before, came with them to Pulo Panian: they had refreshed themselves at the Iles 30 Mascarenhas, which stand in one and twentieth degrees and an halfe of South latitude. Of which place they gaue singular commendations for great plentie of refreshing which they found there.

Excellent refreshing at the Ile Do Masca-
renhas.

The seuen of March, at fve of the clocke in the afternoone, in the latitude of twentieth degrees, foure and thirtie minutes, we descried land, which bare North-east, halfe a point Northerly, nine leagues off: the South-east part is somewhat high, but falleth downe with a low point; the Wester part is not very high, but flat and smoth towards the end of it, and falleth right downe. This Ile is very full of shoalds and broken ground, the Souther and Wester parts: for we discovered neither of the other sides. By all likelihood it seemeth to haue good refreshing on it: the longitude of this Ile is an hundred and foure degrees from Flores, but by my computation an hundred and seuen degrees; but in these courses we rely not altogether on our reckonings, vsing as much diligence for the finding out the true longitude, as possibly wee may, it being a maine point to giue vs light to other helps. 40

March 7.

An Ile discouered in twen-tie degrees, foure and thir-
tie minutes.

The tenth, we had sight of the Land of Diego Roiz. The fourteenth in the morning, wee descried land, which was part of the Ile Do Cyrne, which the Hollanders call the Ile of Mauritius. There is an Island that lyeth from the maine Ile foure leagues off; and two other small Iles ten leagues off. We sounded a league and a halfe off, but found no ground at fortie fathoms. When you are thwart of the Road, the hill with three pikes will beare South-east.

The Island of Diego Roiz, The Ile of Cyrne, or Mau- ritius.

The sixteenth, at six of the clocke in the morning, we descried the Ile Do Mascarenhas. There is a breach which lyeth foure miles off, and lyeth three leagues long; and heere is very good refreshing. The Ile Mauritius hath longitude ninetie nine degrees, latitude twentieth degr. fifteen minutes. The Ile Do Mascarenhas hath longitude ninetie seuen degrees, and latitude one and twentieth degrees, no minutes. 50

renhas.

The second of Aprill, 1613, about seuen of the clocke it began to lighten, continuing with such mightie great flashes, as I neuer saw the like, vntill eleuen, and then it began to raine, or powre downe mightily, and on a sudden became flat and calme: and in lesse then a quarter of an houre, a hard gale at South-west, blowing for the time, which was not long, as much as it did before, at North-east. By these two contrary winds the sea grew so exceeding loftie, that our ship stricke into the sea abaft, as if the galleries would haue flowne off. About twelue of the clock the wind veered to the South, and on a sudden vp at the North-east againe. Our sailes were split, so as we held till morning.

Aprill 2. 1613.

Their comming to Saint Augustine, Mohelia, and diuers parts of Arabia.

He seuenth of Ianuarie we set saile from Gransend for the East-India, in the good ship, the Expedition of London, being about the burthen of two hundred and fixtie tunnes: which carryeth in her fiftie sixe persons, besides the Persian Ambassadour and his followers, who aue in number fiftene, which we had order to receiue into our ship, to be transported into the Kingdome of Persia, at the costs and charges of the Worlhipfull Company afore said. The names of the Ambassadour, and his people, are these. Sir Robert Sherley, the Ambassadour. Teresha, his Ladie, a Circasian. Sir Thomas Powell. Tomasin his Ladie. Leylye, a Persian Woman. Morgan Powell, Gentleman. Captaine John Ward. Francis Bubb, Secretarie. John Barbar, Apothecarie. John Herriot, Musitioner. John Georgson, Goldsmith and Hollander. Gabriel, an olde Armenian. Nazerbege, Scanderbege, Molhier, all Persians.

Connie Iland.

The sixe and twentieth of Aprill, 1613. in the morning, wee fell with a part of the land of Ethiopia, whereunto, close adioyning, is an Iland of small compasse, called Connie Iland, beeing a very low land, and inuironed about with many dangerous Rockes, to Sea-ward: and standeth in the latitude of thirtie three degrees, and thirtie minutes. The wind taking vs short, we were inforced to come to an anchor betwixt this Iland and the Maine: where wee had very good ground in nineteen or twentie fathom water. Here we sent our Schiffe ashore to the Iland, where we found Penguins, wild Geese, and other Fowles, & Seale-fishes in great abundance, whereof we tooke for our refreshing, as much as we would. By a carued boord, wee perceiued the Hollanders had beene there, who made great store of the traine Oyle of the Seales, as it should seeme, for their necessary spending, outward bound. They left their Implements wherewith they wrought, and a great Copper Caldron, standing vpon a Furnace, full of traine: all which wee left as wee found. Thus hauing spent two dayes at an anchor, and the wind fauouring vs to proceed, we set saile from hence for Caput Bona Spei.

The Bay of Saldanha.

The thirtieth day, by Gods grace, we arriued at Saldanha, where wee found riding at an anchor sixe ships, whereof two English, namely, the Hector and the Thomas, the other foure were Hollanders: all bound homeward. Here we watered and refreshed our selues very well, with reasonable store of that Countrey sheepe, and Bullockes, which we bought; and fresh fish which we caught with our Sayne.

Cape do Arceife.
Variation fixe
deg. nine min.

The tenth of May, 1613. the Pepper-corne arriued heere at Saldanha, also bound homewards. Shee hauing beene long out, was not very well fitted with necessaries, which wee supplied out of our small store, so much as we could spare: who also dispatched and was readie to set saile with the first faire wind, which was, on the fifteenth of May, from whence we set saile all together, out of the Bay, taking our leaue each of other, according to the common fashion of the Sea, directing our course for Saint Augustine. And in our way we had sight of Cape do Arceife, being part of the mayne land of Ethiopia; and standeth in the latitude of thirtie three degrees twentie five minutes, the Compasse varying there fixe degrees and nine minutes, which was on the foure and twentieth of this present.

The fifteenth of Iune, we had sight of Saint Laurence Iland, and on the seuenteenth day, we came came to an anchor, by Port Augustine of purpose, to search the sounding and way into the Bay, Port de S. Augustino. before we entred; because there was none in our ship well acquainted therewith. Which being done, wee entred and came to an anchor, on the eighteenth day in ten fathome water: but our ship rode in fortie fathomes. Heere we had wood and water, and great abundance of fresh fish, which we tooke with our Sayne, sufficient to haue satisfied halfe a doozen ships men; if they had bene there. But for flesh, we could get none of the Countrey people, they being as it seemed, fearefull of vs, who came to vs once, and promised to bring vs Cattell, the next day in the morning: which, I thinke, was rather in policie to carrie away their Cattell, wherein they employed themselues in the meane time, for they neuer returned to vs againe. We marched 10 vp into the Woods, with about fortie shot, to see if we would haue met with any of them, to buy some of their Cattell: but wee found none but emptie houses made of Canes, where wee perceived that people had bene not long before, by the fires which were yet burning, and scales of fish which had bene broyled thereon. Also we perceived the footing, and tracing of many Cattell, which had bene there not long before: so wee returned emptie as wee came. This Port Augustine, standeth in the latitude of twentie three degrees and thirtie minutes. The variation of the Compasse is fiftene degrees fortie minutes.

Houses made of Canes.

Fiftene deg. 40. minutes variation.

The entrance into this Port resembleth Dartmouth, and to goe in there, you must bring that which is called Westminster-Hall, being not vnlike, North-east by East off you, and so steere in due East, borrowing a little to the South-side of the Bay, where you shall haue sounding thir-20 teene, nine, eight, and seuen fathomes water, good ground, till you bee shut within the shoale: and then you haue deepe water, vntill you come to the Road, and then you haue seuen, eight, and ten fathomes water. But if you goe in too farre behind the hill on your larboord side (which resembleth an old Barne) then you shall haue thirtie fve or fortie fathomes. From hence wee set saile, on the three and twentieth of this present, directing our course for the Iland of Mohelia.

The third of Iuly 1613. we had sight of an Iland called Iuan, being to the East-ward of Mohelia some nine or ten leagues, and beareth from it East and by South. Also this day we came to an anchor at Mohelia, betwixt broken land (which lyeth on the Souther side) and the Iland. Here we had great store of refreshing and very cheape, for we bought fve Bullockes in trucke of 30 one Leuant Sword: also we bought Goates, Hennes, Pines, Cocker Nuts, Plantanes, Oranges, Limons, and Limes, for Trifles or little Money. One Riall of Plate we paid for a Bullocke, or else ten pieces of foure pence halfe-penie, and so we bought about fortie one head of Cattle, besides other refreshing aforesaid.

Mohelia Iland
 neere vnto Comora.
 Great store of refreshing.

The fifth, the Inhabitants of this Iland, are chiefly *Moore*s: but there are Arabians, Turkes and other Nations amongst them, and are in Warre with the people of Iuan, and Comora Ilands neere adioyning. They told vs that the King of Mohelia dyed the same day, that we came into the Roade: and Phanobomale his sonne succeeded in his place, being as yet but of tender yeeres, was to raigne vnder protection of his Mother Queene. His Brother-in-law came downe (as 40 chiefe man accompanied with diuers other men of sort) to speake with vs, who bad vs very kindly welcome. Both he and many other of the same Iland do speake reasonable good Portuguse Language, by reason whereof I had great conference with them, and was resolved in any thing I demanded.

The largenesse of the Portugale Tongue.

They build Barkes vpon this Iland, and trade with them, alongst the Coast of Melinde, and Arabia, with slaues and fruits, whereby they furnish themselues with Royals of Plate, and other necessaries. Also I thinke, they haue some Trade with the Portugals, but they will not bee a knowne thereof, because we should not suspect any treacherous dealings amongst them. They told vs, that we were very welcome, and that the whole Iland was at our command: but if we had bene Portugals, they told mee, that they would haue put vs all euery man to the Sword. But howsoeuer, I hold it not good to repose too much confidence in them. The Kings Brother 50 shewed me a Letter of commendations of the place, left there by an Hollander, which was written in Dutch: and withall desired vs to leaue another to the same effect, thereby to specifie their honest and kind dealings towards vs, and to shew it vnto others of our Nation, which should come thither after vs: to which we consented, and I made them a Writing accordingly, which was sealed by the Captaine of our ship, expressing therein our good entertainment, and the prices of victuals. But neuerthelesse, with such a Prouiso, that our Nation should not trust them any further then in their discretions they should thinke requisite for their owne safeties. They speake a kind of Morisco Language, which is somewhat difficult to learne, and our continuance there short: so that I only tooke notice of these few words following, which are sufficient to call for victuals and fruits, when Portuguse Language is wanting; and to speake to any of the ground in forty fathomes water. From hence we set saile on the tenth day (having watered, and refreshed our selues very sufficiently, God be thanked) directing our course for the Island of Socotora.
 60 Countrey people, who vnderstand not the Portuguse. viz.

Gumbey, a Bullocke. Buze, a Goat. Coquo, an Henne. Tudah, Oranges. Deimon, Limons. Mage, Water. Surra, a kind of Drinke. Quenane, a Pine. Seianoye, Cocker Nuts. Figo, Plantans. Cartassa, Paper. Sinzano, a Needle. Arembo, Bracelets. Soutan, the King.

The Islands of Curia Muria.

The nineteenth, we passed vnder the Equinoctiall line: and on the twentieth fifth day, wee had sight of land, which we supposed to haue been Cape Guardafuy, which lieth at the entrance of the Red Sea: and so thinking to steere for Socotora, found it not. Whereupon we were enforced to bethinke our selues, where to goe that wee might shelter our selues from the cruelty of the Winter in those parts, and also to refresh vs againe. So we determined to saile for the Islands of Curia Muria, the bodies whereof lie in the latitude of about eightene degrees to the Northward of the Equinoctiall, ouer against the wast of Arabia Felix. In our way, we neuer had other weather then fogges, which were so thicke, that we could not discry halfe an English mile before vs (being a thing vsuall euery yeare in Iuly, August, and part of September.) In all this time, both the Sunne and the Starres were so obscured, that we could not helpe our selues any way by obseruation: but God being our guide, at length we groaped out the land by our lead, well perceiving the colour of the water to be changed white, and many yellow grassy weeds swimming thereon; we sounding still as we sailed, and our first ground was fortie three fathomes. So as we neered the land, our sounding lessened to twenty two fathomes, where we anchored in very good ground, but could see no land (although we heard the rut of the shoare not to be farre off) vntill the next day, which was somewhat cleare weather. And then we sent our Skiffe ashore, to see if they could discouer a place of more securitie for our ship to ride in: but by reason of the great Seas which came rowling into the Bay, there went so great a seidge that they could not come neere the shoare, and therefore returned as they went: onely they had descied a situation of faire houses, built of stone, hard by the Sea side, which prooued to be the Citie of Doffar in Arabia Felix. When God had sent vs a little cleare weather, we perceiued an high Cape land, on the Wester side of the Bay, the which we discouered with our Skiffe (at the second time of her going) to be a very good road for all winds, except from East to the South by East (God make vs thankfull) for thither we warped in our ship, although with much toyle of our men, beeing distant fixe or seuen leagues from the place where we were.

August. 3.
Resoit a small Village.

The third of August, we came to an anchor in the said roade, and went ashore with our Skiffe at a little Village, called Resoit, standing close by the Sea side. The Inhabitants thereof are Arabians, and for the most part fishermen, who gaue vs very kind intertainment, and told vs all concerning the Countrey, that we desired. Also the chiefe Gouvernour of Doffar came downe to vs (whose name is Meir habamud Madoffar) and bade vs very kindly welcome, and presented vs with three Bullocks, Sheepe, Goates, Sugarcanes, Hennes, Plantans, and Coco-nuts, and such like. For requitall whereof, we presented him againe, with a fine piece of Damaske double lockt, which was greatly by him esteemed: he desiring our friendship as much, as we desired his, and gaue vs licence forthwith to come ashore when we would. Also he gaue order to haue a Market kept at this little Village of Resoit, purposely for vs to buy any kind of victuals which the Countrey did afford. Their cattell are both deare and leane, and their fresh water is very scarce and bad, and very hard to come by: so that we were enforced to hire people to bring it downe to the sea side in skinnes, paying therefore twenty foure shillings sterling, for euery hue pipes filling. Before our departure from hence, Meir habamud Madoffar desired vs to leaue a writing of commendations in his behalfe, specifying the good and kind intertainment we had receiued there; which was graunted: and I made it in parchment, begun with great letters, the effect whereof beeing correspondent to the other writing, before left at Mohelia, also signed by the Captaine. And the Gouvernour sent vs three notes, by him signed, to the end we might send them in seuerall ships, if they should happen to come vpon that coast (as we did perforce) whereby he might know our ships from others, and to giue them intertainment accordingly. This Cape Resoit standeth in the latitude of sixteene degrees, and thirty eight minutes, to the Northward of the Equinoctiall line, and is good anchorage, in five and an halfe or fixe fathomes water.

The eight and twentieth, we set saile from hence, directing our course for the coast of Persia. still coasting alongst the Arabian shoare: for there were our cheifest hopes fixed, in setting the Lord Embassadour ashore. By reason of the newes, and aduises wee heard and receiued at the Cape Bona Esperanza, our expectations were frustrated, both of Surat, Dabul, and all other parts thereabouts.

The second of September, we sailed close by an Island, lying alongst the Arabian shoare called Maryra, the body of which standeth in twentieth degrees thirtie minutes, North latitude, the variation of the Needle being twenty degrees tenne minutes.

The fourth day, we passed the Eastermost part of the Arabian land, called Cape Rasalgat, standing in the latitude of twenty two degrees, and thirty foure minutes, and nineteene degrees twenty minutes variation.

THe tenth of September, crossing the Gulfe, wee had sight of the Coast of Persia, our ship being in the latitude of twentie five degrees and tenne minutes: the variation of the Compasse eightene degrees thirty minutes: and being some seven leagues off from the shoare, we sent our Skiffe with Sir Thomas Powell, accompanied with two of the Embassadors Persians, together with Albertus our Linguist, of purpose to discover the Countrey, and to seeke some conuenient place to land his Lordship. Where when they came to a little Village, called Tesseque, they spake with Camell men, and others of the Countrey people, by whom they vnderstood, that that Countrey was called Getche Macquerona, and the inhabitants Baluches: all liuing vnder the gouernment of one King, named Melicke Meirza, whose chiefe residence was some five or sixe dayes iourney from hence, at a Port called Guader. And they further told them, that all that Countrey of Macquerona, paid yeerely Tribute vnto the King of Persia. Also they vnderstanding our intents to land the Embassadour, told vs, that by Melick Meirza his conueiance, his Lordship should haue safe conduct from Guader in nine dayes to Chirman, and from thence to Spahann in Persia, in eleuen dayes. So we sayled alongst the Coast, and sent our Skiffe againe ashore on the eleuenth of this present, with Sir Thomas Powell and others, accompanied as before, both to enquire further of the Countrey, and to see if they could hire a Pilot to direct vs for Guader; because we knew not how the Coast did lie. And they lighted on a place called Tesseque, about one dayes iourney from the other place before; where we found the like newes and reports of these people to agree directly with the former; all commending the Port of Guader to be our best place of landing. Whereof we being very glad to heare, presently set downe our determinations, with Gods leaue, to saile thither with all the speed we might, although we had no Pilot. And in our way, on the thirteenth of this present in the morning, wee espied comming from the East-ward, two great Boates called Teradas, sayling alongst the shoare towards Ormus: whereupon, to the end we might haue a Pilot out of them, we manned our Skiffe sufficiently, of purpose to bring them to our ship (if intreaty did faile) perforce; yet without any intent to haue offered them the least discourtesie, or to haue sent them away vngratified. But when our Skiffe came vp to them, in stead of answering our mens hailes, they weaned our Skiffe to Leeward with a naked Sword. Wherefore our men thinking to feare them, and to make them amaine their sailes, shot off a peece at randome towards them; for answer whereof, they discharged another peece at our Skiffe, with halfe an hundred of arrowes to boote: which our men perceiuing, plyed all their Muskets at them againe: but our Skiffe not able to hold way with them sayling, was constrained to leaue them, and returne to our ship againe, with one man very dangerously hurt with an arrow in his breast, although after recovered. Now wee aboard perceiuing our Skiffe to be too weake, and returning againe without them, presently hoysed out our long boat, and sent her after them; we following with our ship so neare to the shoare as conueniently wee might with safetie. For it imported vs much now to speake with them, whereby wee might auoid the spreading of their scandalous reports of vs, in that Countrey; which might haue frustrated our chiefe hopes in landing the Embassadour there, beeing the place whereon wee most depended, especially considering how destitute we were of any other place, if this should faile, by reason aforesaid. So our long Boat fetching the Teradas vp, draue them into a Bay, from whence they could not escape; which strooke such a feare into them, that they desperately sayled so farre into the Bay, that one of them was cast away vpon the shoare; and the other neere vpon following, had not our men saued her from the breach thereof. All the Baluches for the most part leaped ouerboard, whereof some of them narrowly escaped drowning; and other taken in againe by our men, were brought with the Terada aboard our ship, beeing onely nine Baluches left of about twenty sixe. Who when they came aboard, perceiuing them to be of Guader, wee told them, that we were sory for the losse of their other Terada, and that we meant them no harme; but onely to speake with them, whereof they were glad to heare (for they thought we had been as mercilese as themselves) imputing their losses vnto their owne follies. Then we told them, that we were bound to Guader, to land a Persian Embassadour there, and that we would intreat the Master of the Boat, whose name was Noradim, to pilot our ship thither, and we would content him for his paines. To which (knowing himselfe not to be freed by deniall) he yeelded, conditionally that we would let the Terada and his men proceede in their Voyage for Muscat, which wee thought not fit, for feare of clamours and newes to be spread about the Gulfe, of our beeing there amongst the Portugals; but rather to carry the Terada with vs to Guader, thereby to make manifest our good dealings towards them. The Pilot perceiuing himselfe to be vrged between feare and friendship, in the end agreed; of whom we made very much, and in our way to Guader had much conference with him and his men, both concerning the state of the Countrey and King, and touching the passage of the Embassadour into Persia, through the same. Their answers, reports, and speeches all concurring with the former, in a manner confirmed our hopefull intents, without any dislike.

September 17.

Iuane a Village.

Guader.

The seuenteenth of September, we sayled by high ragged Clifſes, whereto close adioyning, is a good watering place, at a Village called Iuane, (as Norradim told vs) beeing about fifteene leagues distant from the Port of Guader, to the Westerside thereof, which beareth North of you.

Also, vpon this day in the euening, wee arriued at Guader, and anchored at the Ports mouth vntill the next day in the morning; where, about thirty Boates came out of Guader to fish. Some of them came to speake with the Baluches, which wee had aboard; but what they said was spoken in Baluche language, and therefore not by vs vnderstood. So betimes this morning, we cleared our Balucha Pilot, with his Boat and men; and told him, that when he would come aboard againe, hee should be satisfied for his paines: and so hee departed, being very well contented therewith.

And presently after, the Ambassadour sent one of his Persians, named Nazerbeg, ashore in our Skiffe, with a message to the chiefe Gouvernour concerning his landing, and passing thorow that Countrey into Persia: who by the way was met with the Gouvernours Boat, comming aboard our ship, into which Nazerbeg was taken out of our Skiffe, and went with them ashore to performe his message, according to direction, being accompanied with many people vnto the Gouvernours Tent. Where, he hauing deliuered his message to the said Gouvernour in the Persian language (which is as well vnderstood there, as their owne) was very much made of, and kindly entertained. The answere of which message by the Gouvernour, was, that although that Countrey of Macquerona was not the King of Persia; yet they did acknowledge a kind of dutifull loue vnto his Maieſty, and that they had been Tributaries vnto him and his Predecessors for many yeeres past, as they were now at present. Also, he further said, that the King of Macquerona was the King of Persia Slaue, with such like fained and trapping complements; and the Ambassadour should be as welcome, as if he were in the Persian Land; only tending by treachery to allure his Lordship ashore, as by the euent it appeared.

This answere being returned by Nazerbeg, hee had to accompany him aboard (and to confirme the same with addition) about a dozen of the ancientest men there of Baluches: who, when they came aboard our ship, saluted the Ambassadour with great submission, both in their Gouvernours behalfe, and in their owne: some of them offering to kisse his feete, telling his Lordship, that he was the happiest man aliue in comming thither to that place. For, but one day past, the Vice-Roy

Vice-roy was come downe with a troope of men, to visite a Saint; and therefore his Lordship should bee conducted with more safetie thorow his Countrey (from the danger of Rebels and Theeues, which were beewene Guader and Persia) either to Chirman or Sistan, and so to Spahann. Also that the Vice-roy would furnish his Lordship with Camels and Horses, and other necessities requisite, and that he would accommodate him with all the meanes he had in his power. And moreover said, that they much rejoyced to haue such fit opportunitie, to shew their vnfained loue towards the King of Persia: and withall, he should be dispatched from Guader (if hee would) in two dayes at the furthest: and told vs, for our ship, we should haue both water, and other necessities whatsoeuer we needed: they bringing then with them three bagges of bruised

September 18.

10 Dates, being about three hundred pound weight, with two Goats, and sent aboard the said fish-boats, that euery one of them should send two fishes (vpon the Gouvernours account) aboard our ship, who did accordingly. So that, what with their exterior shew of vnfained loue and kindnesse towards vs, together with all mens speeches (of whom enquiry was made, as aforeiâid) agreeing so iumpe one with another, wee were throughly perswaded, without any kinde of distrust, that they meant vs as well as they said: Especially, the Lord Ambassadour was exceedingly well conceited of them, being ioyfull to arrive in Persia in twentie dayes; and wee not sory, in bringing to perfection our long desired hopes. But God, from whose Diuine knowledge the secrets of no hearts can bee hidden, knew their contrary meanings towards vs: for had not his Mercy exceeded his Iustice, we had been consumed, and it neuer could haue

20 been knowne what had been become of vs, ship nor goods.

For, hereupon the Ambassadour resolved, and fitted all things in a readinesse, and on the nineteenth of this present, which was the morning following, sent both his money, treasure, and all his carriage ashore, with the Baluches Boates, that came aboard for that purpose. Very early also they brought a message from the Vice-Roy and Gouvernour, that they had provided a Tent for his Lordship, and all his followers, neere adioyning vnto their Tent: and therefore he might come ashore so soone as he pleased. All things were ready; into which Tent all the Ambassadors goods were carryed, and by his order, some of his followers were appointed to remaine with them, vntill his Lordship should come ashore himselfe. Intending to haue followed the same day in the afternoone, at foure of the clocke, he sent the Vice-Roy word, that hee would

30 then come. And in the meane time our Skiffe went ashore with emptie caske, to bring fresh water aboard: wherein went the Ambassadors Persians, and three or foure others of his followers, to see the landing of the goods, and carefull carrying of them into the Tents. And at the landing thereof, the countrey people demanded if the Ambassadour had no more goods then those to bring ashore? To which answer was made, that there was all, except Iewels, and such like things, which should be brought when himselfe did come. Other Baluches standing by, replied to each other amongst themselves, that it was no matter; for there was enough for the souldiers: which Nazerbeg ouer-heard, and vnderstood, yet concealed it for that time, although it possessed him with a ialous conceit; and as hee said afterward, that neuertheless he had no power to continue in the same, by reason of such equal correspondencie of all matters passed before;

40 but was somewhat more attentiu vnto what should be said afterwards amongst them, and could heare nothing contrary vnto honest dealing: vntill at length meeting with one Hoge Comal (whom God had made an instrument to disclose their deuillish proiect vnto vs) hee vnderstood the particulars of their bloody intents, by him reuealed. At which Nazerbeg was somewhat amazed, and angry with the man, that he did not tell him of it before the goods were brought ashore. Also, the houre appointed of the Ambassadors comming ashore drew neare, which made him feare, lest he should haue come ashore before he should get to our shippe, to forewarne him: but as God would haue it, our Skiffe was yet a filling of water by the sea side; where, when he came, he told our men, that there was treachery plotted against vs ashore: and withall wished them to row him aboard our ship with all the speed they could; and so was brought aboard immediatly, although not one eighth part of an houre too soone: for both the Ambassadour, and all his followers, together with the Captaine of our shippe, and all the chiefe of vs (who were willing to grace his Lordship all we might, for the honour of our Countrey) stood in the ships wasse, ready to go ashore. But Nazerbeg bringing these newes, wee were not halfe so

50 hasty in our proceedings, he telling vs what had passed; the chiefe effect whereof was this, That the Vice-Roy, and Gouvernour, did entice so many of vs as they could ashore, of purpose to cut our throats: Which being done, they meant to haue set vpon our ship, and to haue made spoile of all. And further, that they were all Rebels to the King of Persia, being present death for any once to name the King of Persia in that place. Also, that they had made enquiry of euery particular man in our ship, both of our places, profession and estates: for they had consulted and concluded vpon the Massacre of vs all (except the Chirurgions, Musicians, Women and Boyes) with determination to haue put all the rest to death without mercy. Now, God be thanked, although we vnderstood of their intended plots so sufficiently, whereby we were forewarned to preuention thereof, by arming our selues, (we knew, vnder Gods protection, wee were able to defend vs from receiuing any iniury aboard, notwithstanding their great store of Boats and men, they hauing at that instant about fifteene hundred shot, besides others) yet we were to seeke how we might procure againe his Lordships goods, and his three men, which were ashore in their custodies. For performance whereof, God, that had thus miraculously deliuered vs from their tyranny, likewise opened our vnderstandings, in so much that wee obtained all, according to our owne desires, in this manner following, viz. Whereas they expected the comming ashore of the Ambassadour, his followers, and our Captaine, and vs, accompanied together: we presently sent Nazerbeg ashore againe, with directions what he was to doe, and to tell the Vice-Roy, that the Ambassadour was not very well, and therefore deferred his comming till the next morning, which was Munday, the twentieth day of September. Also, to request the Vice-Roy and Gouvernour, that they would send two or three of their Boats very early for him, the women, and the rest of his company, because the ship-boats were too small. And withall, that the Ambassadour did expect to bee receiued by some men of sort from the Vice-Roy, to come in the said Boats, in regard of the King of Persia Honor, whose person he did represent. This message being well deliuered tooke effect, and willing grant was made for performance thereof. Which businessse Nazerbeg hauing finished, he was to go to the Tent, where the goods were, and to bring out of one of the Trunkes two bagges of money, containing two hundred pound sterling, with some other things of worth, if conueniently hee could without being spied; because they should not suspect that we had discovered any of their villanies. Also, wee gaue him order to returne instantly, and to with the three men to stay still in the Tent, till the next morning, and they should be freed. All which was done accordingly; and not only the said money brought away, but also a Trunck, wherein was the Lady Sherleyes apparell (notwithstanding the Baluches demanded why that Truncke was brought aboard againe) and were being made, that therein was the Ladies night-cloathing, and that it should bee brought againe the next day: and so passed on for current. Now the Ambassadour made account, that if he could but get one great Trunck more (wherein were things of moment and charge, with his said three men) to lose the rest without care. And for the better bringing to passe hereof without suspicion, we fitted ouer-night a great Chest, and a close-stoole bound and maled vp together with cords, very fast and handsomely: which were filled with billets, rubbish and stones, to make them heauie, to bee left in the place of that Truncke which should be brought aboard: and the three men should come forth of the Tent, with each of them their instruments of musicke in their hands. And for excuse, if the Baluches should demand why they brought that Truncke aboard againe, answer should bee made it was one of the Merchants, and it was mistaken. Likewise, if they demanded why the men came aboard againe, answer should be made, that his Lordship did send for them, to accompany him ashore with their musicke. So all being ready, the next morning very early, wee perceiving the three Boats comming aboard to fetch his Lordship, according to promise, presently manned our Skiffe, and sent her ashore, to put our plot in execution: whereby wee hoped to catch them in the same snare that they had laid for vs. And in the meane time we receiued the three Boats of men into our shippe, with entertainment requisite: wherein came about fortie or fiftie persons; but not about seuen or eight of any reckoning, whereof our friend Hoge Comal was one, the rest Slaues and Fisher-men. We kept them in talke, and much conference of by-matters, to passe away the time, because our Skiffe might returne before we did meddle with them. Amongst which talke, one of them earnestly requested vs, as from the Vice-Roy, that we would carry our Slurbow ashore with vs, he being very desirous to see it. So we smoothed them in their desires. And not long after, we espied our Skiffe returning, with her successe, which, God be thanked, fell out prosperously: For they did not only bring the three men, and the Truncke, but also one chiefe man of the Baluches, whom Nazerbeg inticed aboard. And so soone as hee was entred into the ship, hee, with the rest, desired to see our Gun-roome, wherein, hee knew (by intelligence) we had all our fire-workes, they standing in much feare thereof, especially of our Slurbow, with the fiery Arrowes; which fell out fit for our purpose. For wee had meant to haue sent them downe thither, to take away their knives which they wore by their sides. So all the chiefe of them being gone downe into the Gun-roome, and our ship fitted, with euery one of vs our weapons in our hands, we diuided our selues, some about the Deckes, some betwixt, and others, as was needful, in the Gun-roome, to lay hold of the Traytors (so soone as the word should be giuen) to take away from them their long knives: all which was done in an instant, without any disquietnesse or resistance. Then we began to parle with them vpon plaine termes, laying open to them their bloodie intents: also telling them, that their liues lay in our hands, and they were now themselves caught in the same snare, which they had plotted for vs: and that if wee serued them rightly, wee should cut them in pieces, as they had determined to serue vs. All which, they, like stony-faced Mahumetans denied. So we kept sixe of them, which were the chiefe, with two of their Boats, the rest of the crew we sent ashore, being all, for the most part, naked Rascalls, except one, to whom we deliuered a message in particular, to tell the Vice-Roy and Gouvernour, That vnlesse he would send vs aboard all our goods, and things wee had ashore, without one peny-worth diminished, wee would carry away those men we had aboard for satisfaction. This message being deliuered to the Vice-Roy and Gouvernour, they presently sent sent answer backe againe, by the same messenger we sent: that if wee would release the Balu-ches, then they would send vs all our goods againe; and with many lame excuses, would make vs beleue they meant vs no hurt. Whereupon, presently in the sight of the messengers, we clapped them all in Irons, and writ one letter to the Vice-Roy, and the Prisoners wrote another (both tending to one effect) in the Persian Language: threatening the liues of those Prisoners, if they did not send vs all our goods, as aforesaid, and that without delay, within the space of two houres at the most: to which purpose we set vp the running glasse, before the messenger departed out of the shippe, because he should make the more speed backe againe. By these sharpe meanes, we vrged them forthwith to returne all our goods againe, in very ample manner, as we desired. Which being receiued into the ship, wee freed both the men and Boats, and sent them away according to promise: only one named Malin-Simsadin, who, by Hodge Comal, was discovered to be a good Pilot for Sinde and Cambaya; we kept with vs for the same purpose, conditionally to reward him according to his deserts. They stay a Pilot for Sinde.

Thus with Gods assistance (to whom bee alwayes endlesse praise for our happie deliuerance) we had dispatched all this intricate businesse, by six of the clocke in the euening, being the twentieth day of September: and set saile from hence the same night, with our new Pilot and Hodge Comal (who came aboard from amongst the cursed crew, to saue his life) for Sinde: because wee would be sure to auoyd all insuing inconueniences there, which they might attempt by their future circumuentions. And in our way to Sinde, we had much conference with Hodge Comal, our good friend, of whose company we did much esteeme. He was borne at Dabul, but his Father was a Persian by his profession, he was a Church-man of that Sect, and had some skill in Chirurgerie and Physicke, for which vse he was resident in the Gouvernours Tent: and by this meanes he ouer-heard all that passed. And excusing his comming aboard for certaine Oyntments, which our Surgeons had promised him, hee told vs that when hee heard of their intents, his heart was full of bemoaning compassion, to thinke that we should come like innocent sheepe, to the slaughter of such butcherly Bloud-suckers: and therefore he perceiued well, that God would haue him reueale it. And he further told vs, that to his knowledge, they had betrayed three ships before in the like manner; and that they were all rebels to the King of Persia, denying to pay the Tribute, which both they and their Ancestors had formerly done. Wherefore, the King of Persia had leuyed a great Armie of Souldiers, not farre from Guader of purpose, to come vpon that Countrey the next Winter.

This Countrey Macquerona, is bordering close vpon the Persian Land, beeing part of the Maine Continent of Asia: and Guader Port standeth in about twentie five degrees of North latitude, and the variation seuentene degrees fiftene minutes; good anchorage betweene foure and five fathomes.

The one and twentieth of September at night, our Baluche Pilot brought our ship in danger of a shoale: where we were inforced to chop to an anchor, till the next morning.

The foure and twentieth at night, as we lay a hull (because we were not farre from Cape Camelo) there passed close by vs a Portugall Frigat bound for Sinde: which at the first wee supposed to haue beene a Galley, and therefore armed our selues for defence.

§. III.

Their comming to Diuulginde landing the Embassadour, seeking Trade, and crossed by the slanderous Portugals, going to Sumatra and Bantam; and returne.

HE six and twentieth, we came to an anchor right before the mouth of the Riuer Sinde, with directions of a Pilot, which we had out of one of the Fisher-boats which were fishing there. We roade in a foot lesse then five fathome water (the Riuer's mouth bearing East & by North) in very good ground: and is in the latitude of twentie foure degrees and thirtie eight minutes, to the Northward of the Equinoctiall Line, the variation is sixteene degrees fortie five minutes.

The mouth of the Riuer Sinde in 24. degrees 38. minutes in the Mogols Dominions: Variation 16. degrees 45. minutes.

Hereupon the same day the Ambassadour sent two of his people ashore, to speake with the Gouvernour concerning his Lordships comming ashore: and to tell him his intent, to haue passage through that Countrey into Persia. Which Gouvernour, named Arab Manewardus beeing of Diul, was very willing to welcome the Ambassadour, and to shew him all the kindnesse hee could (for the loue he professed to the King of Persia) both in his Royall entertainment, and passage through his Countrey, or Iurisdiction: and sent a principall man aboard vs, accompanied with five or sixe more to welcome his Lordship, with many Complements, assuring him of kind entertainment.

So presently, there were Boates sent for from Diul, to carrie him, his people, and his goods ashore, which came on the nine and twentieth of this instant: vpon which day, we were cleared both of him and his (both in number and health) as when they first entred into our ship: and for his farewell, eleuen Peeces of Ordnance were shot off from our ship. Also Simsadin, our treacherous Balnche Pilot, wee set ashore at the same time (beeing intreated of the Gusurats) notwithstanding his desert to haue bene set in the Sea, in that hee would haue cast vs away twice: whereof, once by himselfe, and another time by his Deuillish counsell giuen to another Pilot, which we had of the Fisher-boates here. At the Ambassadors departing out of the ship the Captaine deliuered him a fine piece double locked, to present the Gouvernour of Tata, a great Citie one dayes journey from Diul, both Cities standing in the Great Mogols Dominions. Also we intreated his Lordship, that hee would send vs word how he found the Countrey, and whether we might haue trade there or not: and withall deliuered his Lordship a note in writing, to what we chiefly desired. They Copie whereof doth follow.

Inprimis, that our comming hither to this Port, as it is purposely to land your Lordship, so withall we haue brought certaine Commodities and Money, to the end if we obtaine safe protection for quiet and peaceable Trade, we may make sale of such and so much of our Commodities as shalbe fitting: otherwise we desire but leaue to refresh, and so depart. Likewise, if the Gouvernour please, that we may settle a Factorie heere, we also desire it: and although now wee are but slenderly provided, yet, hereafter we will bring such store, and sorts of Commodities, as shalbe most required and conueniently vented in this Port.

The Commodities we now haue brought are these, viz.

A Portugall
Liedzer in Diul
His slander of the English.

The thirtieth of September, the Ambassadour had audience with the Gouvernour of Diul concerning all his businesse, vnto whom he shewed the King of Persians Firma, as also the King of Spaines Passe, thinking thereby to satisfie and resolue the iealous doubts of the Portugals Liedger there, (who reported, vpon intelligence from Ormuz, that Don Roberto Sherley was come forth of England with three shippes into the Indies of purpose to steale) but they peremptorily denyed credence to any Writing hee shewed them, saying, it was neither their Kings hand, nor Seale. For if it were, they could not be ignorant thereof, considering they knew it so well: and further said, it was counterfeit. Whereat the Ambassadour was much moued to impatience, and replied againe vnto them, saying, that it was meere folly to shew them any Kings hand or Seale: for they had no King, and therefore could not know it. And that they were a waste Nation only subdued, and brought vnder subiection perforce by the King of Spaine, and were scruile both to him and his subiects. Notwithstanding the Portugals were not danted, but stood stiffely in their former opinions: and said, that he had two ships more in the Indies. Then Arach Manewardus spake in the Ambassadors behalfe, rebuking them sharply for such vnseemely contradictions of the Persian Ambassadour: and so concluded, absenting the Portugals out of the roome. Afterward the Ambassadour made a speech vnto the said Gouvernour and assembly, concerning the admittance of vs into his Port, to trade (according to directions, giuen his Lordship from vs, as aforesaid) which was very kindly imbraced of the Gouvernour: with willingness to do therein what he might, all inconueniences vnderstood. For which purpose he willed the Ambassadour to send for one or two Merchants from aboard, to conferre with him vpon the same. Whereupon the Ambassadour wrote a Letter vnto vs, by two of his people, who came aboard our ship on the second of October 1613. in the morning: by which Letter we perceiued his Lordships proceedings in our desired businesse with the Gouvernour, with assurance for our safe going and returne: being in such good sort and fashion, that our hopes were great in establishing a trade there, if not a Factorie: especially to make sale of the small quantitie of goods which wee now brought. Wherefore Master Ioseph Salbancke, and my selfe, fitted our selues with the aduice of the Captaine and others in our ship, and went ashore in one of the Countrey Boates the same morning about eight of the clocke, our ship riding about foure or fise miles from the riuers mouth, from whence we had fiftene miles to the Citie Diul, where the Ambassadour was, so that it was late in the euening the same day before we landed.

Ioseph Salbancke
and Walter Payson.

Portugals slanderous policies

And in our way we met with a Portugall Frigate bound for Ormuz, which I saw went to carrie newes of our ships being there: because none of their ships (which were daily expected) should come till we were gone. This Frigate came close by our shippe, and tooke view of her, and so departed. Now when we were landed, there came three or foure Portugals vnto vs, demanding if we had brought any goods ashore, and such like questions: to whom wee made no reply, making shew that we vnderstood them not, because we might vnderstand them for our aduantage, if occasion serued. Then there came another Portugall (who spake the Dutch Tongue very perfectly) telling me many things concerning the people and Countrey, all tending to disgrace, in an idle and friuolous manner: thinking thereby to dissuade vs from desiring Trade there. Not long after, the Officers of the Custome-house came and conducted vs vp to the Castle, where the Gouvernour dwelt, who we thought would haue spoken with vs that night, but did not, because it was so late: yet the Officers (being for the most part Banians, and spake good Portuguse) searched every part about vs for money, not leauing so much as our shooes vnsearched. Which being done, and peceiuing vs to take it strangely, they prayed vs to be contented, for it was the order of that place. To which I answered, that although the Portugals might giue them cause to ordaine so bad a fashion, yet English Merchants did not, Meazle like, hide money in their shooes: but notwithstanding, we were therewith contented. Then the Gouernours Seruants came to vs, excusing it likewise, saying, that he was displeased thereat. And so they brought a great light, and directed vs from the Castle, vnto the house where Sir Robert Sherley, the Persian Ambassadour did lodge: to whom wee found our selues very welcome, and lodged there all the time of our abode in Diu, expence free. The Portugals seeing vs landed, and hearing that wee were to treat with the Gouernour about the setting of Trade there, did nothing all this time but (like enuious and lying Malignants) spread clamorous and scandalous speeches, in disgrace of our King, Nation, and Countrey: reporting that we were theeues, and not Merchandizers, but liued chiefly by robbing of other Nations on the Seas.

The malice of the Portugals.

October 3.

The third of October in the morning, the Gouernour sent the Ambassadour word, that in the afternoone he would haue speech with vs. In the meane while, wee had intelligence that the Portugals were labouring all they could with him, and others, to preuent our intertainment: both by offering him gratifications if he would refuse vs, and by threatning to be gone, if he did receiue vs, alledging as before, that they would not trade where theeues did trade. Neuerthelesse, according to our expectations, the Gouernour sent for vs; and withall commanded foure great horses gallantly trapped, to be brought vnto the Embassadours house, for his Lordship, Sir Thomas Powell, Master Salbancke, and my selfe; also a certaine company of his seruants, to conduct vs to the Castle: also all the Embassadours followers went with him, each of them carrying an Halbert on their shoulders.

They goe to the Castle in honourable fashion.

Thus we rode through some part of the Citie, wherein the people in euery street came flocking to see vs, they hauing of long time heard talke of Englishmen; but neuer had seene any before now: for we were the first that euer came into that part of the Countrey. When we came to the Castle, we were receiued very orderly, and directed through some spacious roomes, (where souldiours were standing on each side as we went in rankes, cloathed all in white linnen from head to foot) vp to an high Turret, wherein the Gouernour, and some other were set: who at our entrance arose, and saluted vs, bidding vs kindly welcome. Then we all sat downe together round vpon the Carpets, which were spread vpon the floare according to their fashion. Then the Gouernour againe said, we were very welcome, and that he was glad to see Englishmen in those parts; and proceeded to further talke concerning our businesse, and told vs (whereas wee desired trade) the Portugals would not consent that we should driue any trade, or haue to doe where they were, threatning to be gone if he did entertaine vs. Notwithstanding, if he could be assured of a greater benefit to arise by our trade then by theirs, he would not care if they did forsake him: for hee did well affect our Nation. But in the meane time, he hauing farmed the customes of that Port from the King, vnto whom he stood bound for the payment of certaine summes of money yeerly for the same, whether it came in or not: it behooued him carefully, to be circumspect in ordering those busineses, whereby to auoid the Kings Highnesse displeasure; which vnhappily might fall out to his vtter ouerthrow and vndoing.

This King is the Great Mogol.

A Rupia is two shillings, or somewhat more, and a Leck is 100000.

And then he began to tell vs further, that the custome of the Portugals trade, together with their meanes in letting out their ships to Guzerates and Banians, amounted vnto a Leck of Rupias yeerely, which is tenne thousand pound sterling. Then he demaunded of vs, what sorts of Commodities we had now brought, and the quantities of each; also what store of money? All which we answered him, a little more or lesse, and withall told him, that although now we brought but small quantities, yet wee could furnish that Port at our next returne, with any Commodities whatsoeuer the Portugals did bring; and such a quantitie of each, as we should perceiue requisite and fitting to be vented there. Of this he liked well, and asked in what time we could returne from our Countrey thither againe? We answered him, in about twenty two moneths. So hee concluded, saying, That in regard of our small stocke, the Portugals would both laugh at him, and vs, if we should be entertained now. Wherefore, he wished vs to deferre it vntill our next coming, and in the meane time he would giue vs a writing vnder his hand and seale, thereby to assure vs of entertainment at our next coming, conditionally, that we come provided as aforesaid, and we to leaue him another writing, to assure him that our ship should not molest any of the King of Mogors ships, goods, nor subiects; which we agreed vnto: withall requesting him, that although hee would not receiue vs whereby to establish a trade now; yet that he would permit vs to make sale of those goods we now had: which in no wise he would grant, for feare of offending the Portugals, alledging as before. Then we desired him that wee might haue water, and other refreshing for our money, and we would depart so soone as we could. For this he said, that so soone as we did send him our writing aforesaid, he would both send vs another, and giue order to his Officers for the same: but he would not haue the Portugals to know thereof. So we seeing no remedie, demaunded of him what sorts of commodities he would haue vs bring thither; all also what Commodities that countrey did afford: who answered these, viz.

Broad cloath of diuers prices, and light colours, as Stammels, Reds, Greenes, and Sky-colours, and Aniles, Blewes, and Azures, &c. Elephants teeth, Iron, Tinne, Lead, Steele, Spices, Mony. These Commodities are to be carried for Sinde.

Commodities to be had there.

Indigo of Labor. Indigo of Cherques. Callicoes all sorts. Pintadoes of all sorts. Guserat and Cambaya. Commodities of all sorts, with many sorts of Drugges.

Then wee tooke our leaues of him and parted, returning to the Embassadours house againe, where I framed a Letter, and sent him according to our promise, signed by M. Salbancke, and my selfe; and receiued another from him likewise, which was in the Persian language, much like the Hebrew Letter backward: the English whereof was interpreted to vs by the Ambassadour; as followeth, viz. 10

WHereas here arrived at this Port of Diul, in the Kingdom of Mugore, one English ship called the Expedition, whereof is Captaine Christopher Newport, and Merchants, Ioseph Salbancke and Walter Peyton, to land Don Robert Sherley, the King of Persians Embassadour, who desired grant of trade in this Port (being vnder my gouernment) which willingly I would haue graunted, but onely for preiudiciall inconueniences insuing: for they brought not merchandize, sitting in quantitie to begin such trade: neither the Portugals by whose trade at present I reape benefit, would consent thereto, threatening to bee gone if I did receiue the English Nation. So that thereby, I should haue bene left destitute of all trade, whereof those Summes of Money doe arise yearly, which I am bound to pay vnto the Kings Maestie: and in default therein, I should put in hazard his Highnesse displeasure, to my utter overthrow and undoing. Yet notwithstanding, for the loue I owe vnto the King of Persia, by whose Embassadour I am requested, and the affection I beare vnto the English Nation; together with the faithfull performance of their writings, left with me vnder their hands and scales, of the two Merchants aforesaid, (which is not to molest or meddle with any of the said Kings shippes, goods nor subiects, in the time of this their Voyage, in the shippe aforesaid) I haue giuen them this writing vnder mine owne hand and scale: hereby promising the English Nation (that if they will come like themselves, so fitted that I may aduantage my selfe more by them, then by the Portugals) infallible assurance of intertainment to trade, with such reasonable grant of Priuiledges as we shall agree vpon. Dated in Diul the third day of October, Anno 1613. 20

Signed, Arah Manewardus.

Sealed with Incke. 30

The fourth of October, we receiued the writing from the Gouvernour, together with order to his Officers for our watering and refrething: and then wee hastened to retorne aboard our ship againe. And a little before our departure, the Ambassadour fell into discourse with vs, about the procuring of a Firma from the King of Magore: and withall, wished Master Salbanck to go along with him for Agra (which is the chiefe place where the great Mogoll keepeth his Court) and he would warrant vs, that he would procure the same in very short time: especially now, at this so fit an opportunitie offered, both in regard of his businesse with the Mogoll, as also the willingnesse of Arah Manewardus, to entertaine vs at this Port: which opportunitie being let slip, we should neuer obtaine the like; his Lordship protesting and vowing to doe his best endeavour therein, and shew himselfe a true hearted English man towards his Countrey, howsoever the Company of Merchants (he said) did conceit him. And further, that Master Salbanck should be an eye-witnesse of his constant and faithfull proceeding therein, to doe the Merchants good, in obtaining the said Firma: not only for Diul, but also for any other part in the Mogolls Dominions: and also should bring it for England ouer-land himselfe. All which being grounded vpon some reason, and Master Salbanck hauing been in those parts before, hee was willing to vnder- take: Provided, he might haue the consent of the Captaine, my selfe, and others in the ship. To which purposes, the Ambassadour writ a letter to the Captaine, perswading his consent thereto, and sent it aboard by vs. 40

So we parted from Diul this day in the after-noone, and when we came to the Riuer side to take Boat, there flocked about vs many of the Countrey people: also there came downe to vs about a dozen of the enuious Portugals, who began to talke with vs in Dutch, as before, demanding of vs many friuolous questions: which, when I had answered, I spake in their owne language, (because the Banians which were there present, might vnderstand) and told them that they were a shamelesse and lying people, in spreading of so many deuised scandals, and slanderous reports of our Nation; vnto whom they knew themselves much inferiour in many respects; and that they did it only in malicious policie, because they would not haue vs to trade in the Indies, as well as they. Also I told them, that if they did not containe themselves within the compasse of better peace, reforming themselves hereafter, both in their sayings and doings, they should be all rooted out of the Indies, and a more honest and Royall Nation placed in their roomes. Then one of the chiefe of them singled out himselfe, and answered thus: That they had enemies too many already, and therefore they desired no more. And as for scandalous speeches they did not deny 60 deny, being vrged thereunto : for not long past, off from Surat, they had a ship taken by English men, as they supposed : to which I answered them, that it might bee rather the Hollanders. So they concluded, in the end very plyant and sociable, wishing that we might trade in all parts of the Indies with them, and they with vs, like neighbours and friends ; and that there were some agreement made betwixt our King and theirs, for the bringing to passe thereof. Thus they taking their leaues of vs in very kind manner, we parted.

The sixt, we arriued aboard our ship againe, where it was agreed vpon, that Master Salbank should goe, as aforesaid, with the Ambassadour for Agra. Wherefore he fitted himselfe, thinking to haue gone ashore the next day ; and in the meane time, the Captaine sent the Purser and his man to buy fresh victualls, and prouision for the Sea : who, when they came to the Citie, were by the Gouvernour presently turned backe againe as they went ; and expresse command by Proclamation, vpon paine of death, the Country people should bring no more English men ashore. These sudden and strange alterations made vs much to maruell ; for wee could neuer know the certaintie whereupon it grew, or what should be the cause.

All the time of our being heere at Sinde, we could neuer vnderstand of any trade settled at Surat : for if we had, we might haue taken other courses. The Ambassador had aboute seuen moneths journey, (from Sinde to Spahann in Persia) by Carauan ; or if he procured to trauell otherwise, then it is one moneth lesse.

They depart from Sinde.

The ninth, we set saile from hence, directing our course, with Gods leaue, for Sumatra.

20 The twentieth of Nouember, we came to an anchor in the Roade of Priaman, where we went in betwixt the two Northermost little Ilands, and anchored close by the Northermost of them both in fise fathome water. And in the meane time wee beat the price of Pepper at Priaman, and brought it from two and twentie Rials, to seuentene Rials a Bahar, first peny : at which price we bought two Bahars, which were brought aboard our ship. But the Gouvernour, although we had presented him with a piece, would not suffer vs to take an house, nor to buy any Pepper ashore, vnlesse wee would bestow some twentie Presents vpon the Officers and Merchants there.

Nouember 20.
Priaman.

30 The two and twentieth, we receiued a letter from Captaine Christen, out of the Hosiander at Tecoo, earnestly wishing vs to come to Tecoo with our ship, so soone as we could, and wee should not faile to lade so much Pepper as we determined, and that in short time. And because we were not well acquainted with this place ; Captaine Christen sent one of his Masters Mates, named Richard Hall, to Pilot vs into the Roade, by reason of many dangerous shoalds that lye about Tecoo.

40 The eight and twentieth, we came to an anchor in Tecoo Road, in foure fathom water, where Richard Hall returned aboard the Hosiander, and being troubled with the Fluxe, dyed the same night. Now we being come to Tecoo, found all things contrary to our expectation. For, whereas before our comming hither, the Countrey people offered their Pepper to Captaine Christen after twelue and thirteene Rials a Bahar, in trucke of Surat commodities ; they now demanded two and twentie Rials ready money, refusing to trucke with him at all for commodities. Also, heere they demanded as many presents, as they of Priaman ; besides seuentie two Rials of plate for anchorage. So that we were now worse to passe then before, and time not permitting vs to make delay, we grew into short termes with them : and told them, that although wee did not buy a Cattee of Pepper there, wee would not agree, nor yeeld vnto their vnreasonable demands. And withall, I framed a letter, as from the Captaine, by him firmed and conigned to the chiefe Gouvernour, shewing him that they did not vie our Nation so well, as we did expect at their hands, both in regard of their vniust demanding of presents ; (which we did not vially giue by compulsion, but either for affection or deseruing) and also their vnreasonable delaying the performance of their promises, falling out to be so vncertaine, that wee could not account them to bee Merchant-like dealings. For our ships haue stayed there diuers times, three, foure or fise moneths, 50 only depending vpon their posting promises, to haue their full lading ; which might haue beene as well dispatched in one moneth, with that small quantitie of Pepper which they had. This letter was Englished by the Hosianders Linguist (named John, an Indian, who spake the language very well) vnto the chiefe Gouvernour : who hereupon gaue present order, that wee might buy Pepper of any man that would sell. And withall sent a messenger aboard our ship, to wish one of vs to come ashore, and it should be weighed there. But we doubting their delayes, accepted not thereof ; and therefore sent him word againe, that wee could not stay so long, as to weigh it ashore : if they would bring it aboard and weigh it, we would giue them eightene Rials a Bahar for their Pepper, and two Rials vpon each Bahar, for the custome and Gouvernour, being iust 60 twentie Rials, conditionally they would bring it aboard ; otherwise we would not stay. So they lingring somewhat long before they came, we set saile, making shew to depart : which the Gouvernour perceiuing, forthwith sent another messenger (who spake the Portuguese language indifferently well) to entreate vs to come to an anchor againe, and wee should haue as much Pepper brought aboard immediatly as we would lade : which we did, and they came as fast with Prawes lading of Pepper, as conueniently we could weigh it : and so continued for the space of three or foure

- four days, till they had brought about some two hundred Bahars, and then began to slack their bringing. Which we perceiuing, and fearing to spend ouer-much time heere (lest we should lose the seasons of the Monsons) we departed for Bantam.
- December 8. The eight of December, we set saile from Tecoo, where we left three of our men in the Hof-ander, their necessitie so requiring. In our course to Bantam, for the most part, we sailed within sight of Sumatra.
- The sixteenth, at our entrance into the Straights of Sunda, being the sixteenth of this present, we met with the Dragon bound homeward, by whom we writ home.
- They arrive in Bantam Road. The seuenteenth, wee brought our ship to an anchor in Bantam Road: where wee presently went ashore, to prouide her lading. On the nine and twentieth, we made an end of lading our whole complement. 10
- January 2. The second of January, we set saile from Bantam for England, not hauing lost one man by sickness in all our Voyage hitherto; for which, God make vs thankfull. Also this day, as we were going out by Pulo Pan Ian, wee met with Generall Saris in the Cloane, come from Iapan: for whole letters, and the deliury of foure chests, the Captaine cast anchor againe. Also we spared him two of our men, namely, Mortimer Prittie Yonker, and Thomas Valens, one of our Carpenters Mates whereof they stood much in need; for they had not one Carpenter left aliue. Thus hauing also dispatched these businesses with the Cloane, we set saile once againe for England, on the fourth of this present.
- General Saris in the Cloane, come from Iapan. The one and twentieth, we came to an anchor in Saldanha Bay: where wee had sheepe and 20 Bullocks reasonable store, besides great abundance of fresh fish, which we caught with our Sayne in the Riuer.
- March 21. The Bay of Saldanha. On the ninth of Aprill, we departed, and then we had prosperous winds, which continued vntill we came in the latitude of about three degrees to the Northward of the Equinoctiall Line, which we passed vnder on the eleuenth of May, finding our ship then to be in two and twentie minutes North latitude. Hereabouts many of our men began to fall sicke, some of the Scuruie and swelling in their legges. The tenth of Iuly, we came to an anchor in the Downes in safetie, God be euer praised.
- Aprill 9. May 11. After this twelfth Voyage, the order of that reckoning is altered, because the Voyages ensuing were set forth by a ioynt stocke, and not by particular and proper ships, stockes, Factories, (as before) but promiscuous and generally accountable to the whole societie. Of which, all are not come to our hands: such as I haue (that which thence is meete for the publike view) giue I thee. 30

He Shippes employed were the New-yeeres-gift, Admirall, of burthen sixe hundred and fiftie tunnes: The Hector, Vice-Admirall, of five hundred tunnes: The Merchants Hope, of three hundred tunnes, and the Salomon, of two hundred tunnes. Master William Edwards was Lieutenant and Cape Merchant, and Commander of the Hector: Master Nicholas Ensworth Cape Merchant and Commander of the Merchants Hope: Master Thomas Elkington Cape Merchant, and Commander of the Salomon: Master Peter Rogers Minister, Martin Pring, Arthur Spaight, Matthew Molineux and Hugh Bennet, Masters of the foure Shippes, assisted with diuers Mates. 60

The first of March 1613. we set saile. On Wednesday the fifteenth of June 1614. we anchored in the Road of Saldania, and were welcommed with a great storm. John Barter by along Feuer bereaved of his vnderstanding, was suddenly missing, and by former speeches of his it seemed that he made himselfe away, whiles euery one was busie in mooring the ship, and none looking after him.

The sixteenth, wee got all in readinesse for erecting our Tents, which was that day effected, and a Guard placed for their reliefe.

On the seuenteenth, we landed halfe our Caske to be trimmed and seasoned. Choree the Saldanian presented me with a young Steere.

The eighteenth, we landed more of our Beere Caske to be washed, trimmed and seasoned, and supplied the wants of our men labouring about our Boates: also this day (Choree) the Saldanian departed from vs, carrying with him his Copper Armour and Iauelin, with all things belonging to him, promising to come againe to vs the third day after, but he neuer came againe.

The nine and twentieth, I sent George Downeton on land to obserue both the latitude and variation of this place, in regard of the great difference in our variations wee had found betweene my former Voyage in the Pepper-Corne, and this present Voyage: the latitude he found was thirtie foure degrees, and no odde minutes, and the variation one degree and fortie five minutes by an Azimuth, being Westerly variation, whereas for the most part all formerly haue made Easterly variation. This night wee dissolued our Tents and brought all our things aboard, and made readie our ship against the next day to depart, which we did accordingly.

the Bay.

The sixt of August, we came to an anchor in the Bay of Saint Augustine, in Saint Laurence Iland. But on sight of our comming the Inhabitants abandoned the place, that wee could haue no speech with them: we cut straight Timber for diuers vses. And afterwards wee got some refreshing of them. On the twelfth, we set saile.

The ninth of September, wee anchored in the Bay of Delisa in Socotora. The next day wee went on shore to salute the King, who was readie with his troupe to giue me entertainment, and told me of the Warres at present in India, the Mogoll and Kings of Decanie ioyning to roote the Portugals out of the Countrey. The reason whereof was, their taking of a shippe which came from Iedda in the Red Sea, wherein was three millions of Treasure. Hee also informed mee of Captaine Bests two great fights with the Portugals, with other newes of those parts. Heere I procured what refreshing wee could get, and bought of the King Alloes, two thousand seuen hundred twentie two pounds, and on the fourteenth departed.

the Hassanie.

The second of October, we had sight of land being on the Coast of Decany neere Dabul. Wee found great hinderance, till by obseruation we were taught to stay the ebbes and ply the floods.

The twelfth, we againe weighed and plyed the floods, and anchored the ebbes till the fourteenth day in the euening, and then anchored two miles and an halfe short of the Barre, where presently came a fleet of Frigats being fourteene saile and anchored neere vs, discovering themselves by their lights being darke: but seeing our readinesse by the lights out of our Ports, durst come no neerer vnto vs, so we rid quietly all night.

gats.

The fifteenth, early in the morning we weighed with the land-turne, and approaching somewhat neere them, they also weighed and stood to the South-wards, and wee held on our course by the Barre towards South Swally, where soone after we arrived after much struing against contrary winds. As soone as I anchored I sent Master Molineux in his Pinnasse, and Master Spooner, and Samuell Squire in my Gellymatte to sound the depths within the sands. Master Molineux tooke a Channel in which in our former Voyage we had but five foot at low water, but now found three fathomes water, and Master Spooner found that where our Boats could not passe formerly by reason of shoalds, he had now seuen and eight foot water. In the after-noone, I seeing people ashore sent my Pinnasse to them, supposing some of our Merchants had beene come from Surat: but found otherwise to be some people of Cogenozan sent downe to discover what Nation we were; two of which came aboard to me, by whom I vnderstood further of their Warres with the Portugals; they besieged Damon and Diu, and that Mocrib Can was Generall of the Mogols forces against Damon, and also to my grieve, I vnderstood that he was Gouvernour, and as Vice-roy not onely ouer Surat, but also ouer all the Countrey neere about it; I esteeming him to be the greatest Aduersary to our Nation, and one that most fauoured the Portugals. This was my settled conceit by former experience. I vnderstood of the health of Master Aldworth and the rest, to whom I writ to hasten his presence, and sent it away by Baly Ball, together with the other Seruants of Cogenozan.

South Swally.

Cogenozan.

The sixteenth, in the morning early I sent my Purser and Pinnasse on land to buy such Commodities as I supposed might be brought, who about ten a clocke without buying any thing for our turne, returned with Master Aldworth our chiefe Merchant at Surat, and in his company one Richard Steele who came by land from Aleppo to Surat. Master Aldworth strived to perfwade me that Mocrib Can the Nabob was our friend, and that now was the best time by reason of their Warres (with the Portugals) for vs to obtaine good trade and all Priuiledges that in reason wee could demand; and for that both he and all the Countrey people did so much reioyce at our comming, therefore of necessitie could not but giue vs Royall entertainment. full words, yet euer wishing some other in his place, and that Mocrib Can had beene further away, of whom I rested still in doubt, that we should haue no free trade but according to his accustomed manner; and to see and to be priue to all that euer past, and restraine all others, which then I tooke to bee an iniurie forced by him to crosse vs, and not by the direction of the King, which in time, though too late, we were better aduised. And notwithstanding the remembrance of his name giuen him by the King, Mocrib, which is as much as his owne bowels, and Chan which is as much as great Lord. Yet I was too much deluded by being perswaded that his state in fauer of the King stood tottering, and might easily be made subiect to any disgrace, by any complaint of things done contrary to the will or humour of the King, which made vs somewhat too bold and thereby preiudice to our businesse when we found him opposite to our wils, and as wee thought contrary to reason. I inquiring of the state of our businesse, and the health of our people, Master
Aldworth informed that Paul Canning and diuers others were long since dead, and that Thomas Kerridge had long since resided at Court in his roome, and that there was no more Factors but only himselfe and William Bedulph at Surat.

The seuenteenth, in the morning I called a Councell to aduise of all things heere to bee effected, and who fittest to send to Agra to remayne as Liedger there, and then entring into the fixe Interrogatory Articles included in the second Article of our Commission, requiring Master Ald- worths direct answers to euery question should be demanded.

The first, in what fauour Paul Canning was with the Emperour and his Councell, and how he carried himselfe in the businesse at Court that was committed vnto him. Hee answered, that at his first comming to Court, hee was well respected by the Emperour, vntill such time as the Je-suites made knowne he was a Merchant, and not sent immediately from the King: but afterwards he was neglected as himselfe complained, and for his carriage there, Master Aldworth saith that for any thing he knoweth, it was sufficient and well.

The third, then demanding whether needfull to maintaine one as Liedger at Court, his an-swere was, not only necessarie, but also by the King required, that one of our Nation doe reside there, and therefore fitting to be a man of good respect for preuenting and righting any wrongs that may be offered by the Iesuites our Aduersaries, as also by his direction may stand in great stead for the buying or selling of Commodities.

The sixth, concerning the charge of him that should reside at Court, hee saith to bee about 30 three hundred pounds per annum, by Paul Cannings estimate, but some-while after when his Writings came to be searched, his estimate is found to be five, sixe or seuen hundred pounds per annum.

Question being made whether it were fit Master Edwards should proceed vnder the title of a Merchant, according to the strictnesse of the Companies Commission, his opinion was by Master
Cannings experience, that then he would not be respected by the King.

The foure and twentieth in the morning, Cogenozan came downe to the water-side with a great traine as their manner is, resting himselfe in my Tent till my landing: vnto whom I repaired a hoare accompanied with all the Merchants and a good guard of Halberts, Shot, and Pike;
I hauing a Coach to carrie me vp from the Boat to a place neere the Tent; and at the instant when I alighted from the Coach, he came forth of the Tent, addressing himselfe to meete mee, and after salutations returned into the Tent and sate downe. And before any other conference began he was let to know, that there was a Present to be deliuered him for the Nabob, which was presently brought in, Viz. One Case with sixe Kniues, two paire of Kniues, sixe Sword Blades, sixe Spanish Pikes, one Combe-case, one Looking Glasse, one Picture of Mars and Venus, one Picture of Paris in iudgement, two Muscouie Hides, and one great gilded Case of Bottles full of rich and strong Waters. Then for himselfe I caused a Present to bee deliuered him, which was six Kniues in single sheathes, foure Sword Blades, two Pikes, one Combe-case, one Looking-glasse, one Picture of Moses, one Case of Bottles, in regard of the promise of the Nabob to our people that what Cogenozan should do, he would performe. I therefore moued for the enlarging of our Priuiledges; for the lessening of our Custom, especially at Baroch to haue a Bazar or Market by the waterside, that we might buy Beef for the peoples eating (in regard that other flesh was not good for them) according to the Kings Firma giuen. His answer was, that if I would assist them against the Portugals, the Nabob would do vs all the fauour that in his power lyeth; but for the Custom of Baroch it was out of his power, for the King had let it to another by rent, and could not be helpen. A Bazar we should haue, but for Bullocks and Kine, the King had granted his Firma to the Banians for a mightie summe yeerely to saue their liues. In summe, wee found nothing that he had power to grant vs: yet willing to leaue mee in content, wishing that I would send some of my Merchants along with him to the Nabob, that our businesse on both sides might bee considered on, and receiue answeres accordingly from each other. I sent along with him Master Aldworth, Master Ensforth (who desired to goe vp because he was not well) Master Dodsworth, Master Musford and others; which when they had access to the Nabob, two or three dayes after he would know againe their demand, which was as aforesaid. Then he desired to know if we would goe with our ships to fight against Damon for him, and then he would doe vs any fauour; but that was answered, that we could in no wise auouch the doing thereof, for that there was peace

betweene our King and the King of Spaine. Then he demanded if we would goe to the Barre and ride there and fight with them that should come to preiudice them. That we could neither covenant to doe, for it was a breach of the peace betweene our two Kings as aforesaid. Then he answered, that if we would doe nothing for him, he would doe nothing for vs. Diuers of the principall Merchants of the Towne came to moue our Merchants that I might giue way to the Nabob his reasonable request, and though I did grant for satisfying his minde, yet I might doe what I list: and that they all knew the Frigats might for all my riding at the Barre come in and out on each side me. Answer was returned it was vnfit for me to halt, but whatsoeuer I promised, I must maintaine, though it were to the losse of my life, and all vnder my command: and that I would not be hired to fight with the Portugals, which is contrary to my Kings Commission (vnlesse they gaue me first cause) not for the World; neither would I bee withheld from fighting with them if they prouoked me, not for his wealth, which difference it seemes he tooke small notice of; but that we refused to fulfill his desire, he was much moued, and in all things crost our proceedings all that he might: infomuch that he had almost queld all former conceiued hopes of happie Commerce in this place. Continually deuising what to doe, or what course to take, this meanes failing vs, as I see no likelihood to the contrary, I made inquisition of Gengomar and Castelletta, also of Gogo, but could heare small incouragent for transportation to seeke better dealing; so with doubts wee rested perplexed a long while, yet returning to our businesse at the shippes.

20 The seiten and twentieth, in the morning Nicholas Vfflet going alhoare found all the people of Smally departed thence in the night: he demanding the reason, they told him that the Nabob had exprelly commanded them so to doe, as also the people from the Tents. Whereupon hee inquiring further thereof, was certified that our Merchants were stayed at Surat, and that attempting to passe over the bridge, they were perforce with-held, and receiued some store of blowes by the guard thereto appointed by the Nabob, with whom in company to attend vpon them, the Gunners Boy and his companion formerly supposed to haue beene runne away, were also well beaten and withheld as the rest.

30 The one and thirtieth, we began to take in fresh water, because our stay heere was so vncertaine, not knowing how suddenly our departure might bee. This day Thomas Smith the Masters Boy being swimming about the ship, had most of the out-side of his thigh bitten away by a great Fish which pulled him vnder the water, yet he comming vp againe swamme to the shippe side, and got vp to the bend, where as soone as he was come vp, he presently founded. Then the Chirurgion brought him into the Gunners Roome to see what might be done for his recouerie: but the issue of bloud had beene so great that they could not reuiue him, but presently dyed, and towards night was buried ashore.

40 The second of Nouember towards night Master Aldworth and Master Elkinton came downe from Surat, where they had left Master Ensworth very sick: they declared vnto me their proceedings with the Nabob as formerly, and of their reconciliation, with large promises of future good respect, with free Trade throughout all their Countries. This hard measure hitherto offered vs by the Nabob, I cannot attribute vnto any hatred or ill will borne to our Nation, but his owne doubt and feare of vs, least I should ioyne with the Portugals against him: which feare was the more increased in him, in that I would not agree to fight against Damon. And his suspicion and doubt was the more increased by a Knauish deuce in the subtile and lying Iesuites, who tooke occasion by my denyall, voluntarily without cause, to fight against the Portugals at Damon, or otherwise. They pretended a Letter from the Vice-Roy, to giue notice to the Nabob, that vnlesse he made peace with them, that both he and the English his friends should ioyne together and come against Surat; which Deuillish deuce did vs much hinderance in our businesse, by the Nabobs continuall doubt, which he made of our friendship towards them. And besides unfortunately by their extreame vnkind vsage Master Aldworth in the midst of his haste, and thinking to qualifie their rigorous courses, and yet altogether ignorant of the practice of the Iesuites, in threatening-wise wisht them to take heed, that by their ill vsage of vs, they doe not force vs to ioyne with the Portugals against them; which proued a kind of confirming the Iesuits former report from the Vice-Roy, as altogether making against vs. Likewise, hee forbade all Trade with our people aboard, which at first wee likewise thought had proceeded out of his troublesome humour to crosse vs; but afterwards we were aduised the contrary by Thomas Kerridge his Letter, who declared that he and all Sea-port Gouvernours, had expresse Commandement from the Mogoll, not to suffer any Trade with vs, till they had made choise of all strange things that we bring, and they to buy them for the Kings vse, and to send it vnto him.

50 The third, I called a Councell concerning our businesse, viz. how farre wee might proceed in their aide against the Portugals, and examined our Commission in that point; also we appointed the Merchants for the seuerall places of imployment, aswell those that were to stay heere, as those also that were to proceed on the Voyage. The goods that were at Surat of the twelfth Voyage came aboard, which was of Indico fixtie Bales, and Cotton Yarne eleuen Packes.

borne some stroke in the ordering of our businesse at Surat, and the rather considering the turbulent head-strong and haughtie spirit of ( ) euer striving to sway all things according to his owne will, and distastfull to others which without priuate respect aymed at the common good, whose better discretion hath beene inured to more humilitie. But the estate of our businesse so vncertaine, partly by the vncertainty of the Nabob and people here, and partly in regard of the Portugals (which we daily doe heare are arming vs) besides I vnderstand the Nabob makes question of restitution of the goods taken by Sir Henrie Middleton in the Red Sea, at vnder rates as they say, though I know they had goods for goods to a halfe pennie: yet not knowing what might come of it, I thought best to keepe my selfe neere my charge, and referred all things ashore to the care of such Merchants in generall as were of my Councell, and in whom for most part I had constant affiance.

The two and twentieth, I finished my Letters for Persia, viz. one for the Company, one for Sir Robert Sherley, and another for aduice to Richard Steele.

Rude dealing.

The three and twentieth, Lacandas the Banian came downe with newes of some discontent or hard speeches that had past betweene the Nabob and the Merchants, but now that they were reconciled and friends; the cause was, for that Master Edwards would not let him see the Presents, which at last he was driuen to yeeld to. All the chiefe Merchants wrote vnto me seuerally that there was a certaine report that the Vice-Roy was arming against vs. It pleased God to call to his mercie Master Ensworth and Timothy Wood, both in an houre. John Orwicke, Robert Young, and Esay But set forwards to prouide such Clothes and Cotton Yarne, as wee formerly agreed on.

Nabobs gifts.

The five and twentieth, Master Edwards wrote me of the comming of three great men with seuen Firmanes from the Mogore, in whose presence the Nabob bestowed on him eight hundred & fifty Mamudies: ten fine Baltas, thirtie Topseeles, and thirtie Allizaes: he further gaue to Master Elkington and Master Dodsworth ten Topseeles, and a Cloke to Master Aldworth, & another to Master Elkington, Master Dodsworth hauing had one before: he promised free Trade in all places vnder his command, and good refreshing for our people aboard.

Crowther and Steele goe to Persia.

The seuen and twentieth, John Crowther came from Surat, who aduised mee that the chiefe Merchants had chosen him to accompany Richard Steele into Persia, and therefore came to take his leaue of me, and to fetch his things from aboard. This day Master Edwards wrote to mee by Edmond Aspinol for fiftie Elephants teeth, and indifferently chosen in their size and bignesse, for there was a Banian Merchant in price for them all, if they could agree, which Teeth the same day were sent vp to him.

Presents to the Generall.

The sixth of December, the Nabob Mocrif Chan seemed now to be ashamed, for that he had not since my arriual heere shewed me the least taste of courtesie; and therefore beeing desirous to excuse himselfe, intreated Master Elkington to accompany aboard the great Banian that brought our Teeth, and Lacandas the Banian Merchant of the Iuncke of the King of Cushan, whom he made choice of, and entertayned (by reason of his former familiaritie with our people) to buy among them such Commodities as they had to sell, viz. Sword Blades, Knives, Looking-glasses. By them he sent me a Present of two Corge of course Baltas, ten fine Baltas, tenne Topseeles, ten Cuttonies and three Quilts, certifying mee that the Nabob was minded to come downe to see me within two or three dayes at the most. At their going ashore I gaue them five great shot. They told me that the Nabob heard from Goa, that for certaine, the Vice-Roy was preparing to come against vs, with all the force hee could make to fight with vs: likewise that the Nabob requested me that I would waite a ship or two of his off the Coast for two or three dayes, being bound for the Red Sea. But I answered, that hauing once put off from the Coast, the wind being aduerse, I could not recouer it againe: but if he would further our dispatch that we might be readie in conuenient time, then would I doe any thing reasonable.

Newes of the Vice-Royes preparation against the English.

The ninth, the Nabobs sonne came to the water-side, but would not come aboard; whereupon I went ashore to him, who against my landing sent a Horse to fetch mee, hee willed mee to sit downe vpon the Mount with him, which I did. Then hee commanded part of his Horsemen to shew me some pleasure vpon the sands, by warlike chafing each other, after the manner of Decanie, from whence they were: then he desired to heare some Ordnance goe off, and I gaue him eleuen shot. Hee at present would drinke no wine, but being departed, hee sent for it, and for a Fowling Peece which he found in the hands of one of our people, both which I sent him with a Bowle to drinke his wine.

§. II.

He sixteenth, Master Elkington wrote me that the Nabob told him that the Portugall Frigats had burnt Gogo with many Gonges or Villages thereabouts, and tenne great ships, one whereof was the Reheme, and one hundred and twentie small Vessels: and that he was displeased at me for not shooting at them when they past by vs; which did renue his suspicion of our friendship with the Portugals: to all which Master Elkington answered him, yet he could not rest satisfied.

Gogo burnt, & diuers ships.

The three and twentieth came two Boates more for Lead. This day wee saw twentie two Frigats, who in the night came to anchor betweene vs and the Riuers mouth, where they roade most part of the next day.

Twentie two Portugall Frigats.

The foure and twentieth, in the morning we saw foure Boates comming downe the Riuer towards vs, who seeing the Frigats returned, two Frigats chaling them vp the Riuer: but seeing they could not fetch them vp, went ashore, and fired two or three poore houses, and tooke away two or three head of Cattell, and so returned backe to their Company, who in the after-noone went vp into the Riuer together.

The five and twentieth, in the morning early we saw five or sixe Frigats vnder saile an houre or two: after, we perceiued a small Boat vnder saile standing towards vs, but was presently chased by two Frigats, the men in the small Boat runne her aground, and forsooke her, so that the Frigats could not float where she lay, the tyde ebbing so fast, therefore they departed without doing any further harme vnto her.

The sixe and twentieth, in the morning I sent the Hope to the Northwards a good way from the rest of the Fleet, to see if the Portugals would charge vpon her.

The seuen and twentieth, early in the morning, the Frigats came and made a brauado before our ship, and then before the Salomon, which was next vnto vs, and from her to the Hope which roade a great way from vs, who droue directly vpon her with all their men stowed, not a man to be scene. The Master twice hailed them, but they would not speake, whereupon they let flye at them with their Bow-pieces, hauing no other to ply vpon them, which made them with some losse to depart: the Master doubting, that if hee had not shot, they would haue boarded him, or mischieued him by fire, they comming vpon the aduantage both of winde and cyde, that none of the rest of the ships could come to the rescue; and in such sort right a head, that hardly can he trauesse any piece of Ordnance at them. In the after-noone I sent the Salomon to accompany the Hope, who went to the North-wards of her, and made five or sixe shot at the Frigats, who roade at anchor hard by the Hope. But we did not perceiue any hurt she did them: wherefore I commanded my Gunner to shoot a Peece to warne them to giue ouer, whereupon the Salomon stood in againe and came to anchor.

Their repulse.

The eight and twentieth, in the morning I went in the Pinnasse aboard the Hope and Salomon, to vnderstand the occasions of their shooting: and the Portugals seeing our Boates passe to and againe, remoued in the after-noone, and roade a little without vs to cut off all intercourse. In the meane time, came the former Boat which was chased a hoare aboard the Gift, and brought some Letters from Master Elkington. The Master sent the Bearer with the Letters to mee in the Hope, where hauing answered Master Elkingtons Letter, I sent him backe againe to the Gift, to goe thence in the night to Surat: but as the Gelliwat returned, the Frigats chased her, which I perceiuing, caused to weaue to the Gelliwat to returne, which they not seeing held on her way. But the Frigats held her so close that they were within shot of her, and made one faire shot at her, and had not the Gift let slip one Cable, and veered another, and plyed vpon them with her Ordnance, it would haue gone hard with them: which made them giue ouer the chase not without some damage: and late in the night vpon the tyde of ebbe, I commanded the Hope and Salomon to set saile and fall neerer to the other ships, and then I went aboard the Gift.

Other attempts.

The nine and twentieth, I perceiuing that my riding was of no auale to keepe the Frigats out of the Riuer, because they could passe to and fro ouer the sands, where wanted water for my ships to swimme; and that no Boates durst come to vs to fetch our goods for feare of the Frigats; neither could I heare from our friends ashore how all things past; therefore I set saile for Swally: but being but little wind and calme, it was the next day before we arriued there.

The fourteenth of Ianuarie, we heard of the approach of many Frigats, which roade at the Barre till next day within night, and then in the darke came from thence, and roade within shot of vs all night till the morning, when they weighed and went to the South-wards; whom I thought were the Mallabars, that the Nabob promised formerly to send mee: and therefore put forth a Flagge of Truce, and sent Master Spooner one of the Masters Mates towards them with the Gelliwat, and appointed him to haue an eye backe to our signes that wee would make, if we mistrusted any thing. I seeing the Gelliwat so neere, and no shew of friendship from them in answer of ours, put forth my flag which before was taken in, and shot a peece of Ordnance for a signe to my Boat to come aboard, which presently vpon sight thereof shee did, who was not scarce aboard, when our Centinell from top-mast head, discryed another Fleete of Frigats, who afterwards met together at the Barre, and went altogether into the Riuer: whereby I perceiued they were Portugals, and was glad that our men and Boat so well escaped their hands. I thinking these Frigats were forerunners of greater forces, caused all the decks to be cleered, and the Ordnance freed, and all things else fitting both for the Ordnance, Shot, and Barracadoes to bee in a readinesse.

The seuenteenth in the night, the Frigats came all forth of the Riuer, they beeing in the morning at the point of the Barre. 10

The Portugall
forces consisted of fixe Gallions, and three lesser shippes, besides the sixtie former Frigats, besides two Gallies.

The eighteenth, there came to the water side Maugie, the Banian Captaine formerly named, with an other great man, the sonne of Clych Cann, to whom I went ashore: whither not long after word was brought me from aboard, that they discryed a farre off a Fleete of ships looming very bigge, which ashore we could not see by reason of the lownesse of the place. And after leaue taken on both sides, he departed, and I returned aboard, causing all things to be set in a readinesse, which was speedily performed. Towards night, we made them to be fixe Gallions and three lesser shippes, besides the sixtie former Frigats, the two Gallies beeing not yet come: the tide being spent, they anchored till the next day.

The nineteenth, they plyed vp to the entrance of our new Channell, where they came to an anchor, and the two Gallies came vp to them, where one of the great ships beeing too forward, came too neare the sands, and touched, but soone got off againe. The Nabob sent the Sabandar, and diuers other principall men of the Towne to the Vice-roy, with a Present of great prouisions, they making some treaty of peace, but brake off, effecting nothing, great policie on both sides being vsed. On the Nabobs side, to the increafe of my griefe: for he and all the Countrey in generall despaired of my being able to withstand so great forces, and began to make preparatiue before-hand to claw the Vice-roy with Presents: for I once ouerthrowne, his turne had come next, to endure a great assault, or to make such peace as the enemy desired. For, peace with them was it that stood with the Vice-roys policie most to desire, for the setting trade a foote between them. On the other side, the Vice-roy seeing the tractableness of the Nabob, and his seeming desire to make peace, for the Present set light of it; supposing to haue made it with great royalty and profit for his owne part, after he had ouer-throwne vs, which he made no doubt easily to accomplish; which once performed, he expected greater Presents; and great submission on their parts to him being the conquerour. But it pleased God, who beheld the vniustnesse of his attempt, to turne it contrary to both their expectations: for the Vice-roy failing of his purposes in attempt against me, seeing he could not recouer so much as a Boats thoule from me in all the time he spent, with losses and disgrace about it; afterward was forced to reuiue the former neglected motion of peace with the Nabob; which Nabob beeing strengthened with a Moneths experience, notwithstanding all their bragging threats, seeing he was not able to remooue our small forces one foot out of their place, gaue answer: Since with so great an army he could not preuaile against foure Merchant-ships, I wil make no peace with you: and sowas the Vice-roy frustrated of both his hopes. Yet now after some digression, returning againe to my daily businesse. 30 40

uention of the Generall.

Formerly hearing of the Vice-royes forces to come, we imagined it would not bee so great as now by view it seemes, therefore high time to enter into best considerations, how by Gods help to resist the same. The odds and aduantages he had ouer me, put me to my shifts in casting vp all things that made against me, being ouer-topt by his forces, whom I esteemed furnished with the principall ships and meanes of India, and people of greatest ranke and valour in these parts, in likelihood too hard for vs when we should put into the deepe water; nay, I know not how to put into deepe water, but they alwayes ready to intercept, ouer-charge, or force me a ground irrecoverable on one side or other: my disadvantages so great in putting out, and their smaller Vessels I knew might much with fire-workes, or otherwise hazard vs within at anchor where we rode, where I had hope their great ships through the shoaldnesse of water, could not or durst not put in. The things with me to giue me hope was, my people (though much with death and sickenes shortned) all from the highest to the lowest, seeme very couragious and comfortable; though (for the most) ignorant, either of the danger, or how to preuent it, yet pleasing to me to see their willingness. My care is not small, how to doe my best in maintaining the Honour of my Country, nor negligent in the memory of the estates and charge of my friends, and employers in this Iourney; not onely for the hazard of this at present committed to my charge, but also all hope of future times, if I should now be ouer-throwne: by reason the enemy in getting the vpper hand of me, would make his peace with these people vpon what conditions he lust, to the expelling of our Nation this Countrey for euer. And what my care was for the safetie of my people, I referre to the consideration of such fathers, as are tender ouer the safetie of their obedient children. All this while my whole powers so kept in action, that I found little time to conuerse, or almost shew my selfe sensible of the dangers approaching; yea, euer as I could be solitary or free from others; 60

thers; very earnestly crauing aide and assistance from the Lord of hosts, and from that mightie and mercifull God, who hath manifold wayes formerly deliuered me; often I say desiring his Maiestie so to guide and direct me, that I might omit nothing which might tend to the safety of my owne charge, nor the danger of the enemy: and that God would grant my request, I had a strong confidence; and the same againe often queld by the assembly of my manifold and grievous offences, and but for Gods mercie sufficient to drowne the world; whereby forced afresh by prayer to pierce the heauens, and flie vnto God for aide against both inward and outward assaults. I so resolu'd by Gods assistance what to doe, if my assistants the Masters of the Ships would yeeld thereunto; knowing if we should receiue a foile riding at our anchor, our disgrace will be greater, and our enemies little abashed: but in moouing, I might moue the Vice-roy in greedinesse and pride, to doe himselfe wrong against the sands; hoping that that might bee an occasion whereby God might draw him to shorten his owne forces, and so might open the way for our getting out amongst the rest: which would rather haue been for a necessitie, then any way hopefull: for at present our goods on the way, and daily by some and some expected to come hither, and if once gotten out, vnlesse it had pleased God to make vs conquerours, and driue the Vice-roy cleane away, I could not returne into my place, where onely (and no where else) I could take in my landing: I esteeming the Vice-roy to hold his honour in so high regard, that he must haue been dead before he would haue giuen way. I also, though helpless, remembred two great aduantages the enemy had of me in this warre. Euer before my people came to fight, they are first tired, or halfe spent with the labour of the ship, as heauing at Capstaine, and getting vp our anchors, setting of sailes, and other labours, which greatly quells their courages, making them in hot Countreys both weary and faint; and then of necessitie must become souldiours: whereas the Vice-roy his souldiours come fresh to fight, beeing troubled with no labour, which is done by slaues and inferiour sea-people, which are neuer accompted companions of Souldiours. Secondly, if the Vice-roy loose many men in his ships, he may be supplied againe out of his fresh supplies, to be fetcht from their neere townes by their Frigats, whereas we could not haue one man supplied, how many soeuer we should haue slaine or disabled.

The best help in trouble.

This present Thursday at night, I hauing no Merchants at all aboard, but all employed in the Countrey (besides those with Master Elkington at the house at Surat) I sent for all my Masters to supper, with some mates, where (as the time serued) I began speech of our present businesse, desiring euery man to speake freely, how he thought best for vs to worke, considering to the present straight we seemed to be in; alleading my confidence to be (for all the bragging of these Portugals abounding in force) that God would not suffer their iniurious attempts vpon vs, that haue been tender not to wrong them in the East. I haue had also a ialous conceit carried ouer mee by the Nabob, and principals of the Countrey, as though I had been confederate with the Portugals, for that I did not shoot at the saucy-gouerned bragging Frigats. I found all the Masters to my hearts desire, willing and tractable to whatsoeuer I should wish; and had some few speeches about our prouident mooring, as also of the remoouing somewhat lower downe. But ere long, I let them know my conceit, desiring their free opinion therein: which was, that now our ships were as fit for fight as we could make them, and our danger by night if we rode still (worke neuer so prouidently) to prevent is not small; therefore I thought fittest in the morning at low water, to send downe one ship to ride, as we might haue water enough at low water for all our ships: for then none can come to annoy her, which may prepare the Vice-royes mind to some attempt at high water, and as the Flood comes, the other three should beare downe against the streame (the spring now neere the highest) to prooue what attempt the Vice-roy would giue, to attend it, and worke accordingly as we shall see reason, in hope that God will put designs into the mind of the Vice-roy, that he may commit some error, to the weakning of his owne forces; which if he doe, then will be fittest time in the darke of the night following, to put out when it shall be vnfit for them to come to saile to hinder vs. Or if we see reason, we may with the wind worke euery day to and againe with our sailes on the Flood, to be alwaies ready in action, when the tide is aloft, which may somewhat the courage of the people quell and dismay, though the Gallants seeme to thinke otherwise. This no sooner propounded, but liked for the best way, and so we agreed to proceed, and for that I found M. Molineux willing at low water in the morning to fall downe with the Hope, which was accordingly performed.

Consultation.

The twentieth in the morning, at low water I sent downe M. Molineux with the Hope, to prepare the Enemy to some attempt, when the tide shall be vp; which beeing done, vpon the flood we also with the other three ships stood after her. The Vice-roy and all the worthy Knights about him, supposed I had been flying, hastened also as the streame would permit them, towards the entrance to stop my coming forth; but contrariwise we all anchored short of the Hope, not altogether of purpose to leaue her destitute of our helpe, but rather doubting of depth for our ships (so farre downe) to ride at low water. I was no sooner at anchor, and gone downe to my Cabbin, and set downe to write, to giue my friends and Merchants ashore notice of my purposes and resolution, howsoeuer it might please God to dispose of me; and that they might know it to be no rashnesse, but in good discretion to tend vpon my best aduantages to preiudice my enemies;

mies; but presently I had notice, that three ships with most of the Frigats were before the wind, running stem-long aboard the Hope, and the Gallions after them, so farre as the sands gaue leaue. We assayed to weigh our anchor, but time not permitting, wee cut Cable, and set saile for the Hope's rescue, but the Enemies ships were aboard her, and entred their men before we came sufficiently neere them; their men being entred with great shew of resolution, but had no quiet abode there, neither could rest in their owne ships, nor make them loose from the Hope, for our great and small shot; so that when the principall were kild, the rest in great number, for quietnesse sake, leapt into the Sea, where their Frigats tooke many of them vp. But first of purpose to haue burnt the Hope with them, they made preparation to fire their owne ships, which was well performed without harme to the Hope, (praised be the Lord of heauen) for so soone as the fire was wel kindled, the ships of fire were let loose, and droue a ground on the sands, where they burnt till the flowing water came and quencht them; whiles day light lasted, we continued changing of shot in all our ships with the Gallions, they being on the out-side of a spit of sand, and we on the inside; by which they did little harme to our Huelles, but to our ropes and sailes ouer head. In this conflict besides them which were wounded, we lost fise men, by great mischance the Hope's main top, top-saile, top-mast, and shrouds came a fire, and burnt away, with a great part of the maine mast, by the fire-works that were in the said top, the man being slaine that had the charge thereof. This mishap kept vs from going forth into deepe water to try our fortunes with the Vice-roy, but were put to our shifts, not knowing how, or by what meanes to get the said Mast cured.

The one and twentieth, I sent to weigh the anchor we had cut the day before. The two and twentieth, I vnderstood that many great men, with fise or sixe hundred horse, and a Portugall Father came downe to Swalley, to send on the morrow the Father with three or foure principall Moorees, to conclude a peace betwixt them: and the Nabob sent me word that he sought no such thing, and was resolved to make none, but wherein we should be included. He also granted me what Timber we should want, which we made vse of. Likewise we were promised prouisions. The Portugals continued quiet.

The fise and twentieth, the Maccadam of Swally came to me, and told me that the former Father had sent to intice him to poison the former Well, where hence we had our water, which he would not yeeld vnto, and therefore had put into the Well some liue Tortoiles, who would by their death demonstrate the poysoning thereof, if it should by them be performed. At night came part of the hundred and seuentie bales of Indico to the water side, which was presently fetcht aboard. Isaac Beg sent me a Present of the fruits of his owne garden. This day came downe the rest of the Timber for the Hope's Mast.

The seuen and twentieth, I sent all our Boats to sound the Swach at low water; chiefly to keep the Enemy alwayes ignorant of what I intended: whither was sent by the Enemy to preuent them, one Gally and fise Frigats, thinking to cut off our Boats, whereof they failed, as of all other things they attempted.

The eight and twentieth, the Nabob sent to the Vice-roy great store of prouision, Goats, Bread, Plantans, &c. with a banquet of sweet meates. Cogenozan sent me a Present of fise Bullocks. Diuers of our men died here of Fluxe and diseases.

The one and thirtieth in the morning, we receiued aboard from Cambaya fiftie bales Indico. In the afternoone came Cogearson Allee aboard, who presented me with diuers things, viz. Goats, great store of Bread, Roit-meat, Plantans, and Sugar, &c. With him came an old acquaintance of mine; a Persian, he reported vnto me that there is newes come from Damon, that the Portugals carried thither three hundred and fiftie men to be buried, and that this newes is most certain: and by our estimate, there cannot be lesse then an hundred more kild and burnt in their ships, besides those drowned, which the tide did cast vp ashore. They also related to me, that not onely here in India they found opposition, but also the Persians against Ormuz, and the Malays at Malacca, are in armes against the Portugals: and whereas there had been speech of a peace to bee concluded betweene the Viceroy and Mocrib Can, he wisht me to assure my selfe it was broken off, and would none be. I found his loue, and tooke great content in his long staying with mee, whole presence I thirsted to see, and till now he could neuer get leaue of the Nabob to come to see mee (which without no man dare, or will be so bold) who proceeds by the great charge he hath from the King, that all things of worth, should be procured by the Nabob for the Kings vse; which holds him in such doubt and ielousie, least any thing should passe by any other meanes to his disgrace, whereby he is inforced to vse strange and seuerer courses to restraine the same. The day being farre spent, I returned him with a Present, gaue money to all his people, let him see the cast of the Bullets of some of our Great Ordnance; they tooke their leaue and departed.

§. III.

Portugall supplies, Fire-boates frustrated, seeke peace and refused, their departure: Enteruiew of the Nabob and Generall: departure of the English.

10 He third of Februarie, there came to the water side twentie foure Bales Indico, seuen February 3.
 20 packs white Bastas, seuen packs blacke Bastas, sixe packs Cotton-yarne, foure packs blue Bastas, three packs Caudikens, one pack Creany, al which were presently fetcht aboard: this day also the Vice-royes supplies came in sight, which were two ships of Supplies sent the Vice-Roy.
 burthen, two Iunkes, and eight or tenne of the Countrey Boates. The Nabob sent Lacandas to informe me, that these supplies were not for warre, but fild full of combustible matter to fire, and so to be let driue with the tyde vpon our ships in the night; which aduise I was glad to vnder-stand, and addressed my selfe also to preuent that, and all other their attempts with smaller ships.
 The Spring now neere the highest, and fittest for their assaults, which euery tide I expected: and to shew that I was in a readinesse to intertaine them, as also how little I cared for them (hauing all the time formerly ridden without the like) I purposed and performed the setting and cleering our watch, Morning and Euening, with a Volley of shot from euery ship, and the best Peece in 30 my shippe directed to the Prow of the Vice-roy, which I did to daunt the courage of them hee must employ, and to try his temper, whether it would make him angry or no: and I still thinke The brauers braued.
 it prooued to good end. It pleased God this day at night, when I had least leasure to mourne, to call to his mercie my onely Son George Downton, who early the next morning was buried ashore, and the Volleys aforesaid, appointed to try the temper of the Vice-roy, serued also to honour his buriall. Death of the Generalls son.

This morning also came to me on Monsa Attale a Malabar Captaine, (with his troope attending to visit me, expecting some businesse this day by the Portugals to be attempted; whom I intertained with all kind respect, and by conference made the best vse of his company that I might;
 by drawing from him the description of the principall Ports and Harbours in his Countrey, and 30 manifesting the desire I had to be acquainted with him, and to intertaine loue, league, and fami-liaritie between the English and them, with a mutuall trade and traffique one with another: the which with great desire he seemed to imbrace, willing me to giue him some Letters of my hand, for their ships to carry to shew to my Country-men, wheresoeuer they should meet them: which I deliuered, as also a Letter for him to moue their King for the kind vsage of our Nation, whensoeuer any of our ships should arriue in any of his Harbours, and so after leaue taken, he departed, I presenting him with a Sword blade, and three or foure kniues. The Master of the Hope complained, that besides those presently killd, he had many hurt, bruised, and disabled for seruice:
 wherefore I sent him for supply, three men from the Gift, foure from the Hector, and foure from the Solomon.

40 The fifth, I receiued letters from M. Aldworth from Baroch, who writes of their arriual there, Rebutes af-sault.
 and that the day before, nine Courses from Baroch, they were set vpon by two hundred theeuers, Raspooses, with Pikes, small shot, and Bowes and Arrowes: and skirmishing a little while with them, they fled, three of them being killed, and more wounded; they hauing shot Humfrey El- kingston thorow the thigh, and killed one of the horses that Surder Canne sent to guard our men; and Master Aldworthes horse likewise receiued a shot. The Nabob sent me word that the Vice-Roy would assault this day, and therefore sent Gogenozan to guard the Land; who came to the water-side and sent his sonne Mamod lehad aboard to see mee, with a Caeleer, called Kemagee, the sonne of Leckdarsee, Raspooso of Guigomar, or Castelletto (who maintained warre with the Mogore and Portugall together a long time) they entreated leaue to see and partake in the fight:
 50 who seeing no attempt that day giuen, stayed aboard all night; and the Raspoose seeing the back-wardnesse of the enemy, went the next day ashore: but the other desiro is to see the issue thereof, stayed two or three dayes longer aboard; and then seeing nothing would bee done by the enemy, he departed.

The eight in the fore-noone, we receiued more Indico aboard. In the after-noone all the Fri- Policie of the Portugalls.
 gats, with the two Iunkes and two Gallies, came driuing vp with the flood, making shew of some attempt at the instant, either by fire, (which I most doubted) or otherwise: whereupon we all weighed to goe nearer to them, who no sooner perceiued it, but they altogether made away as fast as they might, and we came to an anchor not farre from our former place. This de-uice was nothing but to make vs think that those Fire-boates should come from the Northwards, 60 that we might not mistrust their comming from the Northwards: and therefore the next day against night, they assembled both Iunkes, Frigats, and Gallies all together, a little without the sands, to take away all suspicion of the North from vs: which I well perceiued, and did alwayes resolute, that that way was the place of most danger for vs: And therefore gaue a speciall charge of good looking out both wayes, but chiefly that way: which accordingly fell out; for that a little within night we did discern them (betweene vs and a great light to the Westward, vpon the Iland of Gogo) creeping to the Northwards vpon the flood, and then vpon the last quarter ebbe, about ten of the clock in the dark of the night, before the rising of the Moone, there came driuing downe two Fire-boats, being towed by Frigats, whom we discovered before they came neare vs, and plyed at them both with our Ordnance and small shot, whereby wee beat off the Frigats that towed them, who durst aduenture no further with them, but turned them off, who came driuing with the tide a prettie distance from the other. The first droue cleere of the Gift, Hector and Salomon, and came thwart the Hopes Haulé, and presently blew vp, and with the blow much of their vngacious stuffe: but (blessed be God) to no harme to the Hope, for that by cutting her Cable, shee cleared her selfe. The latter came likewise vpon the quarter of the Hope, and then flamed vp, but did no harme, driuing downe the ebbe, and came foule of vs againe on the flood, the abundance of fewell continually burning, which our people in our Boats towed ashore, and the former suncke downe neare vs by day-light. This day I receiued a letter from Master Aldworth, who writes of the receipt of a letter from Thomas Kerridge, specifying that Nicholas Whittington is distracted, and out of his right senses, and that he writeth somewhat doubtfully of Richard Steele.

Two Fire-boats more,

Other Fire-boats,

The tenth at night, neare about the same time as before, there came two Fire-boats together, towed by foure or five Frigats, which bore directly vpon the Hector: but as soone as we discovered them, the Gift and the Hector let driue at them, both with great and small shot, that the Frigats which towed them, forsooke them, and forced the actors thereof to giue fire sooner then they would, and so turned them adrift: who comming burning directly towards her (but the wind being stiffe, droue them to leeward of her) within halfe an houre after wee perceiued a great many Boats driuing right with the Hector, at whom they and we discharged, which againe made the Frigats forsake them, and also those appointed for to act it, sooner then they expected, whereby they gaue fire only vnto two of them, being foure of them chained together: but the Hector edging to windward (and it pleased God to send a stiffe gale of wind at present, which droue them to Leeward off her) our Gunner made a shot at one of the Boats vnired, and struck her, whereupon shee tooke fire, and the vehemencie of the flames reached vnto the fourth, and set her a fire also, and so they droue ashore hard by our landing place. My Pinnasse took three of the actors in a small Cannow, wherein they thought, the exploit being done, to haue escaped. Two of them were brought aboard me, and the third was left aboard the Hector: and the Gelliwat returning aboard, found another which shee brought with her; one of them had his shoulder shot thorow. Thus it pleased God to disappoint all the malicious practises of our enemies against vs.

Vice-Roy seeke
h peace and is refused.

The eleuenth, the Vice-Roy seeing God crossing him in all his iniurious attempts, set saile and fell downe into the Barre, where he anchored. The cause of his anchoring there, I was desirous to vnderstand; I doubting it was for no other purpose, then to attempt the spoile of Surat: but I resolued, if he should so doe, to put out with my ships, and so to set vpon his Fleet (which would make his enterprise against Surat to bee giuen ouer) being desirous to assist the place where wee had so great a stocke, and so many of our Merchants. But the Vice-Roy would not trust mee so much, as to vnmans his ships, lest I should come against him; and therefore sent all the Frigats at night into the Riuer, with some to capitulate about a peace, whereof he had flat answer to the contrary, as aforesaid.

Other Fire-boats.

The twelfth, Lacandas came downe, informing me from the Nabob (he being so assured by the Iesuits, with whom he alwayes kept faire weather for his better securitie, if wee should be put to the worse) that there were sixe or eight Frigats gone to the Northwards, with foure or five Fire-boats to be let driue among vs in the night: and therefore wished carefully to looke out, for that it should be when we should least suspect. I allowed of his kindnesse, was glad of his carefull regard, although needing no such admonition, suspecting such practises as well when they were out of sight, and furthest from vs, as when they rode hard by vs.

Vice-Roy de-
parteth.

The thirteenth, for as much as Frigats or other vessels in the offing could not so well discern the place of our ships, in the darke night, for the shadow of the shoare, though very low; therefore in the times of their hellish Gun-powder practises, they had lights for ayme giuen them ashore, where fittest to come in. Now night by night we saw the like, in the like place as before; therefore esteeming some of their creatures againe to giue ayme for their comming to like practises, though no vessels seene by day-light. And being formerly warned, as aforesaid, to looke out for like attempts, in hope to take hold of this Fire-man, at night I sent William Gurdin ashore with twentie men, shot and pike, to incompasse and take the blaser of the said fire, supposing it to be some traytor inhabiting these nearest parts: who in his passage comming neare it, it would seeme presently out, and againe at an instant at another place contrary to their pursuit, and so playing in and out with them so long, that in the end they gaue it ouer, esteeming it some delusion of the Deuill, not knowing otherwise how to coniecture thereof. This present night the Vice-Roy set saile from the Barre, leauing in the Riuer some twentie of his Frigats, which continued the place, shifting to relieue each other sometimes more, and sometimes lesse, and kept in the the Mallabars Frigats, which were there in service for the defence of the Towne.

The fourteenth, the Nabob sent me a great man and a Souldier (whom in amitie hee named his brother) to visit me, who declared his opinion, that the Vice-Roy and all his Fleet were gone for Gon, but some Frigats to attend this River, and some to returne to Diu and Ormuz: which opinion of his I see no reason for it, could not allow of; esteeming him rather gone some-whither to refresh his people, to strengthen them against our putting forth to sea, when no sands should hinder his greatest ships to encounter me. He also told me that the King had sent downe forces, both to take Damon, and all the Country along the Sea-side; in which I gaue him courteous hearing, beleeuing as I saw reason: and that they were more willing to giue our Nation entertainment and trade, then euer they did the Portugals; the which I thought he might with very good reason speake, because the Portugall hath beene iniurious alwayes, and hath exercised many vile things vpon them. And yet vnlesse we continue able to mate and withstand the Portugals forces, they will vnlay that speech againe for their owne ease. After he had seene the ship, and viewed our Ordnance, and all our defensible preparations, hee desired leaue to depart with his traine; which with all courtesie and our Boats, in best fashion was performed.

Now our daily endeavour is, and long since hath beene to the clearing and beginning to lade the Hope for England; which by the ouer-topping and threatning forces of the Vice-Roy formerly, with reason I could not resolute to doe, though time and libertie would for present haue allowed the same: but by hastie snatches, as it came, euer we put it in confusedly (some into one ship, and some into another) not thinking fit in so casuall a time, to hazard all our Cargason in one ship. Besides, it was long before the Hopes burnt Mast was newly cured: and that I resolved to send home the Hope, it was not altogether for that I esteemed her fittest of burthen for the stowing of our goods presently provided; but withall, by the many impediments and disabilitie in the ship, in and by the Master and Carpenter daily complained of, as that the poste within the Rudder was vnshathed (a strange and dangerous neglect, and ouer-sight) and therefore fittest soonest to be returned, and the losse of our Quick-siluer in her, which lyeth vpon her Keele and Billages, another important cause.

The eighteenth, the Nabob sent Cogearson Allee, the Sabandar, and othet Merchants of Surat, to intreat my stay for fiftene dayes, which in no sort I would grant: then they importuned me for ten dayes, which yet by no meanes would I yeeld vnto, shewing how great preiudice to my Voyage my stay heere so long might be. The cause of their request, was their feare lest the Vice-Roy after my departure should come against Surat with all his forces. Wherefore I considering the weight of this businesse, and the preiudice it might be to our selues, and also being vnwilling to send them backe with deniall, seeing them much discontented thereat as a disgrace vnto them, and being loath at my departure to giue the Nabob any distast therein, that haue done to my vntermost hitherto to giue him all content possible; and knowing what future hindrance it might be to our businesse ashore: and last of all, seeing there was six dayes worke of the ten to be done in the Hope, before we could be possibly ready; I at length (when they were altogether out of hope thereof, and vpon departure) condescended to their request, whereat they were exceeding ioyfull, and departed.

Feare for Surat.

The two and twentieth at night, I receiued a Letter from Surat, informing me of the Nabobs comming to see me the next day.

The three and twentieth, in the morning, came downe two Elephants and six Camels, bringing his Tents and other prouisions.

The foure and twentieth, Master Aldworth came downe with the rest of the Merchants to finish all businesse with me.

The five and twentieth in the morning, the Nabob came downe with a very great traine, and sixe Elephants more, and had beene two houres ashore before I knew thereof: which when it was told me, being sory for my neglect of him, I sent Master Aldworth, Master Elkington, and Master Dodsworth ashore vnto him, to hold him in discourse vntill I came vnto him, which was not long after; I purposed to go vnto him (as a sonne vnto his father) in my doublet and hose, without any armes or great traines, according to custome, thereby to shew my trust and confidence that I reposed in him: but my friends perswaded me to the contrary, that I should rather goe well appointed and attended on with a sufficient guard, to continue the custome. Whereunto I consented (though in conclusion, it repented me that I had not taken mine own course) and went ashore with about one hundred and forty men, of pike and shot, who at my entrance into the Nabobs Tent gaue me a Volly of shot. The Nabob entertained me very kindly, seeming very ioyfull of my comming ashore to him: we sitting a while vnder a very faire Tent, open on all sides round about, enuironed with many people, as well of mine, as of his attendants. At length hee brought me into a more priuate roome neare adioyning, hauing on his side onely Alle Canne, a great Persian Captaine, and the Banian Henie for his Interpreter; and on my side, Master Aldworth, Master Elkington, and Master Dodsworth: where hee conferred both of the estate of this Countrey at present, and also of our affaires. At length I demanded of him if he would go aboard with me to see the shippe; whereunto he very willingly consented. Then he presented me with his owne sword (accompanied with many good words, telling mee that it was the custome of their Countrey, to honour Captaines with armes, that had deserued well) which as he told mee was made in his owne house, the hilts thereof being of massie gold, and in lieu thereof I returned him my sute, being Sword, Dagget, Girdle and Hangers, by mee much esteemed of, and which made a great deale better shew, though of lesse value. We came both forth of the priuate Tent, and I walked downe to the water-side, there staying his comming; whither he sent mee a present of ten Cuttonee quilts, and twentie Topseells; and not long after came the Nabob himselfe, and then we tooke boat together and went aboard, where hauing shewed him the lying of our Ordnance, and all our war-like preparation for defence, I presented him with a very faire standing guilt cup with a couer, and certaine very faire kniues, and a Rundlet of Muscadine, with some other toyes. Then he desired to see our Ordnance shoote off, and how farre they would carry their shot vpon the water, and I gaue him three. Then he would haue taken leaue, but I accompanied him to the shoare, and gaue him at his departure eleuen great shot. At our parting at the water-side, the Nabob gaue me foure baskets of Grapes; he likewise gaue the Gunners and Trumpeters between them two hundred Mamudies, and among the ships company five hundred Mamudies, and one hundred books of white Bastas, of two Mamudies a peece: and then after some complements we tooke leaue one of the other, and departed. I rowed along the shoare for my better getting aboard, the tide running so swiftly, and saw Lacandas the Banian come running towards the Boat, being sent of the Nabob to know of me, if he should erect a Tombe ouer my sonne: I returned him many thanks, and willed Lacandas to tell him that I had already begun it: then I returned aboard, and he went to Surat; and not long after his Tents were taken downe, and went after him with the rest of his carriages.

The six and twentieth, the Nabob's sonne and sonne in law (a very ingenious yong man) came aboard to take their leaues of me: vpon whom I bestowed some kniues, and other things which I had left, which could not be much, hauing still had one great man or other to visite me, who seldom or neuer went away without some one present or other: so they viewed the shippe and departed.

Two Antelops:

The seuenteenth, there came aboard vnto me the three sonnes of Allee Canne, the two yongest first, and after them came the eldest, called Guger Canne, who as yet had neuer been aboard: He presented me with two Antelops, male and female, whereat I was glad, since I had sent to enquire for some to send home to Sir Thomas Smith, but could not procure any. I presented him with foure Spanish pikes with heads, and some other things of my owne, and shewed him all the ship, with our warlike preparation for defence, as also all our Ordnance; and a little while after he tooke his leaue, and at his departure I gaue him eleuen shot.

March 3.

The third of March in the after-noon, vpon the tide of ebbe, and a small gale came vp Northerly, to giue steering way to our ships, we seeing our friends the Mallabars (which had desired to go with vs) not attempting to come forth, we hastened to get vp our anchors, and to set saile to proceed on our iourney: yet seeing comming in from the Westward another Fleet of Portugall Frigats, I was willing to shew my best, in the view of the Countrey people, to hinder their comming into the riuer of Surat; which was nothing, for that there was roome enough for them to passe by vs every way out of the reach of our shot; yet we shot at the nearest of them, without hope to shoote neare them, but only to shew our good willes, and for encouragement to our friends on land; as also for those which went alongst the Coast (as I esteemed) to giue knowledge to the Gallions of our comming, that they might report also that we shot at their fellows going to Surat: that they might also expect that wee cared the lesse for their greater strength. In our passage this night, we had diuers flawes of vnconstant winds, for which we came to anchor for a while. Afterwards seeing it blew steadie, though faint, wee set saile, continuing our

Their departure.

The enemies forces descried

course South by East alongst the shoare. At that time the day-light began to discouer to vs all things neare vs; we descried betweene vs and the shoare our enemies forces of Gallions, and two Gallyes, all comming to saile presently after they saw vs, and stood after vs with a faint gale, we standing somewhat without our courle with all our sailes, partly to gaine time to make our selues in perfect readinesse to fight, partly to refresh my people that had taken much paines the night past; as also the further I draw them off the Coast, the further they will be from fresh supplies to be sent them. But ere long, the tide of flood being come, and little wind to hold our owne, we came to an anchor, while the enemy resting his hopes in the wind, kept longer vnder saile to his greater disadvantage. But I not taking it for an error in them, but of purpose to doe vs more harme, it brought mee into a new and great doubt, which drew all my powers to deuise how to preuent. This was, that now we were at sea, they meant to return to Surat with al their strength, and there to worke their wills on our friends and goods, which I had no meanes to preuent, but by following them; knowing they durst not vnarme, nor vn furnish their shippes while I was in sight of them. But the time now grew so late, that I doubted by the most hast that I could make, I should hardly get off the Coast before the foule weather came; which put me into some hope, that the Vice-Roy being so great a Souldier, and so discreet a Gentleman, would not expose himself, his people and ships to such great perils as the hastning winter did threaten. While these things things floted in my mind, the tide of flood was spent, and time to worke if we make vse of the ebbe, we (to my great content) saw the Vice-Roy his Fleete standing towards vs with a fresh gale of wind. Wee likewise set saile, and stood away our owne course before him all that tide, and so spent the night to the best aduantage, partly by sailing, and partly by stopping.

The fifth in the morning, wee saw the enemy had gotten but little ground of vs: This day also we spent, as before, in riding and sailing, as time serued to our best aduantage: and for that the Hector went best, and the Hope (logloaden) worst, I sent to the Hector to take in her Boat, and to prepare for the Hope. I sent to the Hope to giue directions to hasten to the Hector, to be towed, and to the end she should haue nothing to hinder her, I had her Boat to tow at my sterne, and so spent the night working for the best, the wind fresh wee had no cause to anchor. This night the Vice-royes ships got much ground of vs: by this I was gotten well off from the shoare, and also an ende to the Southwards, and by his working I recouered some assurance to my conceit, that these forces would not this yeare annoy Surat: and for my businesse for encountring the enemy, I had by good leasure well considered how to contriue it, and withall I had considered of the cases of either, and the difference betweene the Vice-roy and me, I meane in our seuerall satisfactions and contents: My comming hither was by the authoritie of my King, and to follow the designs of my Employers, which was in Merchants ships fitted for defence, and to endeavour by honest commerce, without striuing to iniury any, which God hath of his tender mercie and bountifull blessing so assisted me, that we haue performed beyond my former conceit, and in most things hitherto God hath graunted me my hearts desire: and am now in a good way vpon my way with the same: with which without further tempting of God, or presuming of Gods continuing mercies in further deliuerances, if I by pride swarue from what is iust, and before him to be allowed, whose mercies haue been free, and without any cause in mee for his owne Name take: therefore I hold it fit to proceede soberly, and attend vpon the Enemies attempt, yet not in base manner, but in a warlike sort.

Wise and sober course.

On the other side, the vnhappy Vice-roy a famous valiant man, therefore now sent by his Master the King of Spaine with Ships (the principall of India) with men (all the Gallants and principall Braggards of those neerer parts of India) what to doe? Not only to disturbe or intercept the peaceable and quiet trade of the English with the subiects of the Mogol, a great King in his owne Countrey, but to take or burne them: so little regard is had to the effusion of Christian blood; neuer looking towards the iudgements of God, nor remembring that as men doe to others, they must expect to be done to. This Captaine was furnished with abundance of all things the Countrey might yeeld, and wanted nothing but an vpright cause, fit for God to fauour. He came to the place where he found what he sought, foure poore Merchants ships, a few men, and many of them sicke and dead; and those Braggards measured our minds by their owne, thought we would neuer stand out against so powerfull a force, as they esteemed they had; and the conceit of that, set those Coxcombs a madding to be doing mischief, to encrease their pride, which they intitle honour. I seeing the difference, and the cause I had to pray to God my onely refuge, whom it pleased to grant the request of me his poore and vnworthy seruant: in consideration whereof, I put forward the businesse, and as it were, baited my hooke, and the Fish presently ranne thereat as aforesaid.

Thankfull consideration of Gods assisting our equitie, and punishing the Portugall pride.

They came three Ships, and thirtie or fortie Frigats, as I imagined; with a veaze laid the Hope aboard with the flowre of all their Gallants, where by the hand of God in their amazed carriage, they receiued such a blow, as few (and they by their extraordinary chance) escaped with safetie, and the three ships burnt. Thus it pleased God to crosse their first attempt, and neuer after, though they beleaguered vs round about by sea, with all their sorts of shippes for many dayes together, our people still in action, and halfe tired with continuall labour, some receiuing in goods; yet, Blessed be God, they could neuer get the aduantage to winne from vs the vallew of a louse, vnlesse our Bullets which we lent them, his fire-boats failing, and nothing prospering; and once in foure and twentie houres, I sent him a defiance for many dayes together, to try his temper; all which must needs lie heauie on the stomacke of a Gentleman of so great courage. I esteeme now he will hazard much to recouer some of his honour formerly lost (but craving pardon for this my digression, I will now returne and proceed with my former businesse.)

Wherefore the sixth in the morning betimes, I sent for my Master, and let him know that my purpose was, that when the Vice-roy should come vp neere with vs, that we would all at once cast about with him, and charge him first on the sudden, to strike an vnexpected terror in the hearts of his people, who now are bragge, seeing vs going away before them. And to that end I now went aboard euery ship, to giue them all directions; and more, that I would cause the Hector, with her Pinnasse and mine, to take in an hundred fardels of the *Hope*s goods to lighten her, and mend her going: which businesse (by reason of my Pinnasse to helpe) I stayed to see it done; so that it grew to be mid-day, neere which time, my ship which I left faire afterne for my better comming aboard, strooke saile, whereat (as wee imagined) the Vice-roy seeing the Admirall strike her sailes to fall a sterne, might take it of purpose to stay for him in contempt, he with his Consorts bore vp with the shoare, and gaue ouer the hope of their fortunes by further following of vs: which courle I like very well, since he is so patient; for there is nothing vnder his foot that can make amends for the losse of the worst mans finger I haue. Besides, I wish no occasion to fight; for that which I haue already paid for, I am already possest on, and I am so farre from the humour to fight for honour, vnlesse for the Honour of my King or Countrey, that I had rather saue the life or liues of one of my poorest people, then kill a thousand Enemies. Having now finished with the Vice-roy, I set my selfe to write Letters for the dispatch of the Hope, yet still thinking to haue haied into the Bar of Goa, to prooue if I could haue left some Commendations there for the Vice-roy at his returne: this was my great desire that I long promised, yet so long trifled in dispatch of the Hope, that wee were shot farre past it before wee had finished the same.

The rest of this Iournall is * wanting; for hee is also wanting which should haue perfected it. But alas, this is the imperfection of Mans best perfections, Death lying in ambush to intrap, whom by open force (you see) he could not deuoure. Soldania.

He first of January 1613. the new ship built at Detford, was lanced and called the New-Yeares-Gift. The third of March, we came to an anchor in the Downes. The thirtieth of Iune, we set saile from the Bay of Soldania. Heere at this time which is their dead of Winter, it was temperate, rather inclining to cold then heate. We had little refreshing but water and fish. The people are wretched, neither sow nor plant, dwell in small Cottages made of Hides, and so ioyne many of them in a round Circle, hauing their Cattle in the midst. They are browne, but by greasing themselves become almost blacke, and in the wind vsauourie a doozen yards off, filching, trecherous, vnworthy so good a Land, which in likelihood with culture would be very fertile.

bloud.

S. Augustine.

The sixth of August wee had sight of Saint Laurence. This night Robert Waters departed, a man long diseased in bodie, disturbed in minde by torment of conscience, for a man by him killed in Virginia, (cowardly comming behind him, and knocking him on the head) for which hee obtaigned his pardon in the Court of men, but in the inward and spirituall was thus pursued to his death. Here in the Bay of Saint Augustine we wooded and watered: Some went vp the riuier and came to their houses or sheads, which were small things set vp with Canes, and couered with a thing like a hurdle, made of the leaues of the Palme Tree. The people fled and left all, that is, nothing but a little Cotton spunne, or on the Distaffes, with a few necessaries. The eleuenth and twelfth, we bought Cattell in exchange of Siluer Chaines, they taking the value of twentie pence, or two shillings in a Chaine for an Oxe, which in money would cost five or sixe shillings. They are very good, fed (it seemes) within the land, for we saw nothing but sand and wood without any grasse at all.

The ninth of September, we had sight of Socatora, and passing by Tamarind Bay, came to anchor in Delisha.

rents here, read the former and next following Discourte.

The one and twentieth of October, we came into the Road of * Swally. After the fight on the twentieth of Iauary, in which three Portugall ships were burnt, and two Frigats sunke, and Timber procured for the Hopes maine Mast, which the Nabob caused to be done so warily, that it seemed he was afraid lest the Portugals might know it. On the foure and twentieth, came a Iesuite with another fellow from the Vice-roy to intreate of peace with Magribecan, who on the

the feuen and twentieth, sent the Vice-Roy one hundred and fiftie Maunds Meale, one hundred sheepe, twentie five Maunds Conserues with Hens, &c. In the after-noon the Sabandar requested me to read a Letter from the Vice-Roy, which signified that whereas by the Padre hee was informed that the Nabob desired to make peace in his Masters name, and had appointed for treatie thereof the Sabandar, Isaac Beg, and Abduram, hee also had hearkened thereto and appointed three others to that businesse binding himselfe to performe their agreements.

On the one and thirtieth, The Sabandar came vnto mee and told mee, that no peace could bee with the Portugals, they refusing to make any restitution for damages or goods taken, but rather required money of them: and that the Vice-roy had sent to all parts thereabouts for more forces. After their fire deuices frustrated, they all set saile, both Ships, Iunckes, Gallies and Frigats, and roade at the Barre of Surat. The Hellor had taken one of their Frigats which was imployed to tow the fire-boats and in her feuen men; three slaine, foure liuing. Soone after they departed: and we also weighed the second of March.

On the fourth, we descryed the Portugall Fleet, which presently gaue vs chase, and the next day also. On the sixth, the Generall came aboard vs, to wish vs to make readie, he purposing to turne and giue the on-set on them: but about noone the Portugals bore vp the Helme, and stood in for the shoare, and within three houres after we lost sight of them. The tenth, at night the Hope departed from vs. The fifteenth, we saw three Spouts of water not farre from vs, one whereof very bigge continuing halfe an houre. The nineteenth, we doubled Cape Comorine.

The tenth of May, the wind and current against vs, the Generall went to a greene Iland to the North of the Salt-hill, and there came to an anchor in twentie fathome good ground sandie. Wee sought fresh-water but found none: wee saw Pigges and Hogs on the Iland, and gathered good store of Coco Nuts. About this Iland is good riding, beeing twelue fathomes within a stones throw of the shoare. The Pinnalle fetched water at an Iland foure leagues off, which was brackish. We found water in the Iland beyond the burning one. The second of Iune, wee came to an anchor in Bantam Road.

The third of Iuly, we weighed Mace and receiued Silke for the furnishing of the Salomon, for Masulipatan, wherein we concluded to send for Merchants, George Chancie, Ralph Preston, Humphery Elkington, Timothy Mallory, George Saunge, and Robert Saunge.

The eighth of Iuly, we laded Porcelane in her: and then came newes by a Iuncke from the Moluccas, of the Thomafine being there, and of twelue saile of Hollanders at Ternate, which hindered all men they could from Trade. The eleuenth, our old house escaped great danger of a fire neere it.

On the twentieth, Master Jordan receined Letters from Master Ball at Macassar, of the violent courses which the Flemmings vsed with him, beating him from thence, as also that they purposed with their whole force to come to take Bantam, and to place the King of Motran in the Gouernment.

The one and twentieth, Master Bennet set saile in the Salomon. The five and twentieth, the Advice and Attendance came into the Road, hauing beene out of England eight moneths. At the Cape they met with the Globe and James, to whom they spared eightene men. They departed towards England, Iuly the seuenteenth, and they hither, the eighteenth, meeting with a shippe neere the Cape, which we iudge to be the Samaritan or Hope from England.

The fifth of August, I was aboard with the Generall then very ill, and the next day had word of his departure; whom followed on the eighth. Master Euans the Preacher, and Master Hambden, as was supposed, by taking Lodinum, they both being well a little before. On the eleuenth, the Advice was dispeeded for Iapan, with twentie two persons brought out of England, five Blackes and Fernando the Spaniard.

The fourteenth, returned the Concord from Socodama, and Macassar. That night was much Raine, Thunder and Lightning, the Church or Meskit of Bantam split in two with a Thunderbolt, and the chiefe Priest almost slaine, which the King and people tooke as an ill presage, and therefore determined to make peace with Iacatra.

The sixteenth, the Thomafines Boat came into Bantam, with twentie two English, and five Blackes, which told of the casting away of the Thomafine on certaine flats, twentie two leagues from Macassar the night before, Wilson the Master being carelesse, and all the company asleepe, sauing he which was at the Helme. The money they saued and brought with them. Master Baily signified also that the wracked company there enforced him to pay them their wages, which we caused them to restore.

Thomafine lost.

The nineteenth, the Flemmings put into the Bilbomes three Blackes, that Master Baily brought with him from Celoar, pretending they tooke them climbing ouer their pales, also that they were taken from a place which they protected, and therefore would keepe them. We are many wayes most vily abused by them, nor is any way to right vs except wee should goe together by the eares, this as we conceiue being wrought of purpose, and the Blackes intified by them and willing to it, as being taken by force: which after that I knew, I was offended with Master Baily, being a meanes that whereas heretofore wee haue beene in all places well intreated, that wee should be hated as Men-robbers, which the Flemmings to disgrace vs will not let to blaze abroad.

The thirteenth of September, the watch espyed a fire in the thatch ouer Master Jordans lodging, which was soone quenched: it was throwne there purposely; we found the Cane wherein it was done, for which we suspected Francisco the Spaniard turned Iauan. The same night the like happened in two or three places of the Towne, but all preuented.

The second of October, Sophonee Cossack, Merchant, came in a small Pinnasse from Puloway, one of the Islands of Banda, with an Orancaya, to conferre of trade.

The two and twentieth, I with Master Pring and Master Boile, went ashore to conferre with the Flemmish Generall, touching certaine idle complaints made by them of our Mariners: whom and the President I found very impatient, calling vs insolent * English, and with threats, telling vs our pride would haue a fall, with many other disgracefull words; this being the entertainment of that borish Generall, Garrat Reynes, in his owne house; shewing the like or worse to Master Ball, comming aboard him at Banda, and foure of our men entreating passage with him thence to Cambello, vpon no cause he carried them thither in the Bilbowes.

The third of Nouember, I went ashore: Captaine Jordan called together the Merchants, and sent for the Orancaya of Banda, hauing had his Letter translated, the effect whereof was, that in regard of the ancient friendship betweene the English and them, and especially with Captaine Keeling, withall being prouoked by the cruelty of the Hollanders, their earnest desire was to trade only with the English for the Spices of Puloway, Pulerons and Nera: conditionally that the English would furnish them with Victuals, Munition and Ordnance, and helpe them to recouer the Castle of Nera, and that some might bee sent to Banda, to conferre hereof with the Orancayas. To which was answered, that for helpe to recouer Nera, we could not doe it without order from England; for Ordnance at present we were vnprouided: what we could, we would, which was to furnish them with Victuals, and what other prouisions we could, till further order out of England, and to trade with them for Spices, purposing to send a ship, and some to conferre with the Orancayas, how we should be secured, and whether they would permit vs a Fort on shoare.

The two and twentieth, were five Hollanders riding without: foure of which came from Mauritius Iland (hauing come out of Holland nineteene moneths past) where they found Generall Butt cast away with three ships, two vtterly lost, the third men and goods saued, the fourth went home with a Iury Mast, in company of a small Pinnasse that came thither by chance. One of these shippes that was at the Mauritius came away before the rest, whom they found driuing to and againe before the Straights mouth, hauing lost one hundred and sixty men, and left in her but eight.

The five and twentieth, by a letter from Priaman, we had newes of the death of Master Oxe-wike and Samuel Negus.

¶ II.

A Brieve of Memorialls obserued and written by M. EDVWARD DODSVORTH, Merchant in the former Voyage, which returned in the Hope.

* This Commission had six questions, of which I take that which is fit for the publicke.
* Of his death you had before in N. W. his relations by poison, as was thought, from the Iesuits.
T. Elk.

He sixteenth of October, in the Bay of Surat, came aboard vs Master Aldworth and Master Steele: and the next day in consultation it was demanded of Master Aldworth according to the Companies * Commission, concerning Paul Canning, of his carriage and respect with the King: to which he answered, That was well, and this good, till the Iesuits had made knowne that he was a Merchant, and not immediatly sent from our King; after that, neglected, since which he * dyed. Also he thought fit that some one of our Nation, of good respect, should remaine at Court, to right vs in those wrongs which might bee offered. To this function Master Edwards was chosen as a man most answerable to the Companies Commission to go for Agra, some question being made whether he should proceed in name and profession of a Merchant (according to the strictnesse of the Commission) which Master Aldworth conceited would procure him disrespect with the King. After much contesting, some way was giuen to Master Edwards, lest they should seeme contrary to each other in their proceedings, it being before by some giuen out, that he was the Kings Messenger.

All this while wee heard not from the Cheefe at Surat, nor had any encouragement, or so much as refreshing, whereupon I was sent with a letter to the Nabob, and doubting to get into the Citie, was forced to stay by the way, and lye in a poore Gonge, and the next day was courteously entertained: but hauing Nicholas Vphlet with me for Interpreter, a man knowne and hated by the Nabob, for employment in Captaine Hawkins debts and affaires; he departed discontent, leaving Cotianozan with others, to receiue my letter: I refused to deliuer it to them; in the afternoone I was admitted, and he seemed much discontent at our want of refreshments, as not knowing it, promising reformation; and the next day went to talke with the Generall at Swally.

ly, who had come into that Road on the one and twentieth. Neuerthelesse, we had found nothing but delays: and the nine and twentieth, hee sent the Sabandar to acquaint vs, that wee should looke for no trade or kindnesse, except wee would assist them against the Portugall: Which the Generall refusing, further then his Commission gaue leaue, he also desired leaue by his letter, that his Merchants might come aboard with their goods, so to depart to some other place, where with safetie he might deliuer his Maiesties Letters and Present to the Mogoll. Master Elkington and Master Aldworth went with this Letter. * But Magro Can would not so much as looke on vs, but tooke it very scornfully, and went his way, and sent the Sabandar with answer as before.

10 The second of Nouember, we had sower entertainment of him, telling vs, if we would stay, we might; if we would go, we might go, either in Gods, or the Deuills name; for our other demands referring vs to Isaak Beg and the Sabandar, who would yeeld vs nothing. The common people seemed well affected to vs, the greater to desire our roome rather then our company, but so that we thought none of them durst gaine-stand the Kings Firma: whereupon it was concluded that the goods should bee landed, which accordingly was done. But in the Alfandica wee could find no reasonable ratements on the goods, nor leaue to carry away any thing, till the Nabob had seene them, and taken what he pleased (as hee had done in opening mens chelis, neither Mariner nor Merchant escaping without trifles taken from them, no reason after giuen for it) searching to the very pillowes and pockets, not sparing Master Edwards himselfe: Customing the 20 Cakes, Bottels, Apparell, or what we brought for necessary vse, as if they fought by foule viage to weary vs.

Harsh and barbarous dealing.

The fifteenth, Magro Can himselfe came to the Alfandica, and sealed vp the Kings Presents, which he was delirous to see, although he had promised that they should passe without opening. He desired to haue all the Pictures and Combe-cases, which we said were to go for Agra, that the King might haue his choise. Whereupon (notwithstanding he was offered part of them) he fell into great choler, and objected Sir Henry Middleton his proceedings in the Red-sea, wishing Master Aldworth to write to the King for satisfaction: which was answered to haue beene already ended by Captaine Best, as the Articles manifest. He concluded yet with faire promises, but the effect was (defect and) delay, wee being not permitted to carry away the Kings Presents. The 30 Pictures by lying in the Sunne, were broken and warped in vile manner, wee also in danger to lose the Monson, and the Kings Present, with Muskets and Fowling-peece taken from our men, were carried to his house: and nothing permitted vs, except he might first see the Kings Present, which we at last yeelded vnto, and Magro Can as much as he could disgraced, boasting of his respect with the King. And thus had we leaue to remoue them.

The foure and twentieth, came a Firma from the Mogoll, which the Nabob (according to their custome) met in state two miles out of the Citie, with sixe hundred horse. And the next day we were kindly entertained, and he gaue Master Edwards eight hundred and fiftie Mamu lies, thirty peece of Topplell, ten of fine Calicoes, &c. the money to cary vp the Presents, (the King not willing to charge them that bring them) the Stuffs and Calicoes for such as should accompany them. To the Merchants also he gaue fiftene peece of Topplell (fue to each) with his chop for our departure, and kind promises; all in the sight of him which brought the Firma. The 40 thirtieth, Master Edwards and we set forwards towards Amadanaur.

The second of December, we came to Baroche: from whence the Gouverneur sent a guard of Souldiers with vs to Demylode, and there had a new conuoy of fiftie horse and foot to Charmondo: whence we departed on the seuenth, with fue and twentie souldiers, all notorious theeves (as we after found) With these we went 10 c. and pitched in a plaine, where wee baracadoed our selues, as formerly we vsed, with our carts; at supper time wee had beene assaulted with fiftie horse-men, which came close vpon vs, had they not found vs well prouided, the charge wee carried being certainly knowne thorow all the Countrey as we trauelled.

50 The eight, we came to Brodera, and gaue the Gouverneur a Present, which he accepted kindly, but requested a further kindnesse to see our Mastiffe dogge. This Citie stands in a plaine which seemed fertile, and is well watered, a thing not so common in those parts. Wee departed hence with one hundred horse and foot, which voluntarily offered that seruice (in regard especially of the Kings Present, employed by the Gouverneur) not without charge to vs, and came to Arras, a Towne inhabited for the most part with Banians, where their superstition of not killing any thing, caused vs bad entertainment.

A Mastiffe dogge in request.

Arras a Towne of Banians. Amadanaur. Steel and Crowther their Journall following.

On the thirteenth, we came to Amadanaur. Hence we gaue commission to Richard Steele, and John Crowther for their Persian iourney. And hence the second of Ianuary, Master Edwards departed from vs for Agra.

60 All this while finding the Merchants heere, in hope of Peace with the Portugals, to inhaunce the prices of their Indico, we resolved to go to Sargues to make triall with the Countrey people, who are the makers of it: which on the seuenth we did, and found good employment, in foure dayes packing vp foure hundred fardles; and Master Aldworth returning to Amadanaur, found them now more tractable. Sargues is thence 3 c. distant, the Towne not bigge, but counted the best soile for Indico in those parts, the triall thereof chiefly by water, as at Amadanas Iambrozerch by fire, all of them ready to put trickes on vs by mingling or otherwise. At Sargues are two of the most auncient Monuments in those parts; one of a chiete Prophet there intombd, to which many Pilgrims resort from farre; the other of their ancient Kings. To the North of the Towne is the place, where Can Canua first put the Guzerates (the auncient inhabitants) to flight, the rest of the Kingdome being shortly after conquered by Echar this Kings Father. This place of the victory is strongly walled with bricke, some mile and halfe in circuit, planted with fruits and watered pleasantly, and a costly house called Victory erected, in which he resided for a time, but now in Bramport.

The foure and twentieth, we went to the Gouvernour for his leaue to depart, which he granted; but hearing of diuers robbed and murdered that night close by the Citie, order was giuen that we should stay till a sufficient guard were made readie for vs. The next morning we had Letters from M. Elkington of the arriual of the Portugal Vice-roy, with a strong force to driue vs out of the Countrey.

The Generall to procure some weakening of their strength, caused the Hope to fall downe to the Southermost sand, thinking in eager pursuit some of them would be driuen aground. Presently three of the smallest ships, and thirte fixe Frigats were sent to boord her, hoping to tow her away. Thrice the enimie entred, and was thrice repulsd, and forced at last to leape ouer-boord, thinking in their Frigats to saue themselves, who receiued such hot discourse from the other ships, that they could not releue them, so that many were swallowed by the Sea, others slaine a- 20 boord, to the number, as is reported, of three hundred at least. The Shippes which had boarded the Hope, were now (in despaire, and out of all hope) cut from her, and seized instantly by the two desperate, hopelesse, mercilesse Elements, Fire and the Sea, recommending some bones or ashes of their burnt Carkasses to the ground and shoare.

The fixe and twentieth, we departed with fortie cart-loads of Indico and other goods, and came the seuen and twentieth to Mundenas, where the Gates were shut vpon vs by Sarder Cans command, which putting vs in much doubt, we procured one to speake with the Gouvernour, who told him of Letters that he had receiued from Mocrib Can, of our Generalls proceedings at Swally, and the safetie of Surat by the English, wishing him by no meanes to suffer vs to returne without a sufficient guard, which the next day should be ready for our safe departure. The 30 twentieth ninth, we departed. At Brodera, Sarder Cans men took vp more souldiours to assist them, many robberies and murders beeing daily committed, and diuers companies of Rashbootes lying in the way to intercept.

The second of February, about three hundred Rashbootes assaulted vs in a narrow lane, inclosed on both sides with thicke hedges, where we could not hurt them, as they did our Cassila, with their arrowes and Shot. We therefore made what haste we could for the Plaine: meane while, they cut off two of our Coaches. But hauing gotten the Plaine, we made a stand, where they betooke them to their hedges againe, and left vs to looke to their prey, least one thiefe might rob another. Many of our company were hurt, whereof Humphrey Elkington for one. The next day we got to Baroche, and on the fifth to Surat, and thanked Mocrib Can for his care; and hearing of 40 an assault the Portugals would next day giue vs, with his professed loue and leaue went the next day to Swally, and came aboard: but the Portugals deceiued our expectation.

The ninth, the poore inhabitants of Swally brought vs word of two fire-boats, to bee sent with the next Ebbe to fire our ships, which endangered more then endamaged the Hope. The night following, they attempted the like with foure other chained together, which with the advantage of the Tyde, and attendance of smaller boats came, but frustrate in their successe saue to themselves, foure of their Companie taken, and their Boats burned to the Keele. The Captiues confessed this the last of the Vice-royes designs for this year, hee beeing enforced for want of water and victuals to returne for Goa.

The Examination of Domingo Francisco, taken in Swally Roade, aboord the Gift. February 20. 1614.

HE saith, That he was borne in Lisboa, beeing the sonne of a Marriner, and serued Nuna Acuna in the fight against Captaine Best, in one of the foure Gallions, and afterwards went for Macao vpon the borders of China, and returned againe to Goa, where hee hath remained ten Moneths, and was two Moneths since commanded to come in a Gallion called the S. Anthony, in this Expedition for the Port of Swally, where the eighth of this Moneth hee was taken. The Vice-roy Don Ieronimo de Saucedo, came (as this Examinee further saith) to the destruction of the English at Surat with these forces. His owne ship called the All-Saints, of eight hundred 60 Tunnes burthen, had three hundred men, and twenty eight pieces of Ordnance. Michael de Soozo Captaine of the S. Bennet of seuen hundred Tunnes, had one hundred and fiftie men, and twenty Peeces. John Cayatho, Captaine of the S. Laurence of sixe hundred Tunnes, had one hundred and sixtie men, eightene Peeces. Francisco Henriques Captaine of the S. Christopher, so much much burthen, had one hundred and fiftie nine men, and Ordnance as the former. Francisco de Miranda, Captaine of the S. Ieronimo of five hundred Tunnes, had one hundred and eightie men, sixteene Peeces. Gaspar de Meall Captaine of the S. Anthonio of foure hundred Tunnes, had an hundred and fortie men, foureteene Peeces.

The ships were the S. Peter of two hundred Tunnes, Captaine Francisco Cauaco, men one hundred and fiftie, Peeces eight. The S. Paul of two hundred Tunnes, Captaine Don Iohn de Mes- carena, one hundred fiftie men, eight Peeces. The Pinnasse one hundred twenty Tunnes, Cap- taine Andrea de Quellio, eightie men, foure Peeces. Lewes de Bruto, Captaine of one Gallie, Di- ego de Suro, of the other, in each fiftie men. Of the Frigats there were sixtie, hauing twentie fouldiours a piece, and eighteene oares on a side. The supply which came after, was two ships of two hundred Tunnes a piece, two India lunkes, and eight small Boates imployed to fire vs. The Admirals Ordnance were all of Brasse; of the other five Gallions, halfe of Brasse, halfe of Yron; against all which, the Almighty (blessed be his Name) protected vs.

The five and twentieth, the Nabob visited the Generall both ashore and aboard. And the Generall thought fit with consent of the rest, that I should returne with the Hope for England. The third of March, we weighed from Swally road, the next day had sight of the Portugall fleet. The sixth, we expected they would haue fought, and prepared our fights; but at noone they bare vp for Goa. On the eleuenth, we parted from the Generall, they bound for Achen and Bantam, we for England. On the twelfth, we held our course by the North end of the Maldinas, where by experience we found many shoalds and Ilands, laid in the plats most fallily, as may seeme of purpose, that these Seas might seeme more dangerous then they are.

The seuenteenth of Iune, 1615. we arriued at Saldania Bay, where wee found a fleet of foure saile English bound for Surat, vnder the command of Captaine Keeling, which after consultation holden, and newes of the state there, departed. On the twentieth, I met with Crosse and his Companie, there left to make a discouery, and intreated some of them to acquaint Coree with my comming, which by the way were set vpon by the Sauages and wounded, and thereupon foure Muskets deliuered Crosse at his request, who procured Coree to come downe with his whole family, and after that some Cattell. He told of the discords amongst the Sauages, whereby the Mountainers sometimes robbed them. The sixe and twentieth wee departed, leauing our long Boat to Crosse, with powder, shot, and prouision.

In twenty nine degrees North, we met with a Holland ship come from the Mauritius, set forth thither to cut wood, which seemed a Bastard Ebony; where contrary to their expectation, they found the lamentable wracke of foure ships come from Bantam and the Moluccas, broken on the rockes, the goods and men of two of them lost; of the third most of the goods saued, and with part thereof this ship laden; the fourth driuen to sea by a storme, returned with a iury maine mast. The Master promised vs company, but finding vs a hinderance, after tenne dayes left vs, without so much kindnesse as a farewell, or carriage of a letter, which I imputed to their inbred boorish disposition. Ill weather followed, and we were much weakened, yet I thank God without the losse of any, till my arriual in Ireland, thwart of the Riuer of Limerike. The seuen and twentieth of October, 1615. there also entertained with a storme, till a Scottish Barke crossed with contrary winds, was hired to pilot vs into Harbour: where also a remainder of Captaine M. his vngodly crue, which lately had obtained their pardon, put mee in feare, till Sir Henrie Foliot secured vs with a supply of men; and I dispeeded Letters to London.

60 He seuenteenth of March, 1614. after we had been detained in Azmere from February, M. Edwards hauing receiued a Letter from the Mogol vnto our King, deliuered a Copy thereof together with his Letters vnto Richard Steele, and tooke leaue, promising to procure the Kings Firman for our safetie and speed, and to send it after vs to Agra, where he willed vs to stay for it. Wee went that night two courses to Mandill; we had foure seruants, two horses, and a Camel. The eighteenth, to Bandersandree a small Aldea twelue course. The best was then worth fixe and thirtie Rupias the Maun at Agra; but in the Countrey much cheaper. The third of Aprill, perceiuing the Firman came not, and the heat of the yeare comming on, we departed, leauing order with Richard Barber to send it after vs. We came that night to a Serae called Boutta, 6 c. The fourth, to a Towne called Multra, 14 c. and lay in a faire Serae: there we receiued the Firman. The fifth, to a Serae called Chatta, 12 c. The sixth to a Serae built by Chan Azam, 9 c. The seuenth to a Sera built by Shec Ferreede called Purwell, 11 c. The eighth, to another goodly Sera by the same Founder, 10 c. The ninth, to Dillee a Citie, 9 c. which is great and ancient, in times past the Seat of the Kings, where many of them lie buried. At this time many great men haue their Gardens, and houses of pleasure there, and there are buried, whereby it is beautified with goodly buildings; the inhabitants (for the most part Banians) poore and beggerly, by reason of the Kings long absence. The tenth, to Bunira, 10 c. The eleuenth to Culluower 12 c. The twelfth, to Pampette, 12 c. a pretty small Citie, where are made diuers sorts of Girdles, Shashes, and great store of linnen cloth, and they haue store of handicrafts. The thirteenth, to Carnall, 12 c. The foureteenth, to Tanifera, 14 c. The fifteenth, to Shanade, 10 c. The sixteenth, to Mogoll Sera, or Gaugur, 15 c. The seuenteenth, to Sinan an auncient Citie, where is made store of linnen, 14 c. The eighteenth, to Duratia, 15 c. The nineteenth, to Pullower, 11 c. We passed this day a great Riuer by Boat, called Sietmege, very broad, but full of shoalds, and runneth West into Sinda. The twentieth to Nicouder a small Towne, 11 c. The one and twentieth, to Sultanpoare an old Towne, hauing a Riuer running to the North, and a bridge with fixe arches: here is store of linnen cloath made: foure course from it we passed another small Riuer. The two and twentieth, to Chiurmul, 11 c. This day by Boat we passed a Riuer as broad as the Thames at Gravesend, called Vian, running Westward into Sinda: vpon the bankes whereof was pitched Chan Allom, the Kings Embassadour into Persia, whose Campe seemed a little Citie. The three and twentieth, to Chan Channa Sera, 17 c. The foure and twentieth, to Lahore, 7 c.

All the Countrey betwixt Agra and Lahore, is exceeding well tilled and manured, being the best of India, and plentiful of all things. It yeelds great store of poudred Sugar, the best being worth betwixt two Rupias three quarters, and two and an halfe, the great Maund of fortie. Here all the way is set on both sides with trees, the most of them bearing a kind of Mulbery. It is dangerous in the night for Theeues, but in the day secure. Euery five or sixe Course, there are Seraes built by the King or some great men, very faire for the beautifying of the way, memory of their names, and entertainment of Trauellers. In these you shall haue a Chamber and place to tie your Horses, also store of Horsemeat. But in many of them but little good to be had for men, by reason of the Banians. When a man hath taken vp his lodging, no other may dispossesse him.

In the morning about day breake, all men make readie to depart together, and then are the gates opened. Before, no man is suffered to depart for feare of Theeues. This was a tedious trauaile: for within two houres after the Sunne-rising, wee were scarcely able to endure the heate.

Lahore is a goodly great Citie, and one of the fairest and ancientest of India. It stands on the Riuer Indus or Sinda; and from this place came the Treasure of the Portugals Trade when they had peace, as being the Centre of all Indian Traffique. And here they embarked the same downe the Riuer for Tatta, whence they were transported for Ormuz and Persia. The Merchants also passing that way betwixt Persia and India, payd them freight. They did likewise driue a great Trade vp this Riuer for Pepper and Spices, furnishing these parts of India therewith. At this present the Merchants of India assemble at Lahore, and inuest a great part of their monies in Commodities, and ioyne themselves in Carauans to passe the Mountaines of Candahar into Persia, by which way is generally reported to passe twelue or fourteene thousand Camels lading, whereas heretofore scarcely passed three thousand, the rest going by the way of Ormuz. These Merchants are put to great charges betwixt Lahore and Spahan, (besides great cold in Winter and heate in Summer, and the badnesse of the way, spending six or seuen moneths betwixt those two places) they are said to reckon euery Camels lading to stand them in one hundred and twentieth, or one hundred and thirtie Rupias. Persia is that way furnished with Pepper and Spices from Masulipatare ouer land. In Lahore wee stayed from the foure and twentieth of Aprill, vntill the thirtieth of May, to refresh our selues and our tyred beasts, and to provide Seruants and necessaries for the way. Wee also here procured Letters from an Embassadour of the Persian King.

The

The thirteenth of May, we departed with intent to ouertake a Carauan which was gone two moneths before, and went that day to Chackunder a small Towne 11 c. The fourteenth, to Nonserae, 15 c. The fifteenth, to Mutteray, 8 c. The sixteenth, to Quemal Chan, 19 c. The seuenteenth, to Herpae, 16 c. The eighteenth, to Alicafuna, 12 c. The nineteenth, to Trumba, 12 c. This day we ouertooke a small Carauan which went from Labor eight dayes before vs. The twentieth, to Sedonschall, 14 c. The one and twentieth, to Callixeckebands, 15 c. The two and twentieth, to Multan, 12 c. This is a great and ancient Citie. Within three Course of it Indus runneth. It yeeldeth white Linnen and Diaper. All Carauans are constrayned to stay at this Riuer eight, ten, or twelue dayes before they can get leaue of the Gouvernour to passe, to the end that the Citie being poore may get some-what. We were stayed fve dayes, and then were faine to make way with a Present.

The eight and twentieth, we passed the Riuer and went to Pettoallee a small Village 20 c. The nine and twentieth, we passed another great Riuer by Boate, and the same night came to a small Riuer called Lacca, where we found the Carauan aforesaid: we presented the Carauan Basha with a Looking-glasse and Knife, who wished vs to pitch our Tent neere to his, that wee might haue no wrong offered vs. The Carauan had beene heere ten dayes, and stayed till the second of Iune, to procure a Conuoy of Horsemen to conduct them to Chatcra a small Fort in the Mountaines, hauing heard of the Mountainers iniury to a former Carauan.

The second of Iune, we dislodged and entred that night into the Mountaines 12 c. where wee were distressed for want of fresh water, the water being brackish. The third and fourth, we travelled all night climbing high Mountaines, and following water Courses with diuers windings twelue Course, but in direct Line not aboue fixe. The fift, we followed the Course of a Riuer full of great Pebles 8 c. The sixth we rested. The seuenth, we went 4 c. still crossing the said Riuer. The eight, 8 c. The ninth, twelue. The tenth, three, and came to Chatcra, which is a little Fort, the wals built of mud, enclosed with a Ditch, where the Mogoll maintayneth eightie, or one hundred Horsemen to secure the way from Theeues. But they themselues are as very Theeues as any, where they find opportunitie.

The Captain of the Castle exacted vpon euery Camel of the Carauan two Abacees, although nothing be due by reason, he & his haue wages of the King. In all this way betwixt Lacca & Chatcra, we found not any sustenance for man or beast, except in some places a little grasse: & therefore we were constrained at Lacca to make prouision, hyring an Oxe for that purpose to carrie Barley for our Horses. The Agwans (so they call the Mountaine-people) came downe to vs euery day where we lodged, rather to espy what they could steale, then to buy, as they pretended.

The twelfth, in the euening hauing made prouision for three dayes, we went thence 14 c. that night. The thirteenth, 10 c. The fourteenth, 10 c. This day the people came downe to vs and brought sheepe, Goates, Meale, Butter and Barley in great abuniance, sufficient for our selues and our Cattle, at reasonable prices. And from this place forwards the people daily did the like, sometimes also bringing Felts and course Carpets striped. The fifteenth, we went 6 c. The sixteenth, 4 c. The seuenteenth, tenne. The eighteenth, 9 c. The nineteenth, 9 c. to a little Towne of the Agwans, called Duckee, where the Mogore maintayneth a Garrison, with a little square Fort, the wals built of mud a good height, distant a mile from the Towne. Heere wee stayed three dayes, because the Carauan could not agree with the Captaine of the Castle, who pretended a dutie on euery Camell: which at last they payd, one Abacee and a halfe on each. The three and twentieth, we went 6 c. The foure and twentieth, wee past by a place called Secota, or three Castles, because of three Villages triangle-wise scituate on the side of a hill neere together. Wee went 8 c. The fve and twentieth, wee rested by reason of foule weather. The fixe and twentieth, 10 c. The seuen and twentieth, 14 c. This day wee passed the Durues, or Gates of the Mountaines, being narrow straits, hauing Rockes on both sides very high, whence with stones a few may stop the passage of a multitude: and diuers Carauans haue beene in these places cut off. This night where we lodged we suffered diuers insolencies from the Agwans, and on the morrow they exacted of vs as wee passed by a small Village called Coasta, two Abacees and a halfe on each Camell. The eight and twentieth, 5 c. The nine and twentieth, by Abdun a Village 8 c. The thirtieth, 6 c.

The first of Iuly, 7 c. to a place called Pesinga, a small Fort much like vnto Duckee, where are store of Souldiers for securing the way. The Captaine exacted halfe an Abacee vpon a Camell. The third we left the Carauan and went forwards 6 c. The fourth, wee past a mightie Mountaine, and descended into the Plaines 14 c. The fifth, 20 c. we were distressed for want of graine for our Cattell. The sixth, in the like distresse for them and our selues, 12 c. The seuenth, to Candahar, 8 c.

These Mountaines of Candahar, are inhabited by a fierce people called Agwans or Potans, very strong of bodie, somewhat whiter then the Indians, great Robbers, accustomed to cut off whole Carauans. But at present partly for feare of the Mogoll, and partly through sweet found by commerce (in venting their graine, sheepe and Goats, of which they haue great store, and buying of course Linnen and other necessaries) they are become more ciuill. Yet if they can take any stragling ling by themselves or staying behind, they will sell them about in the Mountaines, and hoxe them to preuent running away, and put them to grind graine with Hand-mills, and other seruaile drudgerie.

The Citie.

The Citie of Candahar is ancient, the Inhabitants anciently Banians: there now resideth the Gouvernour of the Countrey, and a Garrison maintayned by the Mogoll, of twelue or fiftene thousand Horsemen, in regard of the Persians neighborhood to the North. And West-ward it is enuironed with a mightie, steepe, craggie Rocke; and to the South and to the East with a strong wall. By reason of frequent passage of Carauans it is much enlarged lately, that the Suburbs are bigger then the Citie. For within this two yeare, that the way of Ormuz is stopped vp by the wars betwixt the Persians and Portugals, all Carauans which passe betwixt India and Persia, must of necessitie goe by this place. And here they doe hire Camels to go into India, and at their returne for Persia. They cannot returne also without the Gouvernours leaue, which causeth them to stay a moneth, and when least, sixteene or twentie dayes: whereby it is much inhabited with lewd people, as all such places of resort commonly are. Prouision of victuals is there in great abundance for man and beast, yet deare by so great concourse. Trade it yeelds not of it selfe, but accidentally by the meeting of Indian, Persian and Turkie Merchants, which are not willing to trauell further at twentie per Cento profit. At this place the Carauans which goe to India, do ioyne for greater strength in passing the Mountaines of Candahar: and those which come from thence heere breake into smaller Companies: for in many places greater would not find prouision.

Barrennesse of the borders of the Mogoll and Persian.

For all Persia, especially betwixt this and Spahan, is barren, where sometime in two or three dayes trauell, there is no greene thing to be seene; only some water, and that also often brackish, stinking and naught. Wee stayed here foureteene dayes, partly to refresh our bodies weakened with heate and trauaile (John Crowther being so weake that hee feared hee should not bee able to trauell further) and partly for company.

The Persians Countrey.

The three and twentieth of Iuly, wee departed Candahar in company of three Armenians, and a doozen Persian Merchants, and went 10 c. to a Village called Seriabe. The foure and twentieth, 12 c. to Deabage a small Dea or Village. The five and twentieth, 8 c. to Cusbecunna a small Castle, where the Mogor hath a Garison in the vtmost confines of his Dominions.

Farfings (Parafing of 60. Furlongs.)

The fixe and twentieth, 17 c. and lay by a Riuer side in the open fields. The seuen and twentieth, 4 c. to a Castle called Greece the first of the King of Persia. Here we deliuered the Embassadors Letter receiued at Lahore, to the Gouvernour, and presented him with a Looking-glasse and three Kniues. He would take nothing of vs for our Camels, whereas others paid five Abacees vpon a Camell. He promised to safe-conduct vs, and to send a company of Horse to carrie vs to the next Government. But we saw none, neither were we sorrie for it: for that hee is little better then a Rebelle, and all his people Theeues. The eight and twentieth, at night wee departed and lodged neere vnto a Dea called Malgee; two farfings. Euery farfing is two Indian Courses and a halfe. The nine and twentieth, ten farfings, and lodged in the open fields, where was nothing to be had but water. The thirtieth, five farfings to Gazichan a small Castle. The one and thirtieth, five farfings to an olde ruined Fort, where was nothing to be had but water, and that stinking.

Farra. Sun-dryed Bricks.

The first of August, five farfings to an old Fort called De Laram, where wee paid an Abacee and halfe on a Camell, and stayed one day to refresh our cattell, which is called making of Mochoane. The third, to Bacon, an old Castle, seuen farfings. The fourth, in the open fields, nothing but water, foure farfings. The fifth, foure farfings. The sixth to Farra five farfings: This is a little Towne walled with a high wall of bricke about, dried in the Sunne (as are all the Castles, and most of the buildings of those parts) foure square, a mile about; hauing a pretty Bazar vaulted ouer-head to keepe from raine, wherein all necessaries are sold. It stands in a good soile, and hath plenty of water, without which in this Countrey nothing is to be had: and it is strange to see, where there is any good spot of ground (which is heere but little) with what labour and industry they bring water to it, in some places three or foure miles together by trenches vnder ground. At this Towne all Merchants which go into Persia, are forced to stay seuen, or eight, or ten daies together, where the Kings Treasurer seeth the weight of all their packes, and esteemes them at so much the Maune, as he thinkes fit, and takes three per cento custome.

Water how precious.

At their comming into Persia, they are vsed with great fauour: for they feare lest complaints should be made to the King, which will haue Merchants kindly entreated.

But at their going into India they vse all extremitie, searching them to the skinne for gold, which to transport, or any coyne of siluer out of Persia, but the Kings, is death.

Likewise they looke narrowly for horses and slaues, which the King will not haue transported. Heere we stayed two dayes for certaine Armenians, with whom we went, leauing our former company. The ninth, one farfing to a Riuer. The tenth, in the open fields, seuen farfings. The eleuenth, foure farfings to a small Village, where we had store of prouision. The twelfth, foure farfings, where we digged for water. The thirteenth, eight farfings. The fourteenth, to Dran, a Village, five farfings, where we stayed a day, which is the custome once in foure dayes, for such as trauell with laden Camels, to rest. The sixteenth, three farfings. The seuenteenth, foure farfings;

sings. The eighteenth, to Zaidebasha, five farings, where are good store of Carpets to be bought. The nineteenth, to Mude a Village, where are also Carpets. The twentieth, to Birchen, five farings, where are store of fine Felt, Carpets of Camels haire, made, from two to five Abacees the Maune, heere we stayed a day. The two and twentieth, to Dezaide, where they pretend all to be religious, and have store of Carpets to sell at cheape rates. The three and twentieth, three farings. The foure and twentieth, five farings to Choore, an old ruined towne. The five and twentieth, three farings. The six and twentieth, seven farings; the water brackish and stinking. The seven and twentieth, to Dehge, where is a prettie streame of hot water, which being put into any vessell, becomes coole and health-some. The eight and twentieth, seven farings to Dea Curma. The nine and twentieth, to Tobaz five farings, we payed halfe an Abacee a Camell. At Tobaz all Carauans doe rest at least foure or five dayes, the better to be able to passe the salt Desert adjoining, being foure long dayes iourney, wherein many miscary. We found there a small Carauan of one hundred Camels, which went the next day. Heere, and in the former Village, are store of Dates, and three thousand Maune yearly of the finest Silke in Persia; which is carried to Yades, a faire Citie, where they haue the like, and is made into Taffatas, Sattens and Damaskes. The King will not suffer it to be transported, especially into Turkie, but the Portugalls carried it into Portugall. Yades is about twelue dayes iourney from Spahan, and twelue farings out of the way of India. The thirtieth, we went nine farings ouer the Desert; lay in the fields, and sent our beasts three miles out of the way for water, it being exceeding salt. The one and thirtieth, ten farings, where the water was not all so brackish.

The first of September, five farings, where we went two miles for water. The second, to a small Castle nine farings, little prouision. The third, five farings, lay in the fields, sent farre for water. The fourth, to Seagan ten farings. The fifth, foure farings. The sixth, to Irabad, a Castle, ten farings, where we payed halfe an Abacee on a Camell. The seventh, six farings. The eighth, to Ardecen eight farings, where we stayed till the tenth. Then went to Sellef foure farings. The eleuenth, to Agea Gaurume, a small Castle, three farings. The twelfth, nine farings to a spring in the fields. The thirteenth, to Beauas three farings. The fourteenth, to Goolabad foure farings; from whence Richard Steele rode before to Spahan. The fifteenth, to Morea Shanade five farings. The sixteenth, to Coopa five farings. The seuenteenth, to Dea Sabs five farings. The eighteenth, foure farings, and lay in the fields. The nineteenth, three farings, and came to Spahan. Richard Steele reached thither the fifteenth at noone, and found Sir Robert Sherley dispatched from the Persian King, in Embassage to the King of Spaine, with him his Lady, and for his Chaplaine, a Frier of the Bare-foot Order, with five and fittie Portugall prisoners, and his owne followers, both Persians and Armenians, speeding for Ormuz, to imbarke for Lisbon. The purpose is, that seeing the Portugalls are not able to stand, the Spaniards may be brought in, six Friers remaining in hostage till his returne, at Spahan, whom otherwise the King hath vowed to cut in pieces; which he is likely enough to doe, who hath done to death his owne sonne, and committed a thousand other seuerities. Richard Steele deliuered his Letters to Sir Robert, who durst scarcely reade them, but now and then by stealth, fearing the Portugalls should know of them. Hee after said it was too late to look after that businesse for our Nation, and seemed discontent with the company, and the Master and Merchants which landed him. But at last said he was an Englishman, and promised to effect our desires, and (the Friers being absent) caried both on the nineteeth to the Master of the Ceremonies or Maimondare, and took vs with him to the Great Vizier, Sarek Hoge, who presently called his Scriuans, & made draughts of what we desired: viz. three Firmans, one which John Crowther hath for Surat, one for Richard Steele, to carry into England; the third sent to Iafques, to the Gouvernour. All are sealed with the Kings great Seale, and to this effect, That all Gouvernours of Sea-ports within his Maiesties Dominions, shall kindly entertaine the English shipping, &c. The same day that these Firmans were ended, departed Sir Robert Sherley, being the last of September, towards Siras, with great pompe and much honour, &c.

JOHN CROWTHER.

The chiefe Commodities of Persia are Raw-silke, of which it yeelds, according to the Kings bookes, yearly seven thousand and seven hundred Batmans. Rubarb growes in Corasim, where Worme-seed growes also: Carpets of all sorts, Silke and Gold, Silke and Siluer, halfe Silke halfe Cotton, &c. Their moneyes in Persia of Siluer, are the Abacee, the Mahomedee, Shahee and Bistee: the rest of Copper, like the Tangas and Pisos of India. The Abacee weigheth two Metacalls; the Mahomedee is halfe an Abacee; the Shahee halfe a Mahomedee: in the Ruill of eight are thirteene Shahees. In a Shahee are two Biftees and a halfe, or ten Casbegs. One Bifte is foure Casbegs or two Tangs. The weights differ in diuers places : two Mahans of Tanis make one of Spahan, and likewise the Batman. The measure of Silkes, &c. is the same with the Pike of Aleppo, which we iudge seuen and twenty inches.

land thorow Persia and Turkie.

John Crowther returned into India. Richard Steele to England by the way of Turkie. From Spahan the second of December, five farlings to a Sarail. The third, eight farlings to another Sarail. The fourth, to a Village sixe farlings. The fifth, to Dreag seuen farlings. The sixth, to a Sarail seuen farlings. The seuenth, to Golpigan eight farlings. The eight, to Chronon seuen farlings. The ninth, to Showgot seuen farlings. The tenth, to Saro six farlings. The eleuenth, to Disfabad eight farlings. The twelfth, two Manfields to a faire Towne Tossarkhan, twelue farlings, and rested that day, because of the deepe Snow. The fifteenth, to Kindanor six farlings. The sixteenth, to Sano eight farlings. The seuenteenth, to Shar Nuone, where I was staye by the Daiga, but shewing Letters from the Vizier, hee bade me depart in the name of God and Alle. The eighteenth, passed by a bridge, where all men are to giue account what they are, and pay two Shahees a Camell. The nineteenth, to Kassamkhan, the last of the Persian Gouvernments, and gaue a Present to the Gouvernour for a guard against the Turke-men: which hee not onely did, but gaue mee licence to feed on his Villages without paying, which yet I would not. The one and twentieth, I began my iourney ouer the high mountaines, which part the two Countries, being dangerous, and the two and twentieth arriued at a Village, eight farlings. The three and twentieth, seuen farlings, lay vnder a rocke. The foure and twentieth, to Mando, a Towne vnder the Turkes, eight farlings. The five and twentieth, to Emomester eight farlings. The sixe and twentieth, to Boroh, passed ouer a Riuer by Boat, and that night arriued at Bagdat, eight farlings, where I was searched and examined for letters, which I had hid vnder my saddle, whether one also was prying, but by a signe which I made, gaue ouer, and followed mee to my lodging for his expected reward. I escaped better then an old Spaniard, which a fortnight before was imprisoned and chained in the Castle, his letters read by a Malteza Renegado. I met with a Portugall which arriued heere (from Goa and Ormuz) two daies before mee. The Basha made vs stay heere twenty dayes, to stay for a Sabandar of his.

The sixteenth of January, we passed Tygris, and lay on the Desert side. The seuenteenth, we went five Agatza (leagues or farlings) the eighteenth, met with Euphrates at Tulquy, where Merchants disembarked for Bagdat, or (after five per Cento custome paid) passe the Tigris for the Persian Gulfe. And after a tedious passage, partly by the Riuer, partly by Deserts, partly by Sea, the fifteenth of April 1616. he arriued at Marsiles, and the tenth of May at Douer, &c.

CHAP. XIII.

Memorials of a Voyage, wherein were employed three shippes, the Samaritan, Thomas and Thomasine 1614. writtten by * JOHN MILWARD Merchant, who went in the Thomas.

He tenth of May 1614. we anchored at Gore-end. The third of October in the Bay of Soldania, where we bought one hundred and fortie sheep, and ten Oxen, and more might haue done. These people are most miserable, destitute of Religion in any kind, so farre as we can perceiue, and of all ciuility; their speech a chattering rather then language; naked, saue a short cloake of skinn on their shoulders, and a Fox-skinne before their priuities: haue but one stone, naturally or ceremoniously I know not; eate that which dogges would hardly digest. They demanded vn-vnreasonably for their Cattell, which we thought proceeded from Cories, who had been in England, and (as we suppose) acquainted them with our little esteeme of Yron and Copper, asking peices as big as their cloakes, and had for their Cattell Skillets, Bafons, and Scummers. One seemed to be chiefe, whom the Generall kindly entertained in his Tent, and wee after that bought more freely. Their Sheep like our Goats, with small hornes, their Oxen larger then ours, the flesh white like our Muttons, the fat yellow as the yolke of an egge, wilde, and of one stone most of them like themselves. October is with them, as Aprill with vs, the weather temperate, but hot and parching at noone, the aire wholesome, our men presently recouering, some desperately sicke, they of the Scuruy vsing a red Berry as big as a Goose-berry.

- 10 The twentieth of December, the Generall caused the Masters and Masters-mates to come aboard, supposing that we were shot one hundred and fiftie leagues more then reckoning to the East, in eightene degrees fortie minutes. The nine and twentieth, we discryed land, but knew not well in what height we were, resolved that it was Iana, but knew not what part of it, supposed it the South-side, and that we were fallen on it by keeping too Easterly a course. And though the plats make it to lie betwixt eleuen and twelue degrees, and our latitude, at that time, was but eight degrees forty minutes; yet it is questionable whether it hath been discovered. But howsoever, or wheresoever we were, it is certaine that we were fallen to Lee-ward of the straits of Sunda, by two or three degrees, and into the North-west Monsons, which blow thereabouts from September to the last of March. All the Masters were of opinion, to goe backe into thir-
- 20 teene or foureteene degrees South-ward, to fetch the South-east wind, which is a trade wind betweene twentie eight and eleuen degrees, and so to shape our course more Northerly. Others were of opinion, to goe round about the Iland, and to fetch Bantam, as certaine Dutch-men had done heretofore on like occasion, and accomplished it in fixe weekes space. But the first opinion tooke place. The land hereabouts is very high, and neere the sea full of great Trees, the aire noysome by stinke from the shoare, subiect to much lightning, thunder, and raine, with sudden gusts. The next day noone, we had a good obseruation in the latitude of eight degrees thirty five minutes. The Generall was resolved to beat vp and downe, to see if we could get any thing to the West: he charged M. Wilson for author of the error; betwixt whom also and the Captaine, passed both words and blowes, which the Generall reduced into amitie the eleuenth of Ianuary. On
- 30 the eighteenth, we had land in seuen degrees tenne minutes, being by likelihood not farre West from our first land, notwithstanding that we had runne from it by our course neere one hundred leagues to the West, by reason of a violent current to the East.

The Copie of this Voyage was so hurt with wet, that I could not in some places read it, and therefore haue deliuered it more imperfectly. They know not where they are. Trade wind.

Wilson accused, as also for the losse of the Thomasine afterwards. Strong Current.

The Land to the sea is low and leuell, within high mountaines: wee anchored at the entry of the Bay, where we found calmes, the Current setting strong East South-east, that in a calme it would carry a ship foure leagues a watch. There is store of Wood, and Water from the Rocks, but brackish. We found neere to the shoare continuall calme, (the wind still blowing two or three leagues off at Sea) be it neuer so great a storme. In this place, which I may well call Inforced Bay, we saw no people; the shoare very thicke of Wood, Cocos, Palmes, and a hundred other kinds of trees, some growing in a number of rootes, * which descend from the toppe of the branches, which are fortie or fiftie foot high, and take root againe, so that the Tree sheweth like a Woodstake. I suppose that neuer Christian had been there, nor will againe, if he can auoide it: yet the Generall in one of the trees set vp his name and armes. We were not past two leagues from our anchoring place, from whence we had scant wind enough to bring vs, but there rose so great a gust of wind and raine, that we were forced to take in all our top-sailes, and strike our maine saile.

Inforced Bay.

* Indian figtree, or Arborea is, which Cocopius conceiued to be the tree of Adam. See my Piegr. l. 5. c. 13. §. 2.

On the three and twentieth, after much consultation and subscription for the Generalls discharge, we bore in with the land, and anchored in a Bay which I may terme Voluntary, where we found a Dutch-man at anchor, whom we had formerly met at Sestos. The next day we went ashore, and found a Towne and people, not blacke, but tawney, their houses built of Canes, cloathed some from the Waste, other wholly; they respected nothing that wee had, nor affoorded vs any thing to speake of; their weapons pikes and cryses. The Dutch-man named this place Middleton Bay: it is a good Harbour, hath a Riuer and an Iland, and lieth some fiftie leagues to the East of the North end of Iana, as the Dutch-man informed vs, who coasted it all along. It is in seuen degrees thirtie five minutes.

Voluntary Bay.

Middleton Bay.

The second of February, we were in tenne degrees twelue minutes. We saw the next day a small Iland, fortie leagues to the South of Iana maior, in tenne degrees, about five leagues broad, eight long. The fourth at Sun-setting, we had three degrees tenne minutes to the West variation. It is an infallible rule, that from the Cape of Good Hope to Iana, the variation increaseth to the West, the further East we runne, till it come to about seuentene degrees, and then as we

60 runne to the East decreaseth, till we come to the straights of Sunda, where it is three degrees and a halfe variation, and is holden the best guide for Easting and Westing, though not obseruing exact proportion. On the fifth, we had nine degrees sixteen minutes, and three degrees forty eight minutes variation West. The declination of the Crofiers is twenty eight degrees and a halfe. On the thirteenth, we were in the straights of Sunda, hauing on our Larboard Sumatra, and Iana

on our Starboord. The foureteenth at night, we anchored within three leagues of Bantam Road. The next morning came to vs, M. Baily Merchant, and M. Samon Master of the Globe, who told vs that the Globe was then laden for England, and that the Trades-increase beeing brought on ground on Pulo peniohn, all her men died in the careening of her; and after wards it stood them in five hundred ryalls of eight a day to hire Iauans, of whom five hundred died in the worke, before they could sheath one side; so that they could hire no more men, and therefore were inforced to leaue her imperfect, where shee was sunke in the Sea, and after set on fire by the Iauans. The Chineses also reported, that the Deuill appeared on Pulo peniohn Iland, signifying his offence, that the Chineses would vndertake such a buhness on his ground, and giue him nothing (for they were the workemen) whereupon one of the chiefe Chinese Carpenters came to Sir Henry Middleton, and reported it, desiring to haue a Buffolo for sacrifice, who denyed, yea forbad him when hee would haue done it at his owne charge, esteeming the want thereof cause of their euills.

The Globe departed from Bantam the one and twentieth of February. The foure and twentieth, the Thomasine departed for the Molluccas, M. Baily Cape Merchant, and M. Wilson Master. Our Generall sent word to the King of Bantam, that the Spaniards would inuade him, and take away his Towne; who answered, that if all the Cassars (so they call all not Mahumetans) in the world should come against him, he had a god * that would defend him.

The foureteenth of March, we departed in the Thomas for the Coast of Sumatra. The twelfth of May, we arriued at Priaman, but were denied trade. The next day, we rode to Teco, along by the Sea-side, which I thinke in this place, hath the greatest source of any in the world, occasioned by the many shoales and breaches on this coast, whereby the dangers of sailing are vknowne. On the seuenteenth, we weighed for Achen, where the twentieth of Iune we arriued. On all this coast when there is no raine, although it bee calme, the Sea goeth very high; and in raine though the wind blow much, the Sea is smooth. The King sent vs his Chop. On the eight and twentieth, he sent an Elephant to carry the Kings Letter in State. We carried for a Present, a great piece of Ordnance, with the carriages, twenty Bullets, a Ladle, Skowrer, and two barrels of Powder, twelue fowling peeces, tenne Swords, fixe fine Bastas, all wrapped in the Kings colours. He sate in great Sate with the King of Ior, and gaue to my selfe, M. Nicols, and M. Tate three Vests (contrary to his custome) and was very merry.

The second of Iuly, he came by the waters side vpon an Elephant in great state, with diuers Elephants before him, and twelue other Elephants hauing Castles (as they tearme them) on their backs, full of his Women, hauing multitudes of Women and Eunuches attending, all other people being beaten out of the way, and not daring to be seen; our selues hauing our house neere the Waters side, were commanded to shut our doores and windowes. The Sabandar by a Parable taught vs to know him, telling vs, That if a man will sow a piece of Cloth, let the Needle go through, and the thred will follow of it selfe; insinuating that a Bribe must vsheer our designs. The King offered vs to settle a Factory here, paying custome as other Nations did, which was seuen in the hundred, and we accepted it, whereat the Dutch were angry.

The sixth, the Hellor set saile for Teco, hauing lost at Achen twenty fixe men, principally occasioned by distemper in Aracke houses. The eleuenth, the Captaine of the Dutch house protested he had not a Mase to buy victualls, and besides was indebted; whereupon I lent him seuentie taile of Gold, to be paid at Bantam. Perceiuing the Gold of this place base, I refused to sell but for Siluer. On the sixteenth, we went to the Court (without a Present, presence is not tolerated there) to see a Cock-fighting, but the King spake nothing of any businesse, and except he beginne, no man else may. They next day, I attended all day in vaine, whiles he was solacing himselfe with his Women. On the eighteenth, his Gallies came from Malacca. On the nineteenth, he sent them for Pedar, and so for Malacca. Twelue of them were very faire, with twenty eight and thirtie oares on a side. The Admirall had a Turret built in the Poope, couered with Mallic plate of Gold, and curiously wrought. It is reported, that in each of his great Gallies he would carry one thousand men, and in his fleet (beeing three hundred great and little) one hundred thousand. He forced a Guzerate Iunke of foure hundred Tannes, with the Commander, to goe with him: yet it was thought he meant not to goe himselfe, but gaue it out to further his businesse; and that Orency Maraga should be Generall, a man whom he most feareth, as of auncient Nobilitie, a good Souldiour, and popular, yet circumspect. The King beeing going, word was brought that for the rest of his debt, I must take pepper at eight tayle the Bahar, which I refused; yet was it weighed, choose whether I would take it, or nothing. Orency Laxaman demanded for better conditions, a Cable, Anchor, great piece, barrell of powder, twentie shot; and for himselfe sixty tayles of Gold, for other Officers thirtie: so should we settle at Teco, and Priaman for two yeares. At length, for so much Gold, and twentie taile more, he vndertooke to procure our dispatch, but at last the other also were demanded.

On the thirtieth, came in two Dutch ships from Masulipatan, the Admirall the White Lyon, wherein was the Visador and the Ragusa. The Visador sent the King a great peece, with other things for a Present, which were rejected as of too little value. They demanded St. Isaac, Captaine of the Dutch house at Achen, as indebted to the Company, whom the King had appointed pointed for Malacca, and held as his slave, and said, That if the Dutch tooke him, they should have no trade in his Countrey. He demanded one of their ships with him to Malacca, alluding to an ancient promise of such a kindnesse by a former Embassadour some twentie yeares agoe, but they excused, and he said, They were an vniust Nation, and denied them his Chop, that they might not goe on shoare for seuen or eight dayes, so much as to fill water: and three or foure daies after, they turned their Admirall ashoare, and gaue lier to the King, willing to giue him content, and withall to auoid that desperate Voyage.

The seuenteenth of August, the Thomas set saile from Achen. The twentie ninth of September, we had a Spout. At our first comming from Achen, we stood off to the West, for auoiding of rocks and shoales about sixtie leagues, wherein being deceived in the Current, we were off one hundred and fiftie leagues, whereby we brought our selues open to the Bay of Bengala, and so into a strong Current, which kept vs very long from our Port. The seuen and twentieth of October, we anchored in Teco road; and the next day presented the King of Achens letters for two yeeres Factory. The thirteenth of Nouember, the Thomas departed for Bantam, I, George Piborne, John Perce, and my man Peter staying. We had much adoe with these rude people, but bare our selues stiffely on the King of Achens Letters. The ninth of May, 1616. a man of Achen being reuled by a Woman, did beat her, and thereupon grew a great uproare; for the Tecoans hauing fined him at foure Tailles, he denyed to pay any, and the next day an hundred men came to take him, but all the Acheners ioyning, they were repulsed, one slaine, and sixe hurt: and they beeing two hundred, fortified the neather Towne, intending to stand it out to the vtmost, affirming that if they should suffer themselves to be ouer-borne by the Country people, the King of Achen would cut off their legs. The King by this policie (his Officers being all Acheners which will suffer no abuse) holding them in awe. But the matter was ended, Lose Gee the Achener paying a summe of Money. Three moneths before this time, the small pockes were rife here, whereof many died. This moneth also was very vnholosome and faint, many dying with a twelling: our selues were sicke round about the house.

The eleuenth of Iune, arriued the Expedition at Priaman. The second of Iuly, there was a Mallem that lost both his hands for stealing, who in the execution was not seene once to stirre. The thirteenth, Captaine Payton sent me word, that he feared his men would mutiny, and runne away with the ship, as they had formerly attempted at Bantam, and therefore desired me to receiue some of them ashoare, so to disperle their knot. The fixe and twentieth, the Dragon and Peppercorne anchored at the Offing, Captaine Will. Keeling Generall in the Dragon, and Captaine Harris in the other. They had been with the King, who had graunted them trade at Teco for two yeares, after which time he would haue no Nation to trade but at Achen. Hee left M. Nichols principall at Achen.

The eight and twentieth of August, arriued Addicke Raia Pongola Corcon from Achen, who had the Kings goods to sell, and power to receiue all the Kings customes past and to come. Hee came in nature of an Informer, and therefore all men stood in feare of him. The first of September began their Ramdam, at the first of sight of the new Moone: all the Moneth following, they ate nothing but in the night, and that temperately. The fifteenth, wee begonne to buy Pepper, but were forced to promise Addicke Raia one hundred Royals, before we could haue any trade. The next day I excepted against the waight, whereupon Raia tooke it away to examine it, whereat the Polimo was much afraid, hauing in that kind much abused our Nation. The Pongelo came to the English house to reforme the weights, but beeing presently to weigh, gaue vs a weight lesse then that we had. The next day, I sent him fiftie Ryals for a Present, which he returned, saying, He scorned to be fed like a Boy. The one and twentieth, Captaine Harris being ashoare, seemed to take so much vpon him, that Raia Addick sent to him to borrow three hundred Rialls of eight to buy him a Wench, and prest the matter so instantly, that I was forced afterward to send him an hundred.

The third of October, I spoke at his instance also vnto Captaine Harris, to spare his Carpenters two or three daies to mend his Prow, which he refused to doe. The sixth, came the Speedwell sent by the Geuerall from Bantam, in the charge of John Clare, Botswaine of the Hector, sunke at Bantam in the Carining. Newes of five ships from England, foure for Surat, & the Swan for Bantam. The Thomas gone for Iapan, the Concord for Socodania, the Attendant for Iambe: from Maccassar also, that the Spaniards are there bound for the Moluccas, twenty seuen saile of Ships, Gallies, and Frigats, that we doubted much their comming to Bantam. On the foureteenth, arriued a Iana sunke with five Hollanders, which had been cast away in the Aolus, five degrees South, and desired our releefe. We graunted them the Speedwell to goe to the land Engano, where they had laid their goods and money ashoare, whether they set saile on the three and twentieth.

The people complaine, that when they sell their Pepper to the King, they loose a fourth part, by reason they take so much more then when they dealt with the English. Reliqua desiderantur.

Sir T. Roe.

Anuary the foure and twentieth, 1614. wee set saile from Graneſend. The second of February, Sir Thomas Roe Embaſſadour from his Maieſtie to the Great Mogoll, repayed aboard the Lyon with ſiſteene followers. And Maſter Humphrey Boughton aboard the Pepper-corne, (recommended to the Company by his Maieſtie) to paſſe into India. Wee carryed with vs in the Fleete eleuen Japonezas brought into England by the Cloue, diuided proportionably amongſt the ſhippes: Likewise fourteene Guzerats brought by the Dragon: alſo nineteene condemned perſons out of Newgate, to be left for diſcouerie of vnkowne places, the Company hauing obtayned the Kings Pardon for them to this purpoſe.

Japonezes Guzerats, and condemned perſons,

On the twentieth, ſome of the Dragons men, the Newgate-Birds amongſt, attempted to run away with their Pinnaffe, which then was preuented. But one of thoſe condemned with two of the Pepper-cornes company carryed away her Pinnaffe next night; two of my ſhips company hauing conſpired to carrie away the Boate, but were diſcouered. The three and twentieth, wee ſet ſaile out of the Downes.

Anno 1615.
Maps falſe in Cape Boyadore, and Marpequena.

On the ſixe of March, loſt ſight of the Lizard. And on the ſixe and twentieth, had ſight of land which we ſuppoſed the Weſtermoſt part of Forteuentura, and proued part of Barbarie, one of the land points entering the Riuer Marpequena, beeing miſgraduated one whole degree more Northerly then it ſhould be. Likewise Cape Boyadore is miſgraded one degree as we then found by experience, eſcaping great danger cauſed by that errour in our plats. The ſixe and twentieth, the Generall wind began.

The tenth of May, being by reckoning diſtant from the Cape of Good Hope, bearing Eaſt a quarter South, ſixe hundred and twentie leagues, wee ſaw many Pintados, Mangarelus and other fowles; whereof I haue not heard the like.

Soldania.
Corey a Sauage which had bin
in England.

The fift of Iune, we anchored in the Bay of Soldania, hauing not buried aboue three or foure in the whole Fleete, about thirtie being now ſicke. Wee built ſiue Tents. Corey came downe and welcommed vs after his manner, by whoſe meanes the people were nothing ſo fearefull as at other times, nor ſo theeuish. They brought vs cattell in great abundance, which wee bought for Copper ſhreds. Corey ſhewed ſome of our people his houſe, wife and children, at a Towne thence diſtant ſiue English miles, contayning about one hundred houſes. Moſt of them can ſay Sir Thomas Smith, English ſhips, which they often with great glorie repeat. Their wiues and children came often downe to vs, to whom we gaue great content with Bugles and the like. And two or three deſired to goe for England, ſeeing Corey had ſped ſo well, and returned ſo rich with his Copper Sute, which he yet keepeth in his houſe very charily. Corey alſo determined to returne, and to carry one of his ſonnes when our ſhips are thence bound home-wards. On the Eaſt-side of the Table is another Cottage of ten ſmall houſes, built round like Bee-hiues, couered with Mats made of Bents wouen together.

Their houſes.
Ten condemned perſons ſet
on ſhoare.

The ſixteenth, we ſet on ſhoare by conſultation tenne condemned perſons, to remayne at the Cape, viz. Iohn Croſſe, Henry Cocket, Clerke, Brand, Bouth, Hunnyard, Brigs, Pets, Metcalf, Skillicall. We gaue each man ſomething for his owne defence againſt wild beaſts and men, weapons and victuals. They conſented Croſſe ſhould be their head; The people deſire Braſſe, and ſer not ſo much by Copper; they deſire pieces of a foot or more ſquare. Iron hoops they care little for. We caught ſeuen or eight hundred fiſhes in the Riuer with Saynes.

Ningin, a medicinalle root much prized in Japan, ſome
what like a Skirret.

The Countrey people brought vs downe of the Root Ningin, whereof wee bought one handful for a piece of Copper an inch and halfe broad, and two inches and halfe in length. Our men got ſome, but not ſo full, nor ripe, this being not the ſeaſon, which in the full perfection is as tender and ſweet as Annis-ſeeds. On the twentieth, wee ſet ſaile. On the ſiue and twentieth, we had sight of land in thirtie foure degrees twentie eight minutes. It is the land to the West of Cape de Arcife misgraduated twentie seven minutes in Daniels Plats more Northerly then it should be.

Likewise, on the sixt of Iuly, we should haue seene land of Saint Laurence, by most of our reckonings according to the Plats of Daniel, (of Mercators proiection) which prooued false about seuentie leagues in distance of longitude betwixt the land of Ethiopia, Cape Bona Speranza, and the Ile of Saint Laurence, as the same protracted into Plano of Tottens making doe manifest.

10 The two and twentieth, all foure ships anchored at Mohelia. Wee had water out of Wels we digged a little about the high water, marke close by the rootes of Trees, eight or nine foote deepe. Doman is the chiefe Towne where the Sultan abides, to whom we gaue a double locked piece and a Sword. Wee had plentifull prouision for little Money, Hennes, Goates, Bullockes, Limons, Oranges, Limes, Tamera, Coco-nuts, Pines, Sugar-Canes, with other fruits. There are amongst them Arabians, Turkes, Moores, many of which speake reasonable Portuguse. Their told me of a strange courie of the Current which ranne fifteene dayes Westerly, fifteene dayes Easterly, and fifteene dayes no way: of which somewhat I obserued.

Mohelia.
Plentifull refreshing.

For at our first comming the Current set Westerly: and on the eight and twentieth, it set Easterly, and so continued while we stayed (sixe dayes) but we went away before perfect triall could be made. I learned of them that the King of Iuanni was here King, and gaue the Gouvernment to this Sultan.

20 The nine and twentieth, a ship arriued at Doman from Gangamora, in Saint Laurence, and I was wished by the Generall to see their Commodities, which were Rice and a kind of cloth made of Barkes of Trees whence they make coole garments. I enquired of the Pilot who spake Portuguse well, touching Captaine Rowles and the Englishmen betrayed in that Iland, of whom they could say nothing, but that two or three yeares past, an English Boy was at Gangamora in the custodie of Portugals, whom they thought now to be dead, neither knew how he came thither. This Towne of Doman hath in it one hundred houses of lime and stone strong bault, the Inhabitants orderly and ciuill. They haue traffique on the Coast of Melinde, Magadoxo, Mom-
30 bassa, Arabia and Saint Laurence: they carrie Slaues taken in warres, which they sell for nine or ten Rials of eight, and are sold againe in Portugall for one hundred. At Momboza and Magadoxo I vnderstood of great Trade for Elephants Teeth and Drugges, and it was concluded to aduise the Honourable Companie thereof touching sending a Pinasse yearly thither. Wee bought in Mohelia two or three Bullockes for a Barre of Iron weighing betwixt twentie and five and twentie pound. Wee bought there two hundred head of cattell, fortie Goates, Hennes, Fruits, &c.

Tree-cloth.

C. Rowles lost out of the Venitie.

The second of August, wee set saile from Mohelia: The seuenteenth, wee had sight of Cape Guardafui, where the Countrey people were fearefull of vs. The twentieth, wee anchored in the Road of Galencia in Socotora, where the fiercenesse of the wind made the Sea in a breach round about vs, and with the Sprie of the Sea, which the winde blew about vs like raine, our ship and tackling were allouer white like a hoarie Frost or white Salt.

Ship white
with Salt.

40 The three and twentieth, we anchored at Tamarine the Kings Towne, and the foure and twentieth at Delisha. Here, we were demanded thirtie Rials of eight the Kintall of Aloes Socatrina, which made vs buy the lesse: (for Captaine Downton, the Faiking said, had bought one hundred Kintals) it was liquid by reason of the newnesse or heat of the Sunne, and readie to run out of the skinnies. Each Kintall containd by our Beame one hundred, three pounds and a halfe. It is made of the leaues of Sempervine, the tops and roots cut away, and the iuice of the rest pressed out and boiled to a certain height, after put vp in earthen Pots, stopped closed, so standing eight monethes, and lastly, put in small skinnies to sell.

Aloes Socatrina.

50 The North part of Socotora or Socatra, lyeth in twelue degrees thirtie minutes, and the bodie in one hundred and twentie degrees, twentie five minutes. It is fourtene leagues thence to Abadelcuria, and as much from thence to Cape Guardafui. And I should wish those that saile to Socatra to touch at the Cape, thence to saile the next morning a little before breake of day, to lose no day-light, which is precious there by reason of the thicke and obscure night, with boysterous winds (and fogges) this moneth and a part of September: from thence to Abadelcuria, and anchor on the West side thereof in seven or eight fathome water vnder the low land, or if they get no anchorage, to keepe close by a winde to the Southward in the night, lest the windes and Northerly current put them too much to lee-ward before day-light. The winds blow not steddie, notwithstanding the Monson, sometimes South by West, and South South-west, but seldome to the East of the South. On the one and thirtieth, we set saile from Socatra.

Caueat for sailing to Socatra.

60 The tenth of September, we had Quales, Hernes and other Land-fowles blowne from land, vnable to returne.

On the fourteenth, we had sight of Din, and on the sixteenth of Daman, inhabited with Portugals, and strongly fortified.

On the eighteenth, we passed by the Barre of Surat, and anchored against Swally Barre. The next day we sent a messenger ashore, and our Boat returned the same night with M. William Bidulph. He told vs of affaires in the Countrey, and that Zulpher Car Chan was Gouvernour at Surat. Here we had sheepe for halfe a Riall of eight a piece, and twentie Hennes for a Riall of eight.

Swally.

Vile prices, base custome
at Surat.

The two and twentieth day, Master Barber and other Merchants were sent to Surat, to provide furniture for Sir Thomas Roe the Lord Embassadours house, who were there narrowly searched, their pockets and other parts according to the base manner of the Countrey, where a man must pay custome for a Riall of eight in his Purse, or a good Knife in his pocket: and if any raritie appeare, the Gouvernour vnder pretence of buying, takes it away.

Embassador landed.

The five and twentieth, the Lord Embassadour landed, accompanied with the Genetall, Capitaine and Merchants, and eightie men in Armes with shot and Pike in order, fortie eight Pieces of Ordnance discharged from the Fleet, the shippes also fitted in their holy-day Sutes of waste clothes, Streamers, Ensignes, Flagges, Pendants. The chiefe men of Surat attended in their Tent, and there welcommed him. Much adoe there was about the barbarous search, which they would haue executed on his followers, which the Embassador wholly disclaymed, till at the last he and three or foure of his chiefe Followers were exempted, the rest they would onely imbrace for fashions sake. Much passed also betwixt the Gouvernour and Him about like barbarous exactions, he iustly challenging the honour and immunitie of an Embassadour from a free King; they willing to make no difference betwixt him and others of that ranke in those parts, and of our owne also which had assumed that name. Once their barbarous vsage not only then perplexed him, and detayned him long till from the Court he had order, but all his time (as hereafter out of his owne Iournall shall follow) held him busie more then enough. Neither did they easily acknowledge difference betwixt this Embassadour and Master Edwards, who was so stiled amongst them.

Fugitiues.

The first of October, Master Barwickes man (which beeing inueigled by a Fugitiue from Capitaine Best, and since turned Moore, had runne away) was brought backe from Surat. Others after did the like, and wrote from Damon to periwade others. The second, came aboard two Hollanders which had come thither by land from Petapoli. The tenth, the Gouvernours brother came aboard with faire words and had a Present giuen him: also we had newes of Master Aldworths death. The Gouvernour impudently vrgeth Presents, hauing had three already, but findeth fault with them, and nominates what he would, begger and chooser both.

Coynes and wares at Surat.

The fifth of Nouember, we had newes from Brampore of the Lord Embassadors falling sicke there, and of Master Boughtons death.

The current Coine at Surat is Rials of eight, whereof the old with the plaine crosse is esteemed best, worth five Mamudies a piece, the new with Flower-delices at the ends of the crosse at foure Mamudies three quarters, if they be not light. The Mamudie is a siluer Coyne, course, contayning thirtie Pice, which is a Copper Coyne; twelue drammes make one Pice. The English shilling, if weight, will yeeld thirtie three Pice and halfe. Larines are much about the worth of Mamudies. Rupies are of sundry sorts; some worth halfe a Riall of eight, other lesse, by which a man may easily be deceived.

Ward slaine.

Their trading is by Banian Brokers, who are subtile and deceitfull both to the buyer and seller, if not preuented. In their Weights each Citie differeth from other. The Commodities are infinite: the chiefe, Indicoes of two sorts, Checques the courser, and Labor the finer; Cloth made of Cotton-wooll, as Callicoes white and coloured, contayning fourteene yards the Booke, from two to one hundred Mamudies the piece, Pintados, Chints and Chadors, Shalhes and Girdles, Cannakens, Treckanees, Serrabais, Aleiaes, Patellas, Sellas, Quilts, Carpets; Greene Ginger, Suckets, Lignum Aloes, Opium, Sadarmoniacke and abundance of other Drugs. Commodities vendible are Knives, Glasses, Pictures and such like toyes; English cloth; China wares, Silke and Porcelane; all manner of Spices. The Guzerats lade their great ships of nine, twelue or fifteene hundred tunnes at Goga, and steale out vnknowne to the Portugals.

Chiefe Cities for Trade on the Riuer Sinde or Indus, are Tatta, (on a Riuer which fals into it) Duilsinde, Multan, Lahore. At Duilsinde the Expedition in her former Voyage had deliuered Sir Robert Sherley the Perisan Embassadour, of whom I thought good to adde this (which I learned by inquiry of some of his Followers to Agra) as an appendix to that relation in my former Iournall. Being weary of Duilsinde by the Gouvernours euill intreatie and suffering the Portugals to molest him, seeking also to cut him off, for which purpose twelue Portugals came from Ormuz; He sought libertie to goe to Tatta, but the Gouvernour not permitting (as was thought of euill purpose) he went without leaue, and was by the way to passe a Riuer, where none durst carrie him or his, being prohibited on paine of death by the said Gouvernour. They therefore made rafts of boards and Timbers, on which the Embassadour shipped himselfe with Nazerbeg one of his Followers to helpe him ouer: and were no sooner put off, but twentie or thirtie Horsemen came from the Gouvernour in great haste to stay them. Thus were they brought backe, men swimming to the raft, which Nazerbeg was not able to guide against the tyde, and they narrowly escaped drowning. His Followers disdainning this rude dealing, one Master John Ward shot off his Pistoll in in their faces, and was instantly slaine by another shot, and the rest carried away Prisoners to Duilsinde, being pillaged by the way of the Souldiers. After some time of imprisonment, the Gouvernour permitted their departure to Tatta, where they were friendly entertained of the Gouvernour being a Persian. Sir Thomas Powell, and Master Francis Bub, were then dead before in Duilsinde. He remayned at Tatta till fit opportunitie for Agra, the way long and in danger of death and his Theeves: whither he went in company of a great man which had a strong Conuoy, for whom he waited also two moneths.

The Ladie Powell in this space was deliuered of a Sonne, but shee and it together with Master Michael Powell, Brother to Sir Thomas, lost their liues in this tedious expectation, in Boats, for that great man afore said. At his comming to Agra the Mogoll gaue him fauourable entertainment, and vpon his complaint sent for the Banian Gouvernour of Duilsinde, to answere at the Court, promising him his owne reuenge, if he would stay. But hee hastening to the Persian, after many Presents from the Mogoll, with a Conuoy and necessaries for his iourney, departed for Persia, not hauing one Englishman with him. Master Richard Barber his Apothecarie returned to Surat, and John Heriot dyed at Agra. There remayned with him of his old Followers only his Ladie, and her Woman, two Persians, the old Armenian and the Chircassian: His Dutch Jeweller came from Agra to Surat, with Master Edwards.

§. II.

Prizes taken, Factorie at Callicut, Obseruations of diuers places of Sumatra: the English shippes miscarrie. Dutch abuses, Factories in India.

He nine and twentieth of Februaty, we tooke a Portugall prize. The third of March, we riding at an anchor in the Road of Callicut. The Great *Samorine*s Deputie came aboard many Boats attending him, signifying his Masters ioy of our comming, and his earnest desire to haue conference with our Nation, and therefore earnestly perswaded vs to stay a day or two, till he might send to the Samorine, then at Crangalor, besieging a Castle of the Portugals. We had here store of prouision brought aboard at reasonable rates. Callicut hath latitude eleuen degrees ten minutes, variation fiftene degrees fortie minutes. The same evening came a Pilot by order from the Samorine to intreate vs to ride two or three dayes before Crangalor.

The fifth, we anchored all foure ships before Crangalor, two leagues from the shoare. About noone the Samorine sent to the Generall to request his company alhoare, which was not thought fit without a pledge, and Master George Barkley went. But the Samorine refused to reueale his minde to any but the Generall, and seemed discontent at his stay.

Crangalor in 16. deg. 15. min.

The eight, he went and spake with the Samorine, whose businesse was to stablish a Factorie in his Dominion, profering a faire house rent-free, freedome from Customes or any other Taxations, for whatsoeuer goods brought thither or carryed thence, with protestation of his affection to our Nation. Answer was made of our present disability, hauing left most of our goods at Surat, and now going to Bantam. He replied, that for present leauing goods it was no matter, only that we would leaue two or three English there which should want nothing, and the next yeere we might make supply of men, and goods, hereby he being assured of our returne: otherwise his care and hopes should be frustrated. He told also of a shippes lading of Pepper there to be had yearly, and of the vent of our Commodities. Whereupon it was concluded to leaue a Factorie there, which with Merchandise were sent ashore on the ninth. The men were George Woolman chiefe, Peter Needham and Roger Hares vnder-factors, Edward Peake a Boy, and Richard Stamford. The Boy was to learne the Language. The Kings name is Pendre Quone Samorine. A Minion and a Barrell of Powder was given him for a Present. He promised that if hee recouered the Fort of Crangalor from the Portugals, the English should possesse it.

Offers of the *Samorine*s to the English.

Factory at Crangalor.

The tenth, the King sent his Letter of agreement touching the said Priuiledges with many protestations of loue. This day we set saile. We came before Cochin and might behold the forme of it. The next day we had sight of Conlan Castle, and Towne, and a ship riding at anchor vnder the Castle which we boarded and brought forth, the people being fled without hurt of shot from the Castle. It was a Portugall ship of foure or five hundred Tunnes lately arriued from Bengala and Pegu, laden with Rice, Graine, Bengala clothing, Butter, Sugar, Gummelacke, hard Waxe, Drugges and other prouisions.

Cochin. Conlan, a second prize taken.

The twelfth, we espied another ship which by mid-night we fetched vp; shee yeilded at the first shot. I sent for her chiefe men aboard my ship (the rest being three or foure miles off, and set some of mine aboard charging them to hurt no person. There were eightene or twentie Portugals, and about eightie slaues, men, women and children: her chiefe lading Rice, Butter, Sugar, Gummelacke, Drugges, Bengala Stuffs. Wee offered these our first price with victuals to carrie them ashore, which they refused fearing to become a prey to the Malabars, a Fleet of whom consisting of fourteene saile they lately had with difficultie escaped. The next day wee landed them where they desired and suffered them to depart vnsearched for Plate, Jewels, Money and the like. We had three English ships, and three prizes.

The fourteenth, we arrived at Brinion where we took out of the first prize what we pleased and set her a drift. Brinion is in latitude eight degrees thirtie minutes, variation fifteen. It hath a small Town in a little round Bay, is to be known by a long white beach to the North, and to the South is all high land: and two leagues to the South, a red Cliffe neere the Sea. From thence to Cape Comorine is sixteene leagues: the course South-east by South bold and free Coast. The Inhabitants of Brinion are no way subiect to the Portugals.

The first of Aprill, the bodie of Zeilon did beare East by South seven leagues off.

Note for Cape
Comorine.

The tenth, the Pike Adam bare North. I tooke my leaue of the Generall, the Dragon and Pepper-Corne they being bound for Achen, and I in the Expedition for Priaman, Tecoo, and Bantam. It is good to ride till the end of March in Brinion, and not to double the Cape by reason of calmes, the Southerly Current setting off to the Maldina: but then the Easterly Monson ends.

The Aduice &
Hoflander at
Iapan.

I would wish all that come from the West to Priaman or Tecoo, to dispose that they may haue day-light enough for the comming in betwixt Nimptan and the other Islands adjacent. The best is on the North-side. On the thirtieth, I met the Aduice going for Tecoo, but at my request shee returned to Bantam whence she was sent for Iapon.

The first of May, I arrived at Bantam, where I found the Hoflander newly returned from Iapon, and the Attendance from Iambe, most of the men sicke or dead. Here I heard of the death of Captaine Downton, and of the arriual of Captaine Samuel Castleton with the Cloue and Defence, which with the Thomas and Concord were gone for the Moluccas: The Thomas appointed to proceed from thence to Iapon.

Strange wormes in the Surat Sea.

The nineteenth, I set saile for Tecoo. The tenth of Iune, I put into Priaman, and the eighteenth arrived at Tecoo. The third of Iuly, I brought my ship on Careene to sheath her. The double sheathing of ships which goe for Surat is of great purpose: for though the outermost sheathing be eaten like a Honey-combe with wormes, yet the inner is nothing perished. It were also requisite that the Rudders were sheathed with thinne Copper, to preuent the Wormes eating off the edges thereof; which causeth great defect in the steering, not easily to be remedied being so deepe vnder water. The Inhabitants here are barbarous, deceitfull, expecting bribes, and sometimes I haue bene in danger to be murdered, one hundred of them drawing their Crises vpon vs, because they might not haue their will to take our goods vpon trust or otherwise at their pleasures. The twentieth, Thomas Bonner Master of the Expedition dyed, Iohn Row succeeded, the third Master in this ship this Voyage.

The sixe and twentieth, arrived the Dragon and Pepper-Corne from Achen. They had bought there Pepper carryed thither from Tecoo in great lunkes and Prawes which saile to and fro, but neuer out of sight of land.

King of Achen
his playing the Merchant.

The King of Achen commands those of Tecoo to bring thither their Pepper, which none may buy but he, who puts off his Surat Commodities in trucke at what rates he pleaseth. Oft times he sends his Commodities to Priaman and Tecoo, enforcing them to buy them at his rates, none being suffered to buy or sell with other till his bee vented: This makes our Trade with them the better.

Iambe.

Iambe is on the East-side of Sumatra. It yeeldeth like great-grained Pepper as Priaman, but is not subiect to the King of Achen, as are Baruse, Passaman, Tecoo, Priaman, Cottatinga, and other places on the West-side. Baruse is to the North of Passaman, and yeelds store of Beniamin, Cottatinga Gold, the other places Pepper. The Generall brought the King of Achens Letter to them which the great men receiued with great submission, each kissing and laying it on his head, promising vs to performe the contents, but failed. And it were fit in these Letters of the King, to procure him to expresse the manner and particulars of our Trade. The eleuenth of September, I set saile from Tecoo for Bantam.

Passaman best Gold and Pepper.
Gold, and good constitution of bodie or mind,
not agreeing.
Tecoo barbarous.

The best Gold and most plenty is had at the great high hill of Passaman, where also is greatest quantitie of Pepper, the fairest and best cheape: but the euill constitution of the aire is to pestilent and infectious, that there is no going thither for our Nation without mortalitie of men: neither needs for the Pepper, Surat Commodities at Tecoo being sufficient attractive. Many of the Natiues I haue obserued full of contagious diseases, the limbes of some ready to droppe off with rotnesse, others hauing huge swellings (Wennes) vnder the throat as bigge as a two peny loafer, which they impute to the bad water. They are very ignorant to cure their diseases. The people of Tecoo are base, theeuish, subtil, embracing gaine at any price by fraud, or (as farre as they dare) by force, mis-reckoning, false weights, yea attempting to poison our meates and drinckes as they are dressing, creeling also our horses. Better order may be hoped by the King of Achens procurement. There were but five left in the Factory. Our two Portugall prizes wee made away at Achen, sharing (according to the custome of the sea) one sixt part to the shippes companies, the rest for our employers, &c.

Between Priaman and Tecoo there lyeth a dangerous shoald North-west by West, from the South-west Ile of Priaman, a mile and quarter in length, and in breadth a quarter, of which care is to be had, lest the Current setting Southerly put you on it. This and other shoalds hereabouts being white Corall, are easily discerned. When the South-west Ile doth beare South South-east from you, then are you past danger, provided the Northernmost Ile of the foure by Priaman shoare beare East by North, so may you steere in for the Road, East, and East by South, and East South-east, leaving two Ilands on the Starboard, and two on the Larboard side. Latitude of Tecoo is South thirtie minutes, variation West foure degrees, thirty minutes: latitude of Priaman is also South betwixt eight and forty degrees, fifty minutes.

Observations for going into Priaman Road. Hee mentioneth many other shoalds not here expressed, but knowne to our Country-men by experience.

Many of our men were sicke, whereof the cause seemeth their immoderate drinking of Arack and strong drinckes. At Bantam were at my last being there (October 1616.) foure English ships there and at Iackatra, and five Flemish ships, which raised the price of Pepper, and the rather by the Hollanders boasts of bringing this year sixteene hundred thousand Rialls of eight, ready money, which it is likely they reported to out-braue our Nation. The last Fleet of theirs, six in number, tooke two or three Portugall ships, whereof they made great brauado's. They seeke by all abuses to depresse our Nation, in vnchristian manner through the Indies: euen in Bantam (where they acknowledge our equall right) they threaten to pull our people out of the Factory by the eares; sometime quarrell with them in the streets, other times imprison them; and when themselves haue caused an uproare, they complaine to the King of Bantam of our vnquietnesse, and bribe him to command vs to be quiet, who receiueth their money, and tells vs of their dealing, himselfe taking aduantage to pole both parts, by this disagreement.

Huge summes transported by Hollanders. Their pride and abuses of the English.

Also at Puloway, an Iland freely giuen His Maestie, they abused our people, putting halters about their neckes, and leading them thorow the Towne with an houre-glasse before them, publishing that they should be hanged so soone as the glasse was runne: and although they did not effect that honorable designe, yet did they imprison them, and keepe them three or foure dayes in irons, afterwards sending them aboard the Concord and Thomasine vpon a counterfeit composition neuer to returne (these things are reported to bee very true.) Likewise at the returne of the Hoflander from Iapan, shee brought thirtie tunnes of wood, free of freight and charges, for the Hollanders; who notwithstanding reported that shee had returned empty but for their wood: which they might haue said as well of my bringing one and thirtie Charles of Indico, and a Chitt of Pistolls freight-free for them from Surat to Bantam.

Captaine Castleton went to the Moluccas with foure ships, the Claue, Defence, Thomas and Concord, to be better able to defend themselves against the Hollanders: but being threatned by eleuen saile of theirs, they returned without doing any great matter, onely a few Cloaues laded in the Claue; the Captaine himselfe dying there of the fluxe, to whom the fault is imputed with other things laid to him.

Captaine Castleton to the Moluccas with foure ships.

The Trades-Increase was fired twice by the Iauans, and by our people quenched: but the third, time fired in so many places at once, that industry could not saue her.

Decay or losse of English ships.

The Darling (that I may adde such ships as were lost and laid vp at my departure from Bantam) was laid vp at Patania, in Iune 1615. by Master Larkine and the Factory, and could not be repaired: Herrold the Master was reported to haue intended to runne away with her to the Portugals, which being preuented, he yet went himselfe.

Trades-Increase, Darling.

The Thomasine was cast away, comming from the Moluccas, vpon a shoald in the night, in September 1615. they lost their goods, which were not much, but saued their money, two thousand Rialls of eight, with their provisions, liuing fourteene dayes in a desolate Iland, where they fitted their Boat, which brought them and their money to Bantam, leaving the rest behind; the King of Macasser seizing on them, who would not make restitution. This shoald lyeth eighteene leagues West from Macasser.

Thomasine.

The Heffor failed at Iackatra in careening, the vpper workes not fitted (as is reported) and the seams opening, and receiuing so much water, that shee suncke in three fathom, the keele exceedingly worme-eaten.

Heffor.

The Concord is there also laid vp, rotten and leake, that they were forced to take out her provisions, and let her sinke close to the shoare.

Concord.

The Hoflander was appointed to set saile for the Coast of Coromandel, the fifteenth of October, 1615.

The Factories which I could heare of settled for the Company in the East-Indies are these: Bantam (wherein were George Barkley Chiefe, Iohn Jordan, George Ball, Ralph Copendale, with diuers others both Factors and Attendants) Iackatra, Surat, Amaduanas, Agra and Azmire; Bram-pore, Calecut, M. sulipatan, Petapoli, Patania, Siam, Beniarmasse, Socodania, Macasser, Achen, Iambe, Tecoo, Feando in Iapan, Iapar, Banda.

English Factories.

The commodity which ariseth from the Factory at Achen is to sollicite for our our better proceeding at Priaman and Tecoo, the place is vnwholesome, especially for such as stiffe themselves with hot and fiery drinckes, as Aracke and Aracape, which bring many vnto vntimely ends; whence ariseth an imputation to the Voyage. How vnruely the common sort are abroad, cannot be imagined at home, many neuer thinking themselves well, longer then whiles their braines are a crowing with drinke. The King of Achen is laid to haue a strange straine of drinking drunke, when the English resort to him, thereby to shew his loue; to whom it seemeth dishonor, not to conforme in sitting in the water with him, and other his rites. He is very cruell to his subiects, daily cutting off their hands, armes or legges, vpon small or no occasions; causing them to bee throwne before Elephants, himselfe commanding the (vnderstanding) Elephant to toss the partie so oft and so high, either to bruise or kill him, as he fancieth. He hath prohibited any, which arrive at his Port, without his Chop to come on shoare, which a Dutch Merchant neglecting, caused a Dutch General there arriving to come on land, professing his great fauour with the King: who comming to the Court-gate, where they must demand another Chop: the King finding the chiefe Leeger cause of that presumption, sent for him, and laid him before the Elephant, which tossed him three times (without much bruising) to teach him how to neglect the commands of Kings another time; the Dutch Generall standing by, and fearing his owne share, whom yet the King cleared as ignorant of his Law. The King after sent for the Merchant to prie into his patience, who for feare of worse, soothed him, and acknowledged it a fatherly chastisement, yet closely fled at the departure of the ships; the rest following were brought backe, and the King hath placed vs in their house.

Cause of disgust betwixt the Achener and Hollander.

§. III.

A briefe Declaration of the Ports, Cities and Townes, inhabited and traded vnto by the Portugall, betwixt the Cape of Good Hope and Iapan, as I could learne by diligent enquiry.

Places of Portugall trade.
Quame or Chamo.
Mosambique.
Mombassa.

He Riuer Quame in South latitude one and twenty degrees, fifty minutes, heere is reported to be Gold, Elephants-teeth, Ambergreese and Slaues, for which they trade yearly.

Mosambique is an Iland where they trade for Gold, Ambergreese and Slaues. 30

Mombassa in South latitude three degrees, thirty minutes, where they yearely trade for Gold, Ambergreese, Elephants-teeth, and Slaues, in trucke of Iron, Lead, Tinne, and Cambaya Commodities.

Magadoxo.

Magadoxo hath two degrees, five and twenty minutes, store of Elephants-teeth, some Ambergreese, and diuers sorts of Drugges. From these places they driue their annuall trade into Cambaya, the Red-sea, and other places, obseruing the Monsons, which blow West in Aprill, May, Iune, Iuly, August, and part of September, and the East Monson the rest of the yeare, the space betwixt both, being various or calme, but in few dayes hold course, except to the East of Sumatra, where they keepe five months East, and five West, two variable.

The Monsons courses

Ormuz.

Ormuz in the Gulfe of Persia, whence they trade into Persia, Arabia, Diu, Sinde, &c. they fetch 40 much Pearle from Balsora, and with Persian Commodities lade a shippe or two for Diu, where in the end of August, or middle of September they arrive; they bring with them also great store of Rials of eight. Ormuz is their best place, but Goa, which they haue in the Indies.

Muskat.

Muskat: they haue small trade heere, and a Fort, where they awe the Natiues by land and sea, not suffering them to trade but by their licence, what, and how much, vnder paine of confiscation, which they practise thorow all the Indies, where they are strong.

Diu.

Sinde or Diu, in the Mogolls Dominion, in foure and twenty degrees, eight and thirty minutes: variation West, sixe degrees, five and forty minutes. Diu, where they haue a strong Castle. 50

Damon is a Citie inhabited by them, where they haue a Castle, and by report one hundred Villages.

Serra de Bazien.
Chaul, Dabul.

Serra de Bazien, is a little South from Damon, and bordereth vpon the Decans Countrey, betwixt which and Chaul they haue three Ports, Gazien, Banda and Maia. Chaul is a great Citie with a Castle. Dabul hath a Factory, but no Fort.

Goa.

Goa is their Metropolitan Cite of India, built on a small Iland, the anchoring place of their Carickes, the Seat of their Vice-Roy.

Onor, Barcelor.

Onor hath a small Fort. Barcelor hath a Castle and Towne, it yeeldeth Pepper, Ginger, and many sorts of Drugges.

Mangalor, Cananor.
Crangalor.

Mangalor hath a Towne and Castle. Cananor is a Citie, and hath a Castle, Merchandize as before. From Calicut they are thrust out by the Samorine, as he seeketh also at Crangalor, where they haue a Fort. 60

Cochin.

Cochin hath a strong City and Castle, pleasantly situated by the Sea side in a good ayre, with a faire Riuer for ships to ride.

Comlan:

Cowlan, heere they haue a Towne and strong Castle. Saint Laurence is a small Village, inhabited by Friars and Iesuits.

Quilaon, is a small Citie with a Castle. Tuckatra, a Towne with a Castle, the people most part Christians.

Maner, is on the Iland Zelon, betwixt Cape Comorine and Punto de Galle, a Towne inhabited by Portugals. There also they haue Columbo, and many other small habitations, hauing almost conquered the Iland: it yeelds Sinamom and Drugges.

Columbo.

Negapatan, is a City of great trade: heere they haue only a Factory. Saint Thomas, alias Ma-lapor, is a walled City, inhabited with Portugals, in thirteene degrees, twenty minutes. Vp the Riuer Ganges, they haue many small habitations, some Factories, and a Towne at Bengala.

In Pegu, they haue a Factory, and likewise in Aracon, and in the Riuer of Martaban.

At Iunfalao, they haue a great Factory, from whence they lade much Tinne for the Coast of Malabar.

Aracon.
Iunfalao.

Malacca, is a strong city and castle, the Centre of a great trade in those parts, whence the King of Achen seekes to roote them out, hauing burnt and spoiled some of their ships this yeare.

At Macao, an Iland vpon the Coast of China, they haue a Citie with a Castle, reported to be of great trade with the Chineses.

In Iapan, they haue a Factory, but neither Towne nor Fort. They trade also on the Coast of China, in the time of fitting Monson to and from Iapan and other parts: whereof the Hollanders are said to make good pillage, and of all Heathen Nations, Chineses and others, being all fish that comes to net.

The first of Nouember, we set saile. The fifth of Ianuary, I was not able to weigh the anchor (the wind ouer-blowing) to follow the Dragon to Penguin Iland. My aduise for ships comming about the Cape at this time of the yeare, is, not to anchor short of Soldania Road, but rather to put romer for Penguin Iland, and there to anchor with two at once till the wind serue.

In December, Ianuary and February, the South South-east winds are there very furious, from the new Moone to the full. I hold it dangerous neuertheless to neglect this place in hope of Saint Helena (a certainty for vncertainty) the Sunnes and Moones often obscuritie and thicke mists at this time of the yeare, may frustrate the best Artists to the losse of shippe and men. Cory came downe with three sheepe, and promised more: but hastened away to his wife and children, which he said now dwelt further. It seemeth that the Hollanders haue frighted them, by their going vp into the Countrey with one hundred men at a time. Our best refreshing heere was fresh-fish.

Note.

The ninth of Aprill 1617. wee passed much weeds, called the Seragasso, which lye in long ridges or rankes a pretty distance one from another alongst with the wind, with which they alter and shift. It hath a leafe like Samper, but not so thicke, and a yellow berry very small. It reacheth from two and twenty degrees, three minutes North latitude, vnto two and thirty degrees North latitude. The nine and twentieth of May we anchored in the Downes.

CHAP. XVI.

Observations collected out of the Iournall of Sir THOMAS ROE, Knight, Lord Embassadour from His MAIESTIE of Great Britaine, to the Great Mogol: Of matters occurring worthy memory in the way, and in the Mogols Court. His Customes, Cities, Countryes, Subiects, and other Indian Affaires.

§. I.

Occurrents and obseruations, in, and touching the Voyage to Surat.

He fifth of Iune, we anchored in the roade of Soldania. Though the Variation be an excellent euident in the whole course of veering land, yet it deliuereth no other certaintie, but warning to look out; for it lessens not in the same proportion neere land, but by a much slower: for which I could giue a perspicuous reason, but too large for this place, nor can any iudgement at all be made to twenty leagues thereby (that shall be infallible) the magneticall amplitude beeing so difficult to obserue truely by the Ships motion, and the Needles quicknesse, that a degree is scarce an error. This consideration made me confident, that we should see no land vntill the fifth day early in the morning.

Vncertainty of the Variation.

Soldania, is as I suppose, an Iland in the South end whereof is the Cape of Good Hope, diuided from from the maine by a deepe Bay on the South-East side, and due East by a Riuer, which wee discern vpon the table. The land is fruitfull, bearing short thicke grasse, the maine is diuided with most high and steepe rocky Mountaines couered with snow, and vnaccessible, except it be searched by the Riuer of Dulce, which doubtlesse is very great, falling into the Bay on the East side: there is on the Iland five or sixe hundred people, the most barbarous in the world, eating Carrion, wearing the guts of sheepe about their necks for health, and rubbing their heads (curled like Negroes) with dung of beasts and dirt: they haue no other clothing then beasts skinnnes wrapt on their shoulders, the skin next the body in heat, in cold the hairy side; their houses are but one mat, concaued like an Ouen, into which they creepe, and turne them about as the wind changes: for they haue no doores to keepe it out. They haue left their stealing by trading with vs, and by signes make shew their heart is good: they know no kind of God or Religion. The aire, and water is very good and wholesome, and both of them subtile and searching. There is on the Iland, Buls, Cowes, Antelops, Baboones, Moules of great bignesse, Feasants, Patridges, Larks, Wildgeese, Ducks, Passerflannugos, and many others. On Pengwyn there is a fowle so called, that goes vpright, his wings without feathers, hanging downe like sleeues faced with white: they fly not, but walke in pathes and keep their diuisions and quarters orderly; they are a strange fowle, or rather a miscellaneous creature, of Beast, Bird, and Fish, but most of Bird, confuting that definition of man to be Animal bipes implume, which is nearer to a description of this creature. The commodities here are, first reasonable refreshing with Cattell (so that a season be chosen when they are not leane, a Moneth after the Sunne is departed from them Northward) Maugin rootes, Arras, if our Merchants be not deceiued; and I doe strongly suppose, that I found out a Rocke yeelding Quick-siluer and Vermillion, the stone being spotted all without, with a most pure red colour, equall to any painting, and that will come off vpon Paper, or other fit matter: by the description of John Acosta it cannot faile to be the same; it is also very heauy, full of Marquisat and minerall appearances. The Table, or high Rocke so called, by a straight line from the water side, is 11833 foot high; the Bay is full of Whales and Seales. The Dutch haue fished on Pengwyn for them: the latitude is, thirtie three degrees fortie five minutes: the longitude twentie eight degrees thirtie minutes from the Lifard, the variation doubtfull, whether to the East or West; but my opinion is, that the variation is West thirty minutes: the cause of variation beeing in the maine, as appears euidently by the many lines, and changes towards the Cape F. and after Westerly: if any shipping, hauing time enough, fall but one hundred leagues more to the North with the maine, which may be done with safety, no winds forbidding it, I assure my selfe they shall haue good trade for Cattell, and other Commodities, and may by leauing some men, discover the land, and perhaps get knowledge of the people that trade with the Spaniards on the East side in one and twenty degrees for Gold, after the manner of the Moors in Barbary to Gago. These left at the Cape will goe no further, but attend opportunity of passage, and there can doe no great good being among the basest banished people, that know nothing fauouring of man, nor are no other way men, but as they speake and walke like men.

Molalia is one of the foure Ilands of Comory, Angazesia, Iuanny, and Mayotta beeing the other three. They lie East and West neere in a parallel one off another, except Angazesia, which lieth somewhat more North. Molalia is in twelue degrees twentie minutes South latitude, in the same Meridian with Cape Augustine, the variation being sixteene degrees fortie minutes.

Angazesia beares from it by the Compasse North by West, seuen leagues off, the further-most end in eleuen degrees fiftie five minutes, extending it selfe North eleuen degrees sixe minutes, as I obserued within five leagues thereof, bearing South from me; it is the highest land I euer saw, inhabited by Moors trading with the Maine, and the other three Easterne Ilands with their Cattell and fruits, for Callicoes, or other linnen to couer them. It is gouerned by tenne petty Kings, and is sufficiently fruitfull of Kine, faire Goates, Cocos, Orenge and Limons: they made vs fires as we passed by, being desirous of trade at the first hand which now they fetch by Canoes at Molalia where our ships ride. They are held a false and an vnfaithfull people, hauing betrayed some of S. James Lancasters men long since; but now hauing experience of vs at other Ilands, I doubt not they would regaine their credits.

Iuanny lies from Molalia East, and Mayotta in the same course, the coast betweene them is euery way bold. These three Ilands are very full of very good refreshings, but principally Mayotta, as I was informed by the Arabs trading in Molalia, and the Dutch stop there. The next in goodnesse is Iuanny, where liues an old Woman Sultanne of them all, to whom they repaire for Iustice, both in Ciuill and Criminall causes.

Molalia hath in it three Sub-Sultans, children of the old woman, two men one daughter, who gouerne seuerall parts of the Iland. The Sultan in whose quarter we anchored hath such authoritie, that his subiects dare not sell a Nut vntill leaue obtained: to which end, Captaine Keeling sent foure boats to his Towne desiring libertie to trade, where they were receiued by a Gouernour, or rather an Admirall or Commander of the port, lying some foure leagues to the Eastward of our Road, where hauing obtained leaue to come alhoare, we landed some fortie men with Captaine Newport: the Gouernour they found sitting vpon a Mat of straw, vnder the side of a Iunke

Junke which was a building, accompanied with about fiftie men, his apparrell was a Mantle of blue and red linnen, wrapt about him to his knees, his legges and feet bare, on his head a close Cap of checker worke, the Interpreters were certaine Magadoxians, that spake Arabique and broken Portuguese. Captain Newport presenting him with a Peece and a Sword blade from Capt. Keeling, receiued a welcome, and commanded foure Bullocks to be returned in requitall, and with grauitie enough intertained them, giuing free libertie to buy and sell, and signifying so much by a Messenger to the Inhabitants round about, and promised to send downe his owne Cattell, but professed he had no power to compell or make price for others, but left the trade open to euery mans will. He sent for Coco Nuts to giue the Company, himselfe chewing Bittle, and lime of Burnt Oyster-shells with a kernell of a Nut called Arracca, like an akorne, it bites in the mouth, auoids rheume, cooles the head, strengthens the teeth, and is all their Phisick: it makes one vnused to it giddie, and makes a mans spittle red, and in time colours the teeth, which is esteemed a beautie: this is vsed by all men hourelly. From the Gouvernour they were led to a Carpenters house, a chiefe man of that towne; the house built of lime and stone, plaistered with mortar or white lime, low and little Rooft, with Rafters of wood couered with leaues, the out-sides walled with Canes: they are kept cleanelly, and their poore household-stuffe still neate, their Gardens paled with Canes, inclosing some Tobacco, and Plantan trees. For Dinner, a boord was set vpon Tressels couered with a fine new Mat, benches of stone about it likewise couered, on which they sat: first water was brought to euery man in a Coco-shell poured out into a wooden platter, and instead of a Towell, the rinds of Cocos. Then was set boyld Rice, and roasted Plantans vpon the Rice, quarters of Hennes, and pieces of Goat broild. After grace said, they fell to their meat, with bread made of Cuscus beaten, and mingled with honey, and so fryed, and Palmet wine, and Coco milke for drinke. I sent a Gentleman and my Chaplin to see the Sultan himselfe, who liues three miles vp in the land from Fambone the towne of the Gouvernour, but they found him by chance there: he vsed them courteously, and made them dine with him, differing little from the former intertainment, onely the Gouvernour and all other gaue him much respect, kissing his hand, his name is Sultan Amar-Adel, a kinne to Mahomet, not vnlike to be descended of such an imposterous race, his clothes not vnlike the Gouvernour, but somewhat better stuffe, his manners differing much, beeing with lesse grauitie and State, somewhat a light foole, and very hastie to be dranke with wine carried by the English. The other Vice-Sultan his brother, in whose quarter we were not, I saw beeing come downe to our Road with three slaues to trade: he brought a Certificate from Captaine Sayers, that he had vsed the English well in his Dominions, he is as well Xeriffe as Sultan, which is high Priest: he kept a kind of State in place, but otherwise a poore bare-footed roague: he offered to trade for Quick-siluer, and beeing asked what quantitie hee would buy, replied to foure or fise Rialls of eight; when this merchandize failed him, hee fell to begging of shooes. Then I left him.

All the people are strict Mahometans, obseruing much of the old law, and at this time being the preparation to their Ramdam or Lent, vnwilling to drinke wine: they are very iealous to let the Women or Moschees to be seene, of which we had experience by an alarme of one of their Priests, who espied one of ours comming to a Village, who shut vp all the Women, and cryed out if we came neere them or their Church, they would kill vs; but by the authoritie of the Xeriffe, the Priest was appeased, and suffered it with more patience. Many of them speake and write the Arabique in a faire Character, and some few Portuguese, trading to Mosambique in Iunkes of fortie Tunnes made of Cocos sowed, in stead of Pinnes caucked, tackled, and wholly fitted, victualled, and fraughted with that vniuersall tree.

Here our fleet refreshed with Oxen and Cowes, small as two yeereling, but good flesh, with Goats very fat and large, Arabian sheepe, Hennes, Cocos, Oranges, Limons, Limes in great abundance, which we bought for Callicoes, Hollands, or other linnens, Sword-blades, and Rialls of eight, and their fruits for Glasses, Kniues and trifles: what soeuer is bought for money is bought dearest.

Here was in trade a Junke of Madagascar with slaues: the Pilote of the Junke called Malim Abrinne spake Portuguese, and told me on the South-side of S. Laurence, there was store of Amber-greece, and Cocos of the Sea; hee was skilfull in the coast, and in the lying and bearing of lands, both in course and distance. He had a great parchment Card, lined and graduated orderly, which I sent to see: he found fault with many things in my Card at sight, which I mented by his direction, and with reason, as the distance from Socatra from the Main, and rating quite out certaine Ilands to the Southward of Molalia, affirming there are none such: his countrey lyes from one degree fiftie minutes, to foure degrees, the Port in two degrees tenne minutes North latitude, gouerned by one King: he assured me of trade enough at his port to load one ship with Marfill, Amber, and Tinta Roxa: he promised to bring me his Plot and soundings, and a sample of Tinta Roxa, but some other cause diuerted him, that he would come no more at me, notwithstanding I dealt liberally with him in present and in promises. To the South of Magadoxa, all the Ports are gouerned by Moorish petty Kings, euen to Mosambique: he perswaded me that wee might in many places trade for Gold and Siluer; that in Magadoxa the houses roofes were gilt, that that they had gold in sand, and mingled with earth, which they esteeme not: of the Inland hee knew little, onely naming some places or Regions betweene Magadoxia and Prester John, as Odelia Mabesa, Rechamy and Gala, of which Odelia and Gala, are Chaphares which signifieth mis-believers; I know not whether he meanes Gentiles or Christians, vsing the same promiscuously alwel to Prester John as to other Gentiles. Of Prester John, he knoweth no more, then that hee is a great Prince and a Capbar: from Magadoxo to Cambaya, hee was expert, his brother who came with him to me, was in fight against the Hope in a Portugall ship, pressed from Damon, in which fortie five were slaine, more he knew not, but that three ships were burned, and the rest run away; he said the King of Dabul tooke courage on this victorie and surprised Chaul, Damon, & other the Portugals Port Townes, was marching to Goa, that the Portugall was in great distresse of victuals. I hoped to haue stord my selfe with more discourse from him, but I was, I know not how, preuented: it were time well bestowed to see this Coast, and I spake to some of it, but it fared the worse for the Father.

Chaul, Damon.

The Road of Molalia lyes in twelue degrees ten minutes, and for the first sixe dayes the Current sets two leagues a watch South-west, the Moone increasing at the ful, we woond vp North-east the other way but very easily, for the most part riding vpon the Current. The Magadoxians made some absurdly belecue, that the Current set fiftene dayes one way, and fiftene another, and fiftene dayes still: which because of the first sixe dayes it set South-west, and after wee woond vp North-east, it begot the opinion of a wonder, but the Current sets constantly South-west, and before the full of the Moone, it had such power on the ebbe and flood that wee neuer woond, but at the full Moone and Spring-tydes we roade vpon the flood against the Current it running vnder, and the tyde aboue, highing sixteene foote water, and the ebbe winding backe with the Current, so that the supposed chance of the Current, was on the strong tydes, at the full Moone ouercomming it aboue: for at Sea when the spring was past, I found the same Current, and though we were set to the Eastward the first day we weighed, vnto the Westward the next, the cause was the Eddies of Iuanny one day, and Angazesia the other, but being cleere of them it set his due course, that I raised little, and did West-ward much.

The fourteenth of August, in the morning we saw the Coast of Magadoxia in foure degrees of North latitude foure leagues off sounding, had eightene fathome of low land, white sandie bankes. Then wee stood off East North-east, the difference of longitude betweene the Maine and Molalia in Mercators proiection, agreeing with our account. And also by course hauing found the longitude of Cape Saint Augustine and Molalia to be one: I conclude that Saint Lawrence ought to be laid to the East thirtie nine or fortie leagues according to my first opinion, and all the Coast of the Maine being broader then it is land in the Card, must be also set in proportion to the East-ward, because the distance of longitude is right from one to the other, though all their longitude false in themselves: from Molalia, to fall with Cape de Bussos, North North-east one quarter East way is the best course, it being necessary to see the Mayne about the latitude in this course since we lost the Westerly Current at Angazesia, I found none or very little contrary to all Iournals, our Mariners in this course are of as many opinions as points in the Compasse, both for Currents, distances and bearings according to Compasse or Variation: but I obserued the truth in the latter end of this South-west Monson, which, I confesse, may alter in the heart of a contrary Monson, the settlednesse of the wind causing much change in the Currents, of which no rule can be giuen.

*Abdalacora, or Abbadelcuria.
They lost di-uers Cables & Anchors.*

The two and twentieth, at Abdalacora and the high lands of Socatra, the windes powred downe with such impetuousnesse, and the ground so rockie, that I aduise all to forbear to anchor vnder them, for if they be put from their anchors in the night, they shall fall so farre to leeward, that they cannot recouer the Iland, but must lose company: but if night or weather force them to anchor, let them chuse to ride where some lower land breakes the violence of the wind from the hills. Wee rode in the second quarter of the increasing Moone, which rose then aboue the Horizon about twelue at noone, and set at midnight, at which time these winds begun to rage so long as she is vnder the earth, and rising againe it becomes temperate, the Moone is a great Ladie of weather in these parts and requires much obseruation.

Delicia.

The three and twentieth, we weighed together and came to anchor afore Tamera, the Kings Towne, bringing the low point to the East of the high sandie hill without it East by North in ten fathome water a mile from the Towne: here the Sultan sent vs word, the winds were from the hills so forcible that we should hardly ride, but aduised vs to goe to Baia Delicia, two leagues to the East where he would meete vs: it is a very good Road deteruing the name of delightfull for the peaceablenesse thereof in respect of others: it is a Valley of much lower hills; betweene the water and the raggie Mountaines of Tamera, you may bring the two little Homocks that lye on the low point without the high land to the East-ward South-east, and the low land that was East by North in Tamera Road North-west by West, and ride in ten fathome within three quarters of a mile of the Shoare, latitude is thirteene degrees five minutes, the variation eighteene degrees twentie minutes, the ground is white sand, but rockie so that you must coatch or boy your Cables.

Socatra is an Iland in the mouth of the Red Sea, called anciently Dioscoria or Dioscorida, standing in twelue degrees fiftie five minutes, gouerned by a Sultan called Amar-Ben-Seid borne in the Iland, the Sonne of the King Fartaque in Arabia Felix called Sultan-Seid-Ben-Seid, who was Sultan of Socatra, in the time of his Grand-father, as this shall be King after his Father of Fartaque, and his sonne left at Socatra (the Kingdome of Fartaque lyes from fifteene degrees to eighteene degrees along the Coast of Arabia, and to the North to the Mountaines, he is at peace with the Turke, (who holds all Arabia in Tribute, except this Countrey) on this condition to send fve thousand men in ayd of the Turke, if he require it to bee paid by the Turke, without other acknowledgement. There lyes neere the Sea a pettie King about Dofar, with whom he dares not meddle, being in the Grand Seigniors protection. This is the relation of Amar-Ben-Seid of Socatra. The Sultan of Socatra met our Fleet with three hundred or thereabouts, hauing set vp a Tent at Baia Delectia: he rode vpon a Horse, and three of his chiefe Seruants on two Horses and one Camell, the people marching before and behind him, shouting after the Turkish manner; with two Guards, one of Souldiers, which are his Countrey men, and twelue of priuate Guard, hired Guzerats, some with Turkish Bowes, some with Pistols, some with Muskets, all with good Swords, he had a few Kettle Drummes, and one Trumpet. When the Generall went ashore, he receiued him with state and courtesie: he is a subtile man of good vnderstanding, as appeares by his Gouernment and diuers Answeres; hee raignes so absolutely that no man can sell any thing but himselfe, his people sit about him with great respect, his Officers standing by, who take account of Trade, and receiue and pay: his clothes are of Surat Stuffles, after the Arabs manner with a Caslock of wrought Veluet red and white, and another the ground Gold, a very good Turbant, but bare-footed, euery night at Sun-set they stand or kneele all towards the Sunne and pray, the Xeriff throwing water on their heads: their Religion is Mahometan: the Kings Towne of Tamara, is built of lime and stone whited ouer, battelled and pinnaced, the houses being flat at the top it shewes faire in the Road, but when one is there is but poore; Master Boughton borrowed the Kings horse, and obtayned leaue to see his house, the King sending a Sheck with him, he found it not answerable to the appearances, yet such as an ordinary Gentleman might make a shift with in England, his lower roomes were vsed as Ware-houses, one as a Wardrobe, where hung a long the wals some changes of Robes, and twentie fve Bookes of their Law, Religion, Storie, and Saints liues, of which I could obtayne none, but aboue no man may come to see his Wiues which are three, nor other women, but the ordinary are seene in the Townes, with their eares full of filuer Rings; in the Church the Priest was at seruice, but seeing Master Boughton take out his Watch, hee soone finished and came and wondred. There was provided three Hennes for their dinner with Rice, and for drinke water and Cohu, blacke liquor taken as hot as may be endured: at his returne, the King in complement said, hee had seene a poore place, but desired him to accept it.

Socatra, or SOCALOTA.

Cohu.

Bedwines;

There is a Castle foure square on a hill, a mile from Tamara, but he could not get licence to see it. The people are of foure sorts, Arabs his Countrey men, who it seemes are his strength, and such as are not the ancient Inhabitants, but come in with the Conquest of his Ancestors, and those obey him, and dare not speake without licence, as appeared, when one seemed of qualitie to speake, he asked him how hee durst open his mouth in his presence, but approaching kisse his hand. A second sort are of Slaues, who when they come to him kisse his foot, and these doe all his worke and make his Aloes. A third sort, as I suppose, the olde Inhabitants of the Countrey, but not the eldest, called Bedwines, the same which other Historians haue called Iacobite Christians, that haue long dwelt there, with these he hath had a warre, as the Arabs report, and dwell in the Mountaines very populous but are now at peace, on condition to liue quietly, and to breed their children Mahometans, which I perceiue they doe not, hauing no manner of conuersation with the Arabs. The reason why I take them to be the old Iacobite Christians, mentioned by Maginas, Purchas and others, is, because Master Boughton saw an old Church of theirs in the way to Tamara, left desolate, the doore shut, but onely tyed, being desirous to enter it, the Sheck his guide told him it was full of Spirits, yet he aduentured in and found an Altar with Images, and a crosse vpon it, which he brought out, then the Shecke told him they were a people of another Religion, but very loth to haue them much enquired after, as I suspect, knowing them to be a kind of Christians, doubting we would either with them better, or not suffer them to bee oppressed. The fourth sort are a sauage people, poore, leane, naked, with long haire, eating nothing but Roots, hiding in bushes, conuersing with none, afraid of all, without houses, and almost as sauage as beasts, and by coniecture, the true ancient Naturals of this Iland.

The Iland is very mountainous and barren: hauing some Beeues, Goates and Sheepe, a few Dates and Oranges, a little Rice and nothing else for sustenance, of commoditie they haue Aloes; which is the iuyce of a leafe like Semperiua, they make a poore cloth of their Wooll for their slaues.

The King had Sanguis Draconis, and Indico of Labor, but held it deare: many small Ciuit Cats and Ciuit: all is either the Kings, or passes his hands and price. He hath a handsome Galley and Iuncke of Surat, with Mariners, that serue him to transport his goods for wages by the yeare. The King hath some knowledge of Prestier Iohn; confessing him the greatest Prince in the World, about the Turke and Persian, giving faire reasons for his opinion: he hath among his slaues diuers Abbassines. Hearing our hoy-boyes in the Generals boat, hee asked if they were the Psalmes of Dauid? and being answered yes: hee replied, it was the inuention of the Deuill, who did inuent it: for King Dauid, who before prayesd God with his lips and heart in deuotion, but after it was left to sencelesse Instruments. They bury their dead all in Tombes, and haue in great reuerence the Monuments of their Saints, whereof there haue been many: But of most account Serdy Hachim, buried at Tamara, who being slaine one hundred yeares since by the Portugalls once inhabiting heere, appeares to them, and warnes them of dangers to ensue. They impute the violence of winds to his walking, and haue him in wonderfull reuerence. I neuer went ashore, not knowing what entertainment I should find, in respect of the quality I beare, but gleane vp the most probable reports. If I had gone my selfe, and conferred with the King, or could haue spoken with any of his people of vnderstanding, I had enquired further to satisfie the curious: But all the Interpreters followed the Generall, that I had no oportunity.

Aduice not to stay outwards
at Socatra.

I giue my aduice that the Fleet stop not at all outwards, bound at Socatra: But from Molalia, hauing made Cape Guardafui, and there rested a conuenient time for refreshing, or attending the latter end of the Monson, if it be soone in the yeare, shape their course right for Surat. If it be objected, that they shall want their vsuall refreshings: I answer, at Socatra the victualls is both carrion, and as deare as in England, goodnesse considered, the water farre to fetch and dangerous, so that euery Fleet hath lost some men in rowling it downe a streame full of deepe holes. At Cape Guardafui you shall ride at ease, and without doubt trade plentifully and cheape, and fish at pleasure: and though we made no experience of trade, yet wee saw people in Turbants and cloathed, who assuredly, if we had stayed, might haue been drawne to bring downe cattell: for not farre to the West of that place, Sir Henry Middleton, and some other ships had excellent Goats and sheepe for trifles, as both his Iournall, and Master Barret of his owne experience haue enformed mee.

¶ II.

His iourney to the Court, and entertainment there, and Customs thereof.

September 26.
Visitation of
Sultan Peruis.

He six and twentieth of September, I landed, accompanied with the Generall and principall Merchants: Captaine Harris was sent to make me a Court of guard, with one hundred shot, and the ships in their best equipage, giuing mee their Ordnance as I passed. (The passages betwixt the Embassador and those of Surat I omit; their barbarous customes and actions holding so ill correspondence with his honorable condition, and ciuill conditions, that euen heere also it would be harsh to the Reader: we will therefore find him remouing from them in his way toward the Court.)

The fifteenth of Nouember, I arriued at Brampore, being by my coniecture two hundred twenty three miles from Surat, and the course wholly East, a miserable and barren Countrey, the Townes and Villages all built of mudde, so that there is not a house for a man to rest in. This day at Batherport, a Village two mile short of Brampore is their Store-house of Ordnance. I saw diuers of brasie, but generally too short, and too wide bored. Betweene that and Brampore I was met by the Cutwall, well accompanied, and sixteene Colours caried before them: he brought mee to the Saralia, where I was appointed to lodge, where at the gate hee tooke his leaue, being a handsome front of stone: but when I entered, I had foure chambers allotted me, like Ouens, no bigger, round at the top, made of bricke in a wall-fide; this troubled mee, but my Tents were my refuge, and I sent the Cutwall word I would depart the Towne, scorning so meane vsage: hee desired me to be content vntill morning. Heere liues Sultan Peruis, the Kings second sonne, holding the State and custome of his Father; and the Channa Channa being the greatest subiect of the Mogoll, Generall of his Armies, whereof fortie thousand horse are with him: The Prince hath the name and state, but the Chan gouernes all.

The eighteenth, for many considerations, as well to see the fashions of the Court, as to content the Prince, who desired it, and I was loath to distaste him, because there was some purpose of erecting a Factory in the Towne; and I found by experience Sword-blades were well sold in the Armie; I went to visite the Prince, and carryed him a Present. I was brought in by the Cutwall: at the outward Court were about one hundred horsemen armed, being Gentlemen that attend the Princes setting out to salute him, making a lane of each side: in the inner Court hee sate high in a Gallery that went round, with a Canopy ouer him, and a Carpet before him, in great, but barbarous State. Comming toward him thorow a lane of people, an Officer came and brought me word I must touch the ground with my head, and my hat off: I answered, I came in honour to see the Prince, and was free from the custome of Seruants. So I passed on, till I came to a place railed in, right vnder him, with an ascent of three steps, where I made him reuerence, and he bowed his body; and so went within it, where stood round by the sides all the great men of the Towne, with their hands before them like Slaues; the place was couered ouer-head with a rich Canopie, and vnderneath, all Carpets. To describe it rightly, it was like a great Stage, and the Prince sate aboue as the Mock-Kings doe there. When I was entered, I knew not where to be placed, but went right, and stood before him, where there is an ascent of three steppes, vpon which stands his Secretary, to deliuer what is said or giuen briefly. I told him, being an Embassador from the King of England to his father, and passing by, I could not but in honour visite him: he replied I was very welcome, and asked me many questions of the King, to which I replied as I thought fit: but standing in that manner below, I demanded licence to come vp and stand by him. He answered, If the King of Persia or the Great Turke were there, it might not be admitted. I replied that I must bee excused, for I doubted not hee would come downe and meete them at his gate; but I desired no more priuiledge, then the Embassadors of such Princes had, to whom I held my selfe equall: he protested I had that, and should in all things. Then I demanded a Chaire, but I was answered no man euer sate in that place: but I was desired, as a courtesie, to ease my selfe against a pillar, couered aboue with siluer, that held vp his Canopie. Then I moued him for his fauour for an English Factory to be resident in the Towne, which hee willingly granted, and gaue present order to the Buxy, to draw a Firma both for their comming vp, and for their residence. I also desired his authoritie for cariages for the Kings Presents, which he gaue in charge to the Cutwall. Then I gaue him my Presents, which hee tooke in good part, and after some other questions, he said to giue me content, although I might not come vp where he sate, he would go into another place, where I should come vnto him; but one of my Presents was a Case of Bottells, which tooke him vp by the way, and after I had staid a while, I heard he was drunke, and one of his Officers came to mee in his name, with an excuse, desiring mee to goe home, and to take some other time to returne to visite him: this night I tooke my feauer.

The sixt of December, we lodged in a wood, not farre from the Kings famous Castle of Mandoa which stands on a steepe hill, walled round in circuit fourteene Course: the Castle is faire, and of wonderfull greatnesse.

The two and twentieth, Master Edwards met me, accompanied with Thomas Coryat, who had passed into India on foote five Course to Cytor an ancient Citie ruined on a hill, but so that it appeares a Tombe of wonderfull magnificence: there stands aboue one hundred Churches, all of carued stone, many faire Towers and Lanthornes cut thorow many pillars, and innumerable houses, but no one Inhabitant: there is but one ascent to the hill, it being precipitious, sloaping vp, cut out of the Rocke, hauing foure gates in the ascent, before one arriue at the City gate, which is magnificent: the hill is incompassed at the top about eight Course, and at the South-west end a goodly old castle: I lodged by a poore Village at the foot of the hill. This Citie stands in the countrey of one Ranna, a Prince newly subdued by this King, or rather bought to confesse Tribute. The Citie was wonne by Echarsha, father to this Mogoll. Ranna is rightly defended from Porus, that valiant Indian, ouercome by Alexander: so that I take this Citie to haue been one of the ancient Seats of Porus, though Dely much further North be reported to haue been the chiefest, famous now only in ruines. Neare that stands a pillar, erected by Alexander the Conqueror, with a great inscription. The present Mogoll and his Ancestors, descendants of Tamberlane, haue brought all the ancient Cities to ruine, hauing dispeopled them, and forbidden reparation, I know not out of what reason, vnlesse they would haue nothing remembred of greatnesse beyond their beginnings, as if their Family and the world were equalls.

The three and twentieth, I arriued at Adsmere, two hundred and nine Courses from Bram-pore, foure hundred and eightene English miles, the Courses being longer then toward the Sea. I kept my bed.

The tenth of January, I went to Court at foure in the euening to the Darbar, which is the place where the Mogoll sits out daily, to entertaine strangers, to receiue Petitions and Presents, to giue commands, to see and to be seene. To digresse a little from my reception, and declare the customes of the Court, will enlighten my future discourse. The King hath no man but Eunuches that comes within the lodgings or retyring roomes of his house: his women watch within, and guard him with manly weapons, they doe iustice one vpon another for offences. Hee comes euery morning to a window called the Iarne, looking into a Plaine before his gate, and shewes himselfe to the common people. At noone he returns thither, and sits some houres to see the fight of Elephants and wilde beasts. Vnder him within a raile attend the men of rancke: from whence he retyres to sleep among his women. At after-noon he returns to the Darbar before mentioned. At eight after supper he comes downe to the Guzelcan, a faire Court, wherein in the middest is a Throne erected of free-stone, wherein he sits, but sometimes below in a chaire, to which are none admitted but of great quality, and few of these without leaue, where hee discourses of all matters with much affabilitie. There is no business done with him concerning the State, Gouvernement, disposition of War or peace, but at one of these two last places where it is publicly propounded and resolved, and so registred, which if it were worth the curiositie, might be seene for two shillings: but the common base people knew as much as the Councell.

and the newes euery day, is the Kings new resolutions, tossed and censured by euery rascall. This course is vnchangeable, except sicknesse or drinke preuent it, which must be knowne: for as all his Subiects are slaues, so is hee in a kind of reciprocall bondage, for hee is tyed to obserue these houres and customs so precisely, that if he were vnseene one day, and no sufficient reason rendred, the people would mutinie; two dayes no reason can excuse, but that he must consent to open his doores, and be seene by some, to satisfie others. On Tuesday at the Iarneo he sits in Iudgement, neuer refusing the poorest mans complaint: where he heares with patience both parts, and sometimes sees, with too much delight in blood, the execution done by his Elephants. Illemerere, sed quid tu ut adesses?

His coming to the King.

At the Durbar I was led right before him: at the entrance of an outward raile, where met mee two principall Noble Slaues to conduct me nearer. I had required before my going, leaue to vse the customes of my Countrey, which was freely granted, so that I would performe them punctually. When I entered within the first raile, I made a reuerence; entring in the inward raile, another; and when I came vnder the King, a third. The place is a great Court, whither resort all sorts of people. The King sits in a little Gallery ouer-head; Ambassadors, the great men and strangers of quality within the inner-most raile vnder him, raised from the ground, couered with Canopies of Veluet and Silke; vnder-foote laid with good Carpets: the meaner men representing Gentry, within the first raile: the people without, in a bale Court, but so that all may see the King. This sitting out hath so much affinity with a Theatre, the manner of the King in his Gallery; the great men lifted on a Stage, as Actors; the Vulgar below gazing on, that an easie description will enforme of the place and fashion. The King preuented my dull Interpreter, bidding me welcome, as to the Brother of my Master. I deliuered his Maiesties Letter translated; and after, my Commission, whereon he looked curiously; after, my Presents, which were well receiued. He asked some questions; and with a seeming care of my health, offered me his Physicians, and aduising me to keepe my house till I had recovered strength, and if in the interim I needed any thing, I should freely send to him, and obtaine my desires. He dismissed me with more fauour and outward grace, if by the Christians I were not flattered, then euer was shouen to any Ambassador either of the Turke or Persian, or other whatsoever.

Sultan Coronne.

The fourteenth, I sent to the Prince Sultan Coronne, his third sonne by birth, but first in fauour, that I determined to visite him, not doubting he would vse me with due respect: for I was enformed he was enemie to all Christians, and therefore feared some affront. Hee answered I should be welcome, and receiue the same content I had from his father. He is Lord of Surat our chiefe residence, and his fauour important for vs.

His conditions.

The two and twentieth, I visited the Prince, who at nine in the morning sits out in the same manner (as his Father) to dispatch his businesse, and to be seene of his followers. He is proud naturally, and I feared my entertainment. But on some occasion he not resolving to come out, when he heard of my arriual, sent a principall Officer to meete me, who conducted mee into a good roome (neuer before done to any) and entertaine mee with discourse of our owne businesse halfe an houre, vntill the Prince was ready, who came abroad on purpose, and vsed mee better then his promise. I deliuered him a Present, such as I had, but not in the name of his Maiestie, it being too meane; but excused it, that the King could not take knowledge of his being Lord of Surat so lately conferred on him, but hereafter I doubted not his Maiesty would send to him according to his worth. This was the respect of the Merchants, who humbly commended themselves to his fauour and protection. He receiued all in very good part: and after opening of some grieuances and iniuries suffered at Surat by vs from his Gouvernours, of which for respect to him I had forborne to complaine to the King, hee promised mee speedie and effectuall Iustice, and to confirme our securitie by any propositions I should offer, professing to be ignorant of any thing past, but what he had receiued by Asaph Chan, deliuered by mee; especially of any command to dismiss vs, which the Gouvernour had falsely coyned, and for which hee should dearly answere. So he dismissed me, full of hope to rectifie the decayed estate of our reputation, with promise of a Firman for Surat effectually.

hearing.

The foure and twentieth, I went to the Durbar to visite the King, who seeing me a farre off, beckned with his hand, giuing signe I should not stay the ceremony, of asking leaue, but come vp to him, where he appointed me a place about all other men, which I after thought fit to maintaine: I gaue him a small Present; it being the custome, when any body hath businesse, to giue somewhat, and those that cannot come neare to speake, send in, or hold vp their gift; which he excepts, be it but a Rupie, and demands their businesse. The same course he held with mee, hauing looked curiously, and asked many questions of my Present, he demanded what I required of him: I answered Iustice; that on the assurance of his Maiesties Firman sent into England, the King my Master had not only giuen leaue to many of his Subiects to come a dangerous Voyage with their goods, but had sent me to congratulate the amity so happily begun betweene two so mighty Nations, and to confirme the same: but that I found the English, feared at Amadanius, iniured by the Gouvernour in their persons and goods, fined, exacted vpon, and kept as prisoners, that at euery Towne new Customs were taken of our goods, passing to the Port, contrary to all Iustice

Iustice and the former Articles of Trade. To which he answered he was sory, it should be amended, and presently gaue order for two Firmans, very effectually, according to my desire to be signed, one to the Gouvernour of Amadanas, to restore money exacted from Master Kerridge, and to vse the English with all fauour: the other to release all customes required on any pretence on the way; or if any had been taken, to repay it of his owne accord: wishing mee, that if these gaue not speedy remedy, I should renew my complaint against the disobeyer, and he should be sent for to answere there: and so he dismissed me.

Two Firmans granted to the English.

The first of March, I rode to see a house of pleasure of the Kings, giuen him by Asaph Chan, two miles from Adsmere, but betweene two mightie Rockes, so defended from the Sunne, that it scarce any way sees it; the foundation cut out of them, and some roomes, the rest of free-stone, a handsome little Garden with fine fountaines, two great Tankes, one thirty steps aboue another; the way to it is inaccessible, but for one or two in front, and that very steepe and stony, a place of much melancholy delight and securitie, onely beeing accompanied with wild Peacocks, Tur- tles, fowle, and Munkeyes, that inhabite the Rockes hanging euery way ouer it.

March 1st
A house of pleasure.

The second, the Norose began in the Euening. It is a custome of solemnizing the new yeare, yet the Ceremonie begins the first new Moone after it, which this yeare fell together: it is kept in imitation of the Persians feast, and signifies in that language Nine dayes, for that anciently it endured no longer, but now it is doubled. The manner is, there is erected a throne foure foote from the ground, in the Durbar Court, from the backe whereof, to the place where the King comes out a square of fiftie sixe paces long, and fortie three broad was rayled in, and couered ouer with faire Semianes or Canopies of Cloth of Gold, Silke, or Veluet ioyned together, and sustained with Canes so couered: at the vpper end West, were set out the Pictures of the King of England, the Queene, the Lady Elizabeth, the Countesses of Somerset and Salisbury, and of a Citizens wife of London; below them an other of Sir Thomas Smith, Gouvernour of the East-India Companie: vnder foot it is laid with good Persian Carpets of great largeness, into which place come all the men of qualitie to attend the King, except some few that are within a little raile right before the Throne, to receiue his Commands, within this square there were set out for shew many little houses, one of Siluer, and some other curiosities of price. The Prince, Sultan Corome had at the left side a Paulion, the supporters whereof were couered with Siluer, as were some of those also neere the Kings Throne: the former thereof was square, the matter wood, inlayed with mother of Pearle, borne vp with foure pillars, and couered with cloth of Gold: about the edge ouer-head like a valence, was a net fringe of good Pearle, vpon which hung downe Pomgranats, Apples, Peares, and such fruits of Gold, but hollow; within that the King sate on Cushions, very rich in Pearles, in Jewels round about the Court; before the Throne the Principall men had erected Tents, which encompassed the Court, and lined them with Veluet, Damaske, and Tassatae ordinarily, some few with cloth of Gold, wherein they retired, and set to shew all their wealth: for anciently the Kings were vsed to goe to euery Tent, and there take what pleased them; but now it is changed, the King sitting to receiue what New-yeeres gifts are brought to him. Hee comes abroad at the vsuall houre of the Durbar, and retires with the same: here are offered to him by all sorts great gifts, though not equall to report, yet incredible enough: and at the end of this Feast the King in recompence of the Presents receiued, aduanceth some, and addeth to their entertain- ment some horse at his pleasure.

The Norose a solemne Feast, and Rites
thereof.

The twelfth, I went to visit the King, and was brought right before him, expecting a present which I deliuered to his extraordinary content; so he appointed I should be directed within the raile to stand by him, but I beeing not suffered to step vp vpon the railing, on which the Throne stood, could see little, the raile beeing high, and doubled with Carpets, but I had leifure to view the inward roome, and the beauty thereof, which I confesse was rich, but of so diuers pieces, and so vsfutable, that it was rather patched then glorious, as if it seemed to strue to shewe all, like a Lady that with her Plate, set on a Cupboord her imbroydered Slippers. This Euening was the sonne of Ranna his new Tributary brought before him with much ceremonie, kneeling three times, and knocking his head on the ground: he was sent by his Father with a Present, and was brought within the little raile, the King embracing him by the head; his gift was an Indian voy- der full of Siluer, vpon that a carued Siluer dish full of Gold; so he was lead toward the Prince. Some Elephants were shewed, and some Whoores did sing and dance: Sic transit gloria Mundi.

The thirteenth at night, I went to the Gussell Chan, where is best opportunitie to doe busi- nesse, and tooke with me the Italian, determining to walke no longer in darknesse, but to prooue the King, being in all other wayes delayed and refused; I was sent for in with my old Broaker, but my Interpreter was kept out: Asaph Chan mistrusting I would vtter more then he was wil- ling to heare. When I came to the King, he appointed me a place to stand iust before him, and sent to aske mee many questions about the King of England, and of the Present I gaue the day before: to some of which I answered; but at last I said, my Interpreter was kept out, I could speake no Portugall, and so wanted meanes to satisfie his Maiestie, whereat (much against Asaph Chans desire) he was admitted. I bad him tell the King, I desired to speake to him; he answered, willingly: whereat Asaph Chans sonne in law, pulled him by force away, and that faction hedged the King so, that I could scarce see him, nor the other approach him. So I commanded the Italian to speake aloud, that I craued audience of the King, whereat the King called me, and they made me way. Asaph Chan stood on one side of my Interpreter, and I on the other: I to enforme him in mine owne cause, he to awe him with winking and iogging. I bad him say, that I now had been here two Moneths, whereof more then one was passed in sicknesse, the other in Compliments, and nothing effected toward the ende for which my Master had employed mee, which was to conclude a firme and constant loue and peace betweene their Maiesties, and to establish a faire and secure Trade and residence for my Countrey-men. He answered, that was already granted. I replied it was true, but it depended yet on so light a thred, on so weake conditions, that being of such importance, it required an agreement cleare in all points, and a more formall and authentique confirmation, then it had by ordinary Firmans, which were temporary commands, and respected accordingly. He asked me what Presents we would bring him. I answered, the League was yet new, and very weake: that many Curiosities were to bee found in our Countrey of rare price and estimation, which the King would send, and the Merchants seeke out in all parts of the world, if they were once made secure of a quiet trade and protection on honourable Conditions, hauing been heretofore many wayes wronged.

He asked what kind of curiosities those were I mentioned, whether I meant Iewels and rich stones. I answered, No: that we did not thinke them fit Presents to send backe, which were brought first from these parts, whereof he was chiefe Lord; that we esteemed them common here, and of much more price with vs: but that we sought to finde such things for his Maiestie, as were rare here, and vnseene, as excellent artifices in painting, caruing, cutting, enamelling, figures in Brasse, Copper, or Stone, rich embroyderies, stufes of Gold and Siluer. He said it was very well: but that hee desired an English horse: I answered, it was impossible by Sea, and by Land the Turke would not suffer passage. He replied, that hee thought it not impossible by Sea. I told him, the dangers of stormes, and varietie of weather would prooue it. Hee answered, if fixe were put into a ship, one might liue; and though it came leane, he would fat it. I replied, I was confident it could not be in so long a Voyage, but that for his Maiesties satisfaction, I would write to aduise of his request. So he asked, what was it then I demanded? I said, that hee would bee pleased to signe certaine reasonable conditions, which I had conceiued for the confirmation of the League, and for the securitie of our Nation, and their quiet trade, for that they had beene often wronged, and could not continue on such tearmes, which I forbore to complaine of, hoping by faire meanes to procure amendment. At this word, Asaph Chan offered to pull my Interpreter; but I held him, suffering him onely to winke and make vnprofitable signes.

An English horse much desired.

The King angry with his Sonne,

The King hereat grew suddenly into choller, pressing to know who had wronged vs, with such shew of fury, that I was loath to follow it, and speaking in broken Spanish to my Interpreter, to answer, That with what was past I would not trouble his Maiestie, but would seeke Iustice of his Sonne, the Prince, of whose fauour I doubted not. The King not attending my Interpreter, but hearing his Sonnes name, conceiued I had accused him, saying, Mio Filio, Mio Filio, and called for him; who came in great feare, humbling himselfe: Asaph Chan trembled, and all of them were amazed. The King chid the Prince roundly, and he excused himselfe, but I perceiuing the Kings error, made him (by meanes of a Persian Prince, offering himselfe to interpret, because my Italian spake better Turkish then Persian) and the Prince both vnderstand the mistaking, and so appeased him, saying, I did no way accuse the Prince, but would in causes past in his Gouernement, appeale to him for Iustice, which the King commanded hee should doe effectually. The Prince for his iustification, told the King he had offered me a Firman, and that I had refused it: demanding the reason: I answered, I humbly thanked him, but he knew it contained a condition which I would not accept of; and that further I did desire to propound our owne demands, wherein I would containe all the desires of my Master at once, that I might not daily trouble them with complaints, and wherein I would reciprocally bind my Soueraigne to mutuall offices of friendship; and his Subiects to any such conditions, as his Maiesty would reasonably propound, whereof I would make an offer, which beeing drawne Tripartite, his Maiesty (I hoped) would signe the one, the Prince the other, and in my Masters behalfe I would firme the third. The King pressed to know the Conditions I refused in the Princes Firman, which I recited, and so we fell into earnest dispute, and some heate. Mocrib Chan enterposing, said, he was the Portugals aduocate; speaking slightly of vs, that the King should neuer signe any Article against them. I answered, I propound none against them, but in our owne iust defence; and I did not take him for such a friend to them: the Iesuite and all the Portugals side fell in, in so much that I explained my selfe fully concerning them; and as I offered a conditionall peace, so I set their friendship at a mean rate, and their hatred or force at lesse. The King answered, my demands were iust, resolution noble, and bad me propound. Asaph Chan that stood mute all this discourse, and desired to end it, least it breake out againe (for we were very warme) enterposed, that if wee talked all night it would come to this issue, that I should draw my demands in writing, and present them, and if they were found reasonable, the King would firme them; to which the King replied, yes; and I desired his Sonne would doe the like, who answered he would: so the King rose. But I calling to him, he turned about, and I bad my Interpreter say, That I came the day before to see his Maiestie, and his greatnesse, and the Ceremonies of this Feast, that I was placed behind him, I confessed with honour, but I could not see abroad; and that therefore I desired his Maiestie to licence me to stand vp by his Throne; whereat he commanded Asaph Chan to let mee choose my owne place.

The foureteenth in the morning, I sent a Messenger to Asaph Chan, least hee or the Prince might mistake me by the Kings mistakings, that I had complained against them, which as I did not, so it was not yet in my purpose: onely I was willing to let them see, I did not so depend on Asaph Chan, by whose mouth I vsed to doe my businesse; but that if he continued his manner of neuer deliuering what I said, but what he pleased; I would find another way. My message was to cleare any such doubt, if it remained; or if not, to entreat him that he would soften the Prince in my demands concerning Surat. He answered, Neither the Prince nor hee had any reason to suspect, my purpose was to complaine of them: that the error was euident enough, for his part he had euer had the loue of the English, and would endeaour to continue it.

The sixe and twentieth of April, I receiued intelligence, that the Prince caused one of his Seruants at the Durbar, to aske the King why he vsed so good countenance to the English, that for their cause the Portugals were barred the Port of Surat, who brought more profit to the King, as many Ballaces, Pearles, and Iewels, whereas the English came onely to seeke profit, with Cloth, Swords, and Kniues of little estimation. The King answered onely, it was true, but who could mend it. Hereby the Princes good affection was manifest, and I had faire warning to bee watchfull, and to study to preserue our selues in the Kings grace, in which onely wee were safe; but I resolved to take notice of this, and to make prooffe if I could settle a better opinion in the Prince of our Nation.

The two and twentieth of May, I went to the Durbar to visit the King, and to desire his au-thoritie to haue one Iones a youth, that was runne away from mee to an Italian, and protected himselfe vnder the name of the King to the infamy of our Nation. The King gaue order for his deliuerie, but the Prince who euer waited opportunitie to disgrace our Nation for the cause of his Faurite Zulphackarcon with whom I was newly broken off from conference, and had sent the Prince word I would no longer forbear opening my cause to the King, mooued the King in pri-uate to send for the youth first, which at the Gusel Chan hee did: and the Prince giuing him countenance, he railed to my face with most virulent malice, desiring the King to saue his life, so the King resolved not to deliuer him to me, but to send him Prisoner to Surat, but the Prince to braue me, begged him for his seruant, the fellow hauing quite renounced his Countrey, the King gaue him to the Prince, notwithstanding any reasons I could alledge: so the Prince presently gaue him one hundred and fiftie Rupias, and the pay of two Horse, and forbade mee to meddle with him.

The three and twentieth, at night my man came and fell at my feet, asking pardon for his lying and madnesse, and offered to submit himselfe in any kind. I told him I would not now keepe him Prisoner he was the Princes seruant, but that before I could giue him any answere he should make me publike satisfaction as farre as he was able.

The foure and twentieth, Iones made meanes to come to the Gusel Chan, and there asked pardon of the King for his lyes, denying euery word hee had spoken, and to haue been done to protect himselfe from me, whom he had offended, desiring the King to send for me that he might there aske my pardon: the King was well pleased. But the Prince fell into a great rage.

The fise and twentieth, I went to the Guzelcan, where after many protestations of the King, that he neuer beleueed him, that he was a Villaine, yet that hee could doe no lesse but protect him, hauing cast himselfe into his mercy: the youth was sent for, who on his knees asked mee forgiuenesse, and on his oath swore to the King, that he had in euery particular belyed me, which he professed to doe voluntarie, for that he durst neuer returne to his countrey. The King chid him a little, and told me, he nor any good man euer beleueed him: but the Prince grew so angry that mouing him with many questions to stand to his first word, which he refusing was bid be gone:
and the Prince publikely calling for him againe, bad him most basely returne him the one hundred and fiftie Rupias, deliuered him for that he gaue it to maintayne him against me, which seeing he went from, he would haue his money: which the fellow promised but he should haue it presently, and so sent an vnder Treasurer with him to the house, where hee was lodged, for into mine, I would not suffer him to come.

The seuen and twentieth, thus I was enforced to seeme content, because I had no way to seeke remedie, for Presents I had none, and the King neuer takes any request to heart, except it come accompanied, and will in plaine tearmes demand it, which aduantage the Prince takes, vrging the Portugals bringing of Iewels, Ballests and Pearles with much disgrace to our English commoditie.

The nine and twentieth, the Portugals went before the King with a Present, and a Ballas Rubie, to sell as was reported, weighing thirteene Tole, two Tole and a halfe being an ounce: they demanded fise Leckes of Rupies, but the King offered but one. Asaph Chan is also their Sollicitor,

tor, to whom they gaue a Present of Stones, they had diuers Rubies Ballaces, Emeralds and Jewels set to sell, which so much contented the King and his great men, that we were for a time eclipsed.

The Prince and the Iesuite fell out about presenting them, which the Prince desired; but it was promised to Asaph Chan before concerning the Portugals credit, here I euer made my iudgement by report, but now experience shewes me the difference made betweene vs and them, for they were sought after by euery bodie, whereas they seeme to buy our commodities for almes, besides their Neighbour-hood and aduantage to hinder that Trade into the Red Sea, is euer more readier then ours to doe harme, because they are settled, so that onely for a little feare wee were entertained, but for our trade or any thing we being not at all respected.

Sultan Coroone, to be employed in the Decan warres.

He twelfth of Iune, there is a resolution taken that Sultan Coroone shall goe to the Decan warres, and the day prefixed hauing consulted all the Bramans. Prince Parnis is called home, whom (it is reported) wrote to his father, that if hee would send his elder brother, he would obey, but to dishonour him by imploying this, hee would first fall on him, and after finish the warre. All the Captaines, as Channa Chana, Mahobet Chan, Chan John, refuse to stay if this Tyrant come to command, so well is he beloued: it is true, all men awe him more then the King, now that hee is to receiue the Armie; the King cannot bee remooued from his resolution, so that his sudden departure two and twentie dayes from this present, must hasten me to finish this businesse, and to know a resolution: for after his departure with his Mision Zulphbeckarcon, there is no hope to recouer a penny, nor any Iustice against him.

mand.

The eighteenth, the King commanded one of his brothers sonnes (who was made a Christian in policie, to bring him into hatred with the people) to go strike a Lyon on the head, which was brought before the King; but he being atrait, refused it: so the King bade his yongest sonne to go touch the Lyon, who did so without any harme, whereat the King tooke occasion to send his Nephew away to a prison, where hee is neuer like to see day-light.

The foure and twentieth, the Prince had a sonne borne, and now being preparing for this warre, all mens eyes were on him, either for flattery, gaine, or enuy, none for loue. He receiued twenty Lecks of Rupies towards his charges, (two hundred thousand pound sterling) and began to deale money liberally: but notwithstanding his show of his Fathers affection and greatness, a Chan perswaded the King that the Voyage would bee dangerous, in respect of the Prince Parnis, whose honour was so wounded, that he would not returne without reuenge. The King replied, let them fight, I am well contented, and he that proues himselfe the better Captaine shall pursue the warre.

Abdala Hassan.

Exquisite mark-
men.

Abdala Hassan is Captaine of all the souldiers, entertained at Court, and Treasurer to all the Armies: he entertained me courteously, with few complements, but much ciuility, wee sate to see his souldiers shoote in bowes and peeces, most of them with single bullet did hit the marke, being a hand-breath in a butt, wee had some discourse of our vse of weapons, and so I departed.

Iuly 13.

The thirteenth of Iuly in the morning, I sent Sultan Carronne three bottles of Alligant, and a Letter concerning the Portugalls, the differences betweene our Trade and theirs, and to procure all the customs in and out to farme for the Companies vse (the copy is registred.) The Prince caused (as is his barbarous custome in all businesse passing in publike) the Letter to be twice read by his Secretary, and often interrupted it with speech to him: in the end sent word, that at night when he came downe, he would reade it himselfe, and consider it, and that I should receiue answer from Merze Sorocalla.

The Kings delight in Painting.

At night I went to the Darbar to visite the King: So soone as I came in, he sent Asaph Chan to me, that he heard I had in my house an excellent Painter, and desired me he might see some of his worke: I replied, according to truth, that there was none, but a yong man, a Merchant, that for his exercise did with a pen draw some figures, but very meanelly, farre from the arte of Painting. The King replied, that I should not feare that hee would take any man from mee by force, that he would neither doe mee iniury, nor suffer any other; and prayed that he might see that man and his worke, howsoeuer it was. I replied, I had no such doubt of his Maiesty, and for his satisfaction I would bring him to the Guzell Chan with such toyes as he had, which perhaps was an Elephant, or a Deare, or such like in paper. At this answer the King bowed himselfe, and returned, that if I desired an Elephant, or the figure, or any other thing in his Countrey, trety, I should not buy it, nor seeke any other way but to him, that whatsoeuer I had a mind to, he would giue me, and that I should freely speake to him, for he was my friend. I made a Reuerence, and answered that I humbly thanked his Maiesty, Elephants were of no such vse to mee, neither was it the custome of my Nation, especially of my place, to aske any thing, if his Maiestie gaue me but the worth of a Rupie, I would receiue it, and esteeme it as a marke of his fauour. He replied, he knew not what I desired, that there were some things in his Countrey, rare in mine, and that I should not make dainty to speake to him, for he would giue mee such things as should be most welcome, and that I should bee cheerefull, for that he was a friend to our Nation 10 and to mee, and would protect vs from any iniury, but desired that I would that night come to the Guzell Chan, with the youth that painted, with his Pictures. So Asaph Chan wished me to send home to fetch him to his house; whither if I would go and stay with him vntill the King came abroad, I should be very welcome; which I promised. I neuer receiued so much grace and fauour from the King, as at this time, which all men tooke notice of, and accordingly altered their fashions towards mee; specially it happened well that the Iesuit was made Interpreter of all this by the Kings appointment.

This day a Gentle-woman of Normalls was taken in the Kings house in some action with an Eunuch; another Capon that loued her, killed him: the poore woman was set vp to the armpits in the earth, hard rammed, her feet tied to a stake, to abide three dayes and two nights without any sustenance, her head and armes exposed to the Sunnes violence: if shee dyed not in that 20 time, shee should be pardoned: the Eunuch was condemned to the Elephants. This Damsell yeelded in Pearle, Jewels, and ready money, sixteene hundred thousand Rupies.

Story of an Eunuch and one of the Kings women.

The two and twentieth, I receiued Letters from Bramport: in answere of those to Mahobet Chan, who at first granted my desire, making his Firman to Barooch most effectually, to receiue our Nation, and to giue them a house neare the Gouvernour, strictly commanding no man to molest them by sea or land, or to take any custome of them, or any way trouble them vnder colour thereof. Finally, that they might buy, sell, and transport any commoditie at their pleasures, without any molestation, concluding, that they should expect to heare no other from him, and therefore they should be carefull in execution. I receiued with it a Letter from himselfe (which was more 30 ciuility then all the Indies yeelded me) full of courtesie and humanity, and great respect, protesting his desire to giue me content, and that what I had demanded, I should make no doubt of performance: and if I had any other occasion to vse him, hee desired mee to write, and it should be performed. The Copies are worthy the seeing for the rarenesse of the phrase. The Firman I caused to be sent to Surat: so that Barooch is prouided for a good retrait from the Princes iniuries, and the custome giuen, whereby fifteene hundred pound, per annum, will bee saued, besides all manner of searches and extortions. For the performance of this no man maketh any doubt, for that all men confesse, that he neither careth for the Prince, and so feareth not, nor needeth any man, being the only beloued man of the King, and second person in his Dominions; and in all his life so liberall of his purse, and honorable of his word, that he hath ingrossed good reports from all others: and concerning Custome, the King takes none, the Gouvernours make it their 40 profit, which he professeth to scorne that he should abuse the liberty of the Kings Ports.

Mahobet Chan his grant to the English for Barooch.

His Ciuility and good parts

The sixt of August, I was sent for to the Durbar; the businesse was about a Picture I had lately giuen to the King, and was confident that no man in India could equall it. So soone as I came, he asked mee what I would giue the Painter that had made a copy so like it, that I should not know my owne: I answered, a Painters reward, fifty Rupies. The King replied, his Painter was a Cauteler, and that too small a gift; to which I answered, I gaue my Picture with a good heart, esteeming it rare, and meant not to make comparison or wagers: if his seruant had done as well, and would not accept of my gift, his Maiesty was most fit to reward him. So with many passages of iests, mirth, and bragges concerning the Arts of his Countrey, hee fell to aske mee questions, how often I dranke a day, and how much, and what? what in England? what Beere was? how 50 made? and whether I could make it heere? In all which I satisfied his great demands of State. He concluded that I should come to the Guzel Chan, and then I should see my Pictures. At night he sent for me, being hasty to triumph in his work-man, and shewed me fixe Pictures, fixe made by his man, all pasted in one table so like, that I was by candle-light troubled to discerne which was which, I confesse, beyond all expectation: yet I shewed mine owne, and the differences, which were in arte apparant, but not to be iudged by a common eye. But for that at first sight I knew it not, he was very merry and ioyfull, and craked like a Northerne man: I gaue him way and content, praising his mans art. Now, saith he, what say you? I replied, I saw his Maiestie needed no Picture from our Countrey; but saith he, what will you giue the Painter? I answered, seeing he had so farre excelled in my opinion of him, I would double my liberality, and that if 60 he came to my house, I would giue him one hundred Rupies to buy a Nagge, which the King tooke kindly, but answered, he should accept no money, but some other gift: which I promised. The King asked what? I said it was referable to my discretion: so he answered it was true, yet desired I would name it. I replied, a good Sword, a Pistall, a Picture; whereat the King answered, You confesse hee is a good work-man: send for him home, and shew him such toyes as you haue, haue, and let him choose one, in requitall whereof you shall choose any of these Copies to shew in England. We are not so vnskillfull, as you esteeme vs: so hee pressed me to choole one, which I did; the King wrapping it vp in a paper, and putting it vp in a little booke of mine, deliuered it, with much ioy and exultation of his mans supposed victory, whereat I shewed him a Picture I had of his Maiesties, farre inferiour to the worke I now saw, which caused me to iudge of all other by that which he deliuered me as the best. He asked me where I had it; I told him. Why, said he, doe you buy any such things? haue not I the best? and haue not I told you, I would giue you whatsoever you desired? I thanked his Maiesty, but that I held it not ciuility to trouble him in such trifles, especially as a begger: he replied, it was no shame to aske of him, and bad me speake at all times freely, pressing me to aske somewhat: I answered, I would not choose my gift, whatsoever came from his Maiesties hands I would receiue as a marke of honour: hee replied, if you desire my Picture, I will giue you one for your selfe, or for your King. I answered, if his Maiestie would lend the King one, I would gladly cary it, and knew his Maiestie would take it friendly, and esteeme it much. But that since his Maiestie had emboldened mee, I would desire one for my selfe, which I would keepe and leaue to my Posteritie, as an ensigne of his Maiesties fauour. He replied, your King doth not desire one, but you doe, therefore you shall haue it, and so he gaue present order for the making: then he turned to rest, and wee were blind-fold dismissed.

The courtesie of Gemal-dinvssin.

The twelfth of August, Gemal-din-vssin, a man of seuentie yeares, Vice-roy of Patan, and Lord of foure Cities in Bengala, one that hath beene often Embassadour, and of more vnderstanding and courtesie then all his Countrimen, and to be esteemed hospitable, and a receiuer of strangers, not secretly ambitious, he often made meanes that I would come to his house, which at last I did, and was receiued with extraordinary familiaritie and kindnesse, offering me a Lecke of Rupias, and such other courtesies so great, that they bespake their owne refull. His fauour with the King, his credit, his counsell, all was offered that could fulfill complements. And this I must confesse, that from a person reuerent in yeares it seemed more cordiall, and for in some Discourse speaking so plainly of his fellowes in Court, truthes in mine owne experience, I resolued hee was a good natured and right hearred old man. He told me much of the Customes of this Countrey, of their seruitude, of their want of Lawes, of the increase of this Empire, wherein hee had serued three Princes in grace and fauour, of which times hee shewed me a Booke or Annall of all memorable Actions which he had daily committed to record, and had composed them into a Historie, the Copie whereof he offered me if I could procure it translated. Concerning the Kings reuenue and the manner of raising it, besides confiscations, gifts, and cuttings vpon great men; that the Gouvernement of euery Prouince did yearely pay a Rent: as for his Gouvernement of Patan onely, he gaue the King eleuen Leckes of Rupias, (the Rupias sterling is two shillings two pence) all other profits were his, wherein he had Regall authoritie to take what he list, which was esteemed at fise thousand horse, the pay of euery one at two hundred Rupias by the yeare, whereof he kept fiteene hundred, and was allowed the Surplusse as dead pay: besides the King gaue him a Pension of one thousand Rupias a day, and some smaller governments. Yet he assured me there were diuers had double his entertainment, and aboue twentie equall.

He prayes the good Prophet Iesus and his Lawes, and was full of very delightfull and fruitfull Discourse. This Visit was past some few dayes, and I thought that his courtesie had beene at an end; but this day he had borrowed of the King his house and Garden of pleasure: Hanar Gemall, a mile out of Towne to feast me in; and ouernight earnestly inuiting me, I promised to come.

Entertainment
at a house of pleasure.

At midnight he went himselfe and carryed his Tents and all furniture, and fitted vp a place by the Tanke side very handsomely. In the morning I went. At my comming he came to meet mee and with extraordinary ciuilitie carryed me into his roome prepared where hee had some company and one hundred seruants attending, two of his sonnes, being a father to thirtie. He entertained me with shewing me the Kings little closets and retyring roomes which were painted with Antiques, and in some panes Copies of the French Kings and other Christian Princes; wanting no Court-ship. That he was a poore man, slaue to the King, that he desired I should receiue some content, and that therefore he had drawne me to a slight Banquet to eate bread and salt together, to seale a friendship which he desired me to accept: that there were many great men able to shew me more courtelie, but they were proud & false wishing me to trust to none, for that if I had busines to the King of any weight, either concerning the Portugals or any other, they would neuer deliuer truth who were my Interpreters, but only what either please themselves or would content in the relation. That therefore I should neuer be rightly vnderstood, nor effect my businell without abuse, nor neuer cleerely know my estate vntill I had an Englishman that could speake Persian, and that might deliuer my minde without passing the tongue of another, which the King would grant me if I could find any: for that hee had conceiued a good opinion of me, and the last night at the Gussel Chan, hauing brought before him the Jewels of Sheck Ferid, Gouvernour of Labar lately dead, he remmbred me of himselfe, and seeing a Picture of his owne that pleased him, he deliuered it to Asaph Chan, commanding him to send it me to weare for his sake, with many words of fauour towards me, which would make all the great men respect me.

The Kings response to Sir
T. Roc.

In this time came in Dinner. So sitting on Carpetting, a cloth was layd and diuers banquetting set before vs, and the like a little a part for the Gentlemen that companied him, to whom hee went to eat, they holding it a kind of vncleanenesse to mingle with vs. Whereat I told him, hee promised we should eate bread and salt together, that without his company I had little appetite to he rose and fate by me, and we fell roundly to our victuals. The substance was made dishes of diuers sorts, Raisons, Almonds, Pittachees and Fruit. Dinner ended, he played at Chesse, and I walked, returning after some discourse I offered to take my leaue, he answered he had intreated me to come to eate, that what was passed was but a collation, that I must not depart till I had supped, which I easily granted to.

Rites of entertainment.

The prouision. Chesse-play.

10 About an houre after came to visit him the Ambassadour of one of the Decan Kings whom he presented to me, vsing him with ciuilitie, but in a much inferiour manner, in respect of his fashion toward me: he asked me if his Maiestie my Master would not take in scorne the offer of seruice from from so poore a man, and if hee would vouchsafe, to accept of a Present from a stranger, for that he would send a Gentleman with me to kisse his Maiesties hands, and to see our Countrey. I answered him as became ciuilitie and good manners; so hee sent for one presently, and questioned him if he would venture the iourney, who seeming willing hee presented to mee, and said he would prouide some Toyes of the Countrey for his Maiestie, and send m in my companie. By the manner, this seemed to me to be earnest.

Purpose to send one into England.

20 While we thus spent time, our Supper came, two clothes being spread, as in the morning and before me and my Chaplaine, and one Merchant were set diuers dishes of Sallets and meate rost, fried, boyled, and diuers Rices: he desired to be excused, that it was their manner to eate among themselves, his Countymen would take it ill, if he eate not with them; so hee and his guests, I and my Company solaced our selues with a good refreshing. The meate was not amisse, but the attendance and order much better, his seruants being very diligent and respectfull. He gaue mee for a present, as is the manner, when one is invited, fise cases of Sugar Candie dressed with Muske, and one Loafe of most fine Sugar white as Snow, about fiftie pound weight, desiring me to accept of one hundred such against my going, which said he, you refuse of me thinking I am poore, but it costs me nothing, it is made in my Gouernment, and comes gratis to me. I answered, hee had too farre alreadie obliged me, that I would not refuse his courtelie when I was readie to depart.

Supper serued in.

They giue Presents to their Guests.

30 He replied, he might bee then vnfurnished, and therefore desired I would now speake, that hee might not lose his offer and labour too. Thus professing himselfe my father and I his sonne, with complements I tooke my leaue.

The sixteenth, I went to visit the King, who as soone as I came in, called to his women and reached out a Picture of himselfe set in Gold, hanging at a Wire Gold Chaine with one pendant foule Pearle, which he deliuered to Asaph Chan, warning him not to demand any reuerence of me, other then such as I would willingly giue; it being the custome whensoever hee bestowes any thing, the receiuer kneeles downe and puts his head to the ground, which hath beene exacted of the Ambassadors of Persia. So Asaph Chan came to mee, and I offered to take it in my hand, but he made signe to put off my hat, and then put it about my necke, leading me right before the 40 King. I vnderstood not his purpose, but doubted he would require the custome of the Countrey, called Sizeda. But I was resolu'd rather to deliuer vp my Present: Hee made signe to giue the King thanks, which I did after my owne custome, whereat some Officers called mee to Sizeda: but the King answered no, no, in Persian; so with many gracious words sent me, I returned to my place, you may now iudge the Kings liberalitie; this gift was not worth in all thirtie pound, yet it was fise times as good as any he giues in that kind, and held for an especiall fauour, for that all the great men that weare the Kings Image, which none may doe but to whom it is giuen, receiue no other then a meddall of Gold as bigge as fixe pence, with a little Chaine of foure inches to fasten it on their heads, which at their owne proper charge, some set with stones, or garnish with pendant Pearles.

50 The nineteenth, Gemal-din-ussin, who inuited me to Hauaz Gemall, being newly made Gouernour of Sindu, came to me to dinner with two sonnes and two other Gentlemen, and about one hundred seruants: hee ate some Banqueting stufte made in my house by a Moore Cooke, but would not touch such meate as I had prouided of my owne fashion, though his appetite was very good, a kind of superstition forbidding him. But hee desired me that foure or fise dishes might be sent to his house, such as he would choose, being all baked meates which hee had neuer seene, and that he would dine on them in priuate, which was accordingly done, and so offering vs the Towne of Sindu, and all other courtelies in his power, he made haste to fill his belly. I gaue him a small Present according to custome. This day suddenly dyed to my great grieve, and discomfort my Minister Master Hall, a man of most gentle and milde nature, religious, and of vnspotted life.

Superstitious Cautels.

60 The twentieth day, and the night past fell a storme of raine called the Olipphant, vsuall at going out of the raines, but for the greatnesse very extraordinary, whereby there ran such streames into the Tanke whose head is made of stone, in shew extremely strong, but the water was so growne that it brake ouer in one place, and there came an alarme and sudden feare, that it would giue way and drowne all that part of the Towne where I dwelt, insomuch that the Prince and all his women forsooke their house; my next Neighbour carryed away his goods and his wife on his Elephants and Camels to flye to the hils side. All men had their Horles ready at their doores to saue their liues, so that we were much frightened and sat vp till mid-night for that we had no help, but to flye our selues and loose all our goods, for it was reported that it would run higher then the top of my house by three foot, and carry all away being poore muddy buildings, foureteene yeeres past, a terrible experience hauing shewed the violence, the foot of the Tanke being leuell with our dwelling, and the water extreame great and deepe, so that the top was much higher then my house which stood in the bottome in the course of the water, euery ordinary rain making such a Current at my doore, that it runne not swifter in the Arches of London Bridge, and is for some houres impassible by Horse or man. But God otherwise disposed it in his mercy, the King caused a sluice to be cut in the night to ease the water another way, yet the very raine had walshed downe a great part of the wals of my house, and so weakened it by diuers breaches, in that I feared the fall more then the flood: and was so moyled with dirt and water, that I could scarce lye dry or safe, for that I must be enforced to bee at new charge in reparation. Thus were we euery way afflicted; fires, smokes, floods, stormes, heats, dust, flies, and no temperate or quiet season.

Mandoe.

The nine and twentieth, the King went to Hauaz Iemal and so to hunting, there was taken a resolution to remooue to Mandoe, a Castle neere Bramport where is no Towne, for that Sultan Parnis being come from the warre in disgrace, and being with his traine neere Asmere, the King commanded him to Bengala, excusing himselfe to be seene, and so hauing dispatched him without such incommoditie as was feared would arise if the two brothers met, hee intended himselfe to settle Sultan Caronne in the warres of Decan, to which all the chieft were so contrary, that the King feared to send him downe as was the resolution some monethes past, and therefore dissembled it, vntill the other Prince were withdrawne & he established by his owne countenance, coming so neere as Mandoe, which remoue if it proceed will put vs to extreame trouble and cost, for that we must build a new house both for our selues and goods, the Castle standing on a hill without any other buildings neere it.

A wild Boare sent by the King.

The thirtieth, the King returned in the night, and about eleuen a clocke sent mee a very fat wild Boare, and so great, that he desired the Tusks backe, with this message, that he kild it with his owne hand, and that therefore I should eat it merrily, and make good cheare. This occasion Jaddowe that was sent for to the King to bring it, tooke to tell Asaph Chan, that I desired to visit him on the morrow, and hoped to receiue from his hands the Priuiledges granted by the King. He answered, hee could not dispatch them so soone, but that they should on Sunday bee sealed, and that he was loth to see me, vntill he had giuen me content.

D. III.

The Kings birth day, and manner of the obseruation, with other accidents in September.

Rites of the Kings Birth-day.

THe second of September, was the birth day of the King, and solemnized as a great Feast, wherein the King is weighed against some Iewels, Gold, Siluer, stufes of Gold, Siluer, Silke, Butter, Rice, Fruit, and many other things of euery sort a little, which is giuen to the Bramini. To this solemnitie the King commanded Asaph Chan to send for me, who so doing, appointed me to come to the place where the King sits out at Durbar, and there I should be sent for in; but the Messenger mistaking, I went not vntill Durbar time, and so missed the sight, but being there before the King came out, as soone as he espyed me, hee sent to know the reason why I came not in, he hauing giuen order? I answered according to the error; but he was extreame angry, and chid Asaph Chan publicly. He was so rich in Iewels, that I must confesse I neuer saw together so vnuallenable wealth. The time was spent in bringing of his greatest Elephants before him, some of which being lord-Elphants, had their chaines, bells, and furniture of Gold and Siluer, attended with many gilt banners and flags, and eight or tenne Elephants waiting on him, clothed in Gold, Silke, and Siluer. Thus passed about twelue Companies most richly furnished, the first hauing all the Plates on his head and breast set with Rubies and Emeraulds, being a beast of a wonderfull stature and beautie. They all bowed downe before the King, making a reuerence very handsomely, and was as shew as worthy as euer I saw any of beasts onely. The Keepers of euery chiefe Elephant gaue a Present. So with some gracious complements to me, he rose and went in.

The Kings riches in Iewels, &amp;c.

Another curiositie about Pictures.

At night about tenne of the clocke, he sent for me, I was a bed. The Message was, hee heard I had a picture which I had not shewed him, desiring me to come to him and bring it, & if I would not giue it him, yet that he might see it, and take copies for his Wiues. I rose and carryed it with me: when I came in, I found him sitting crosse-legged on a little Throne, all clad in Diamonds, Pearles, Pearles, and Rubies, before him a table of Gold, in it about fiftie pieces of Gold plate, set all with stones, some very great and extreamly rich, some of lesse value, but all of them almost couered with small stones, his Nobilitie about him in their best equipage, whom he commanded to drinke froliquely, severall wines standing by in great flagons. When I came neere him, he asked for the Picture: I shewed him two; he seemed astonished at one of them, and demanded whose it was? I answered, a friends of mine that was dead. He asked me if I would giue it him. I replied, that I esteemed it more then any thing I possessed, because it was the image of one that I loued dearely, and could neuer recouer; but that if his Maiestie would pardon me my fancie, and accept of the other, which was a French Picture, but excellent worke, I would most willingly giue it him. He sent me thanks, but that it was that onely Picture he desired, and loued as well as I, and that if I would giue it him, he would better esteeme of it, then the richest Iewell in his house. I answered, I was not so in loue with any thing, that I would refuse to content his Maiestie; I was extreame glad to doe him seruice, and if I could giue him a better demonstration of my affection, which was my heart to doe him seruice, I was ready to present it to him. At which he bowed to me, and replied, it was sufficient that I had giuen it, that hee confessed hee neuer saw so much Art, so much Beauty; and coniured me to tell him truely, whether euer such a woman liued? I answered, there did one liue that this did resemble in all things but perfection, and was now dead. He returned me, that he tooke my willingnesse very kindly; but seeing I had so freely giuen him that that I esteemed so much, he would not rob me of it, onely he would shew it his Ladies, and cause his Workemen to make him fise Copies, and if I knew my owne I should haue it. I answered, I had freely and willingly giuen it, and was extreamly glad of his Maiesties acceptance. He replied, that he would not take it, that he loued me the better for louing the remembrance of my friend, and knew what an iniury it was to take it from me, by no meanes hee would not keep it, but onely take Copies, and with his owne hand he would returne it, and his Wiues should weare them: for indeed in that art of limming his Painters worke miracles, the other bee- in in oyle he liked not.

Then he sent me word, it was his birth day, and that all men did make merry, and to aske if I would drinke with them. I answered, whatsoever his Maiestie commanded; I wished him many prosperous dayes, and that this Ceremonie might be renewed an hundred yeeres: he asked mee what wine, whether of the Grape, or made; whether strong or small? I replied, what he commanded, hoping he would not command too much, nor too strong: so hee called for a Cuppe of Gold of mingled Wine, halfe of the Grape, halfe artificiall, and dranke, causing it to bee filled, and sent by one of his Nobles to me with this Message, That I should drinke it, twice, thrice, foure or fise times off for his sake, and accept of the Cup and appurtenances as a Present. I dranke a little, but it was more strong then euer I tasted, so that it made me sneeze, whereat he laughed, and called for Raisons, Almonds, and sliced Limons, which were brought mee on a Plate of Gold, and he bad me eat and drinke what I would, and no more. So then I made reuerence for my Present after mine owne manner, though Asaph Chan would haue caused me to kneele, and knocke my head against the ground, but his Maiestie best accepted what I did. The cup was of Gold, set all ouer with small Turkies and Rubyes, the Couer of the same set with great Turkies, Rubies, and Emeralds in workes; and a dish suitable to set the Cup vpon: the value I know not, because the stones are many of them small, and the greater (which are also many, are not all cleane, but they are in number about two thousand, and in gold about twenty Ounces. Thus hee made fro- lieke, and sent me word, he more esteemed me then euer any Franke; and demanded if I were merry at eating the wild Boare sent me a few daies before; how I drest it, what I dranke, and such complements; That I should want nothing in his land: which his publike, and many graces I found presently in the fashion of all his Nobilitie.

Then he threw about to those that stood below, two Chardgers of new Rubies, and among vs two Chardgers of hollow Almonds of Gold and Siluer mingled; but I could not scramble as did his great men: for I saw his sonne take vp none; then he gaue Shashes of Gold, and Girdles to all the Musicians and Wayters, and to many others. So drinking, and commanding others, his Maiestie; and all his Lords became the finest men I euer saw, of a thousand humors; but his sonne Asaph Chan, and two old men, and the late King of Candahar, and my selfe forbore. When hee could not hold vp his head, he lay downe to sleepe, and we all departed. At going out, I moued Asaph Chan for dispatch of my priuiledges; assuring him his Maiesty could giue me no Present so acceptable; if he pleased not to dispatch me, which I doubted not, if it lay in his power, but that some other hinderance was in my way, I would on the morrow moue the King, he desired mee not to doe so: for the King loued mee, and had giuen order for it, that the preparation of this Feast had hindered him, but that now hee would send it me, and doe me all seruice.

The fourth of September, I found it easie to iudge what vexation it is to traffique with those faithlesse people. Seuen moneths I had promise from weeke to weeke, from day to day, and no exception, but finding I had so drawne them, that I should not much need the Prince, and if we disliked, we might refuse his gouernement. He vtterly renounced his word in choller and rage. I durst not yet leaue him, nor take notice of his falshood. He that first tooke him for our Solicitor, people, engaged vs into this miserie, knowing him to bee the Protector of our enemies, and a Slaue to bribes, which they multiply vpon him. But now I had a Wolfe by the eares: I seemed onely to apprehend his dislike of the length and phrased, and sent him a Letter to interpret me, and a Brieft of the substance of all required on their parts, contained in generall words, touching onely such particulars as he liked, and left out quite all the Conditions demanded formerly by him of mee, desiring him to put it in forme, and procure the Seale, or to giue me leaue to receiue mine owne deniall from the King, and so to depart the Countrey. These I finished in Persian the same day, and sent them to him, they are recorded in their order.

The eighth, Asaph Chan sent to me that answer, That absolutely, he would procure nothing sealed, that any way concerned the Princes gouernement; that I should onely expect from him what we desired, whose Firmans were sufficient. And so reuealed that purpose which he had long in practise, to make vs wholly depend on the Prince. Now I had iust cause to looke out, and was blamelesse if I sought new friends when he had forsaken me. I resolved to trie the Prince, and to seeme to depend wholly on him, hauing sent formerly to his Secretary foure clauses, to which I demaunded his Firman for our present vse at Surat, for the Fleete expected, which his Highnesse had agreed to.

The tenth, I went to the Prince, who cast downe to the Secretary his Firman by mee desired and promised; so that I hoped I had been at rest. The eleuenth, I receiued it, but when I read it, it was in two of the foure clauses demanded and promised, much different, and one whole branch left out; so I returned it with a round answer, I would not accept it, nor suffer any goods to come ashore. Neuer any man had to doe with so much Pride, Couetousnesse, and falshood. At night, I rode to Merxe Socorolla, the Princes Secretary, to expostulate the businesse, and to declare my resolution of departure, but I found the Firman not such as I was enformed, but containing all the clauses required by me, though in phrased, to my iudgement, somewhat restrained, which he expounded in the best sence, declaring that it was the Princes intent to satisfie my desire fully, and that it was sufficient. I vrge the obscurity of some points; desiring him as he had cleared his Highnesse meaning to me, so he would by his Letter to the Gouvernour of Surat, which hee granted, principally commanding that the Customer should pay for fiftie clothes, which hee had many moneths bought, and now would returne them vnto the Factors, to their extreame losse. In the ende, he opened the old point of the Princes desire, that I should rely on him, and not crosse him in busineses of his Gouernment with the King, and I should find him a better friend then I expected: and finally gaue me such satisfaction in all points, that I was both pleased, and in some hope of good successe, the rather because he is no briber, reputed honest, and did vndertake on his credit, to whom the Prince had referred all busineses, that we should not sustaine the losse of one piece, nor any the least iniury: so I accepted the Firman, which vpon translating I found verie effectuell.

The sixteenth, I visited the Prince, purposing yet to runne on in a way of seeming dependance on him, vntill I heard from our ships, and what entertainment they were like to receiue this yeare. I found him sad, fearing the comming of Sultan Parnis to Court, being within eight course, and importuned to kisse his Fathers hands; who had graunted him, but by the power of Normall was after diswaded, and a command sent, that the Prince should take his iourney right to Benga, yea although the King had fallen downe, and taken his Mother by the feet to obtaine her leaue to see his Sonne. The Kings remouue continued, but whether, no man could certainly resolue.

miliation.

He tenth of October, Abdala Chan the great Gouvernour of Amadanas, beeing sent for to Court in disgrace for many insolencies and neglects of the Kings authority, and thought he would stand on his guard, and refuse; yet the Prince Sultan Coronne (whose ambition wrought on euery aduantage) desirous to oblige so great a man (beeing one of the chiefe Captaines in these Kingdomes) preuailed with him on his word to submit; so that comming in Pilgrims Clothes with fortie seruants on foote, about sixtie mile in counterfeited humiliation, finished the rest in his Palanke, vntill he arriued neere the Court, but one dayes iourney behind he had two thousand horse attending. This day he was brought to the Iarruco (the publike sitting of the King to see Games, and to heare complaints) chained by the feete, barefoot between two Noble men, he puld his Turbant in his eyes, before hee had the happinesse to behold the Kings face. After reuerence made, and some fewe questions, the King forgave him, caused his yrons to be loosed, and clothed in a new Vest of Cloth of Gold. Turbant and Girdle according to the custome. The Prince who intended to build his honour on the warres of Decan, which his elder brother had left with disgrace, and the great Commander Chan Channa did not prosper in (which doubtlesse was a practiser with the Decans, from whom he receiued pension) caused his Father to recall Chan Channa, who refusing to come, desired the King not to send Sultan Caronne to that warre, but one of his yongest sonnes about fiftene yeares of age. This Co- Sultan Caronne

ronne tooke to heart, but prosecuting his purpose of the warre, promised to Abdela Chan the his purpose, Command of the armie vnder him, by displacing Chan Channa.

The King fearing troubles, and knowing all the ambitions and factions of this sonne, the discontent of his two elder, the power of Chan Channa, was desirous to accommodate all by accepting a peace, and confirming Chan Channa in the Gouvernement hee held, and closely to that end wrote a letter of fauour, and purposed to send a Vest, according to the Ceremony of reconciliation, to Chan Channa; but before he dispatched it, he acquainted a kinswoman of his living in the Zereglia, of his purpose. Shee, whether fallie to her friend (wrought by Sultan Caronne) or out of greatnesse of heart, to see the top of her family so dealt with; after so many merits; answered plainly, that shee did not beleue Chan Channa would weare any thing sent from the King, knowing his Maiefty hated him, and had once or twice offered him poylon, which hee putting in his bolome (in stead of his mouth) had made triall of. Therefore shee was confident hee would not dare to put on his body any thing that came from his Maiefty. The King offered to weare it himselfe before her an houre, and that shee should write to testifie it: shee replied, hee would trust neither of them both with his life, but if he might liue quietly in his command, would doe his Maiefty true seruice. Whereupon the King altered his purpose, and resolved to proceed in the sending of Sultan Caronne, and to countenance his reception, would follow after with another armie.

Chan Channa that discovered the storme, practised with the Decans, who were at his seruice, to offer termes of peace for a season, finding no other way to dissolve this cloud that hung ouer them both, vntill the King and Prince were departed and settled further off. To this end came two Ambassadors this day from the Princes of Decan. They brought horses bar'd, richly furnished for Presents. At first the King refused to heare them and their gift, but turned them ouer to his sonne with this answer; If he would haue peace or warre, it was in his brest. The Prince advanced by this fauour, and swelling with pride, resolved (though I was informed the conditions were very honorable, and such as the King would haue accepted) to goe on the iourney, answering he would treat of no peace, vntill he were in the field with his Armie; Chan Channa should not so beguile him of the honor of finishing that warre.

Decans offer
peace.

The ambitions of this yong Prince are open, the common talke of the people, yet his Father suffers all, but intends him not the Kingdome. For Sultan Corseronne, the eldest brother, is both extreemely beloued, and honored of all men (al most adored) and very iustly for his Noble parts, and this the King knowes and loues, but thinks his liberty would diminish his owne glory, and sees not that this ill youth doth more darken him by ambitious practises, then the other could by vertuous actions.

Thus he nourisheth diuision and emulation betweene the brethren, and putteth such power in the hand of the yonger (supposing hee can vndoe it at his pleasure) that the wisest foresee a rending and tearing of these Kingdomes by diuision, when the King shall pay the debt to Nature, and that all parts will be torne and destroyed by a ciuill warre.

Fear of future
broiles.

The history of this Countrey, for the variety of subiect, and the many practises in the time of Echarsha, Father of this King, by him then Prince; and these later troubles, were not vnworthy committing to writing; but because they are of so remote parts, many will despise them: and because the people are esteemed barbarous, few will beleue them. Therefore I content my selfe with the contemplation, but I could deliuer as many rare and cunning passages of State, subtilt euasions, policies, answers, and adages, as I beleue, for one age would not be easily equalled.

Only one that passed lately I cannot omit, to shew wisdome and patience in a father, faith in a seruant, falshood in a brother, impudent boldnesse in a faction that dare attempt any thing, when the highest Maiefty giues them liberty, either beyond the law of their owne condition, or the limits of policie and reason.

The Prince Sultan Caronne, Narmahel the deare Queene, Aunt to his wife, Asaph Chan his father in law, brother to the Queene, and Etiman Dowlet, father to them both (being they that now gouerne all, and dare attempt any thing) resolved it was not possible for them to stand, if the Prince Sultan Corseronne liued, whom the Nobility loued, and whose deliery or life would punish their ambitions in time; therefore practised how to bring him into their power, that poyson might end him. Narmahel attempts the King with the false teares of womens bewitching flattery, that Sultan Corseronne was not safe, nor his aspiring thoughts deposed: the King heares her say it, but would not vnderstand more then shee deliuered plainly.

This failing, they tooke opportunity of the Kings being drunke; the Prince, Etiman Dowlet and Asaph Chan, moued the King, that for the safety of Sultan Corseronne, and for his honour, it were fitter he were in the company of his brother, whose companies would be pleasing one to the other, and his safetie more regarded, then in the hands of a Rashboote Gentile, to whom the King had committed him. Therefore they humbly desired his Maiefty, that he might be deliuered into the hands of his deare brother, which the King granted, and so fell asleepe.

Complements with the King.

They thought their owne greatnesse such, as bringing the Kings authority no man durst refuse, and being once in their possession, they would dispute the redeliuery: so the same night Asaph Chan in the name of the King, sent by the Prince, came with a guard to demand and receiue Sultan Corseronne, at the hand of Anna Rah, a * Rajah Rashboote, to whom the King had intrusted him. He refused to deliuer his charge, with this answer, That he was Sultan Caronnes humble seruant, but that he had receiued the Prince his brother from the hands of the King, and to no other would deliuer him, but he should haue patience till the morning, when he would discharge himselfe to his Maiefty, and leaue it to his pleasure to dispose. This answer cooled all. In the morning Anna Rah came to the King, and acquainted him with the demand of the Prince, his refusall and answer, and added his Maiefty had giuen him the charge of his sonne, and made him the Commander of foure thousand horse, with all which hee would dye at the gate, rather then deliuer his Prince into the hands of his enemies: If his Maiefty required him, hee was ready to obey his will, but he would prouide for his owne innocency. The King replied, You haue done honestly, faithfully, you haue answered discreetly: continue your purpose, and take no knowledge of any commands: I will not seeme to know this, neither do you stirre further; hold your faith, and let vs see how farre they will prosecute it.

The Prince and the Faction, the next day finding the King silent, hoping hee might forget what passed in wine, tooke no notice of the grant, nor of the refusall, but it fell (not without suspicion) on both parts. This I insert to this end, that you may beware scattering your goods in diuers parts, and engaging your stocke and seruants farre into the Countrey: for the time will come, when all in these Kingdomes will be in combustion, and a few yeares warre will not decide the inueterate malice laid vp on all parts against a day of vengeance, wherein if Sultan Corseronne preuaile in his right, this Kingdom will be a Sanctuary for Christians, whom he loues and honours, fauouring learning, valour, the discipline of warre, and abhorring all couetousnesse, and discerning the base customes of taking, vsed by his Ancestors and the Nobility. If the other winne, we shall be losers: for he is most earnest in his Superstition, a hater of all Christians, proud, subtile, false, and barbarously tyrannous. There is daily expected an Ambassadour from the Shah King of Persia.

The thirteenth of October at night, the King returned and sent me a wilde Pigge. I receiued aduice of the arriual of foure shippes safe at the Port of Swally, with Letters from England, that they departed the Coast the ninth of March 1615. with sixe ships, losing company of the Rose about the North Cape by foule weather.

The twelfth of Iune 1616. the other five came safely to the Bay of Soldania, where the Lyon homeward bound, was ready for a wind; her Commanders and people in health, staying dayes at the Road, without newes of the small ship. They dispeeded the Swan to Bantam, for effecting the businesse, and set saile for Surat the nine and twentieth with foure shippes, and came to anchor to their Port, the foure and twentieth of September 1616. In their passage the sixt of August, neare the Ilands of Comora, about twelue degrees, fiftie minutes, they had sight of a Carrick burthen fiftene hundred tunne, manned with sixe hundred, being Admirall of the Fleet sent for Goa, bearing the Flagge: the Globe fetcht her vp to wind-ward, and after salutations of the Sea, the Carricke commanded her to Lee-ward, and seconded it with five shot thorow her Hull, which shee requited with eightene, and so fell off. The Admirall and English Fleet comming vp, demanded satisfaction for the iniury; which was replied to with scorne: so began a fresh fight in few shot, the Commander Benjamin Ioseph was slaine, and the new established continued it: at the euening shee ranne her selfe ashore among the rockes of Angazesia. The Fleet anchored short of her, to attend the issue, and sent a Boat to offer faire warres: but about midnight shee fired her selfe, and burned all the next morning. The English sending their Boats could not approach, but beleue that not one man was saued, by circumstances very probable: the new Vice-Roy for Goa was in this shippe, whose resolution was the death of all the others.

The next day, I imparted the King, with his Maiesties remembred salutations, which were with much courtesie receiued: but he began with the Presents. I first mentioned our late fight and victory, which he seemed to reioyce in, and to applaud the valour of our Nation: but fell off to What hath the King sent me? I answered, Many tokens of his loue and affection: That my Master knew he was Lord of the best part of Asia, the richest Prince of the East. That to send his Maiefty rich Presents, were to cast Pearles into the Sea, the mother and store-house of them, that therefore his Maiefty thought it vnecessary; but had presented him with his loue, with many curious toyes, which I hoped would giue him content. He vrged mee to some particulars, which I named: he asked me for French Musse or Veluet. I answered, my letters were not arriued: some other was come, which he desired. He enquired for Dogges: I told him, some had their their fortune in the fight, some dyed, two were preserved for him, at which hee reioyced, and continued if I could procure him a Horse of our great size, such as I described, being a Rone or Dutch Horse; he would accept it better then a Crowne. I replied, I would doe my endeavour for his Maiesties satisfaction, but I feared it could not be effected: he answered, if I would procure one, he would giue me a Leck of Rupias. I desired his Maiesties Letter for the comming of these Presents without search, and for the good vñage of our people: he replied, the Port was his Sonnes, but sent for him and publikely gaue expresse order for what I would require, and take on me, that it should not be searched, nor pay custome, but be dispeeded with expedition safe to my hands, that I might distribute it at my discretion, that he should command the good reception of our people, and finally, that he should giue me content in all my desires. This generally extended not to the grant of a Fort, for that clause Asaph Chan refused to deliuer. This charge was very round and hearty in the King, and a grace to me. The Prince called Asaph Chan to me, and there professed and promised before his Father and all the Court, to giue mee all reasonable content. This is the strength of new Presents.

Dogges and a Horse.

A Horse pri-

The fifteenth, I receiued from Masulipatan, that Captaine Keeling had taken two Portugall Barks and a ship, one on the Coast of Cochin, laden with Tinne, the other freighted from Bengala, which he carried to Bantam: that Sir Robert Sherley was dismissed with disgrace from Goa, and that he was on his way ouer land to Masulipatan to seeke passage; vnprobable, and I beleue vntrue.

The seuenteenth, the Prince pursuing his purpose of finishing the Decan Warres by his owne person, and vndertaking to giue answer to the Ambassadors, giues none; but detaines them vntill his approach. But being to depart, he and his partie thought not themselves secure if Sultan Corseronne remained in the hands of Annarah, that in his absence the King might bee reconciled, and by his libertie all the glory and hopes of their faction would vanish, and the iniurie and ambition hardly be pardoned. They newly assaile the Kings constancie to deliuer vp his sonne into the hands of Asaph Chan, as his Guard vnder Sultan Coronne. They pretend that it will fright Chan Channa, and the Decans, when they shal heare that this Prince is so fauoured, who now comes to make warre vpon them, that the King hath deliuered vp his eldest sonne; in that as it were his whole Kingdome, and hope of succession, and the present power thereof.

This day he was deliuered vp, the Souldiers of Anna Rah discharged, and the Souldiers of Asaph Chan planted about him with assistance of two hundred of the Princes Horse. His Sister and diuers women in the Seraglia mourne, refuse their meate, cry out of the Kings dotage and crueltie, and professe, that if he dye, there will an hundred of his Kindred burne for him in memorie of the Kings bloudinesse to his worthiest sonne. The King giues faire words, protesteth no intent of ill towards the Prince, and promiseth his deliery, and sends Normahell to appease these enraged Ladies: but they curse, threaten, and refuse to see her. The common people all murmure, they say the King hath not deliuered his sonnes, but his owne life into the hands of an ambitious Prince, and a treacherous faction, that Corseronne cannot perish without scandall to the Father, or reuenge from him; therefore he must goe first, and after him his Sonne, and so through their blouds this youth must mount the Royall seat. New hopes are spread of his redeliuerie, and soone allaid, euery man tels newes according to his feares or desires. But the poore Prince remaynes in the Tygres power, refuseth meate, and requires his Father to take his life, and not to let it be the triumph and delight of his Enemies. The whole Court is in a whisper, the Nobility sad, the multitude like it selfe, full of tumour and noyse, without head or foot; onely it rages, but bends it selfe vpon no direct ends. The issue is very dangerous, principally for vs: for among them it matters not who winnes. Though one haue right and much more honour, yet he is still a Moore, and cannot be a better Prince then his Father, who is of so good disposition that he suffers all men to gouerne, which is worse then to be ill: for wee were better beare iniuries of Princes, then of their Ministers.

The nineteenth, the Persian Ambassadour Mahomet Rosa Beag about noone came into the Towne with a great troupe, which were partly sent out by the King to meete him with one hundred Elephants and Musique, but no man of greater qualitie then the ordinary receiuers of all strangers: his owne traine were about fiftie Horse well fitted in Coats of cloth of Gold, their Bowes, Quiuers and Targets richly garnished, fortie shot, and some two hundred ordinary Peons, and attenders on baggage; he was carried to rest in a roome within the Kings outward Court till euening. When he came to the Durbar before the King (to which Ceremony I sent my Secretary to obserue the fashion) when hee approached, hee made at the first raile three Tessilms and one Sizeda, which is prostrating himselfe and knocking his head against the ground: at the entrance in the like, and so presented the Shabas his Letter: which the King tooke with a little motion of his bodie, asking onely, How doth my Brother? without any title of Maiesty. And after some few words, he was placed in the seuenth ranke, against the raile by the doore, below so many of the Kings Seruants, on both sides; which in my iudgement was almost inferiour place for his Masters Ambassadour, but that he well deserued it for doing that reuerence which his Predecessors refused to the dishonour of his Prince, and the murmure of many of his Nation. said he had order from the Sophie to giue content, and thereby it is gathered, his Message is for some aide in money against the Turke, in which kind he often finds liberall succour, though it bee pretended he comes onely to treat a peace for the Decans, whose protection the Shabas taketh to heart, enuying the increase of this Empire. The King according to custome gaue him a handsome Turbant, a Vest of Gold and a Girdle, for which againe hee made three Tessims, and one Sixeda or ground courtesie: he brought for Presents, three times, nine Horses of Persia and Arabia, this being a ceremonious number among them. Nine Mules very faire and large, seven Camels laden with Veluet, two Sutes of Europe Arras, which I suppose was Venetian, Hangings of Veluet with Gold, and not Arras, two Chests of Persian Hangings, one Cabinet rich, foure Muskets, five Clockes, one Camell laden with Persian cloth of Gold, eight Carpets of Silke, two Rubies balast, one and twentie Camels of Wine of the Grape, fourteene Camels of distilled Sweet Waters, seven of Rose Waters, seven Daggers set with stones, five Swords set with stones, seven Venetian Looking Glasses, but those so faire, so rich, that I was ashamed of the relation. These Presents were not deliuered now; onely a Bill of them. His owne Furniture was rich, leading nine spare Horses, trapped in Gold and Siluer; about his Turbant was wreathed a chaine of Pearles, Rubies, and Turqueesses, and three Pipes of Gold, answerable for three spridges of Feathers. Yet I caused diligent obseruance to be made of his reception, and compared it with mine owne, and find he had in nothing more grace, in many things not so much, in ranke farre inferiour to that allowed me, except onely his meeting without the Towne; which by reason of my sicknesse was omitted to be demanded; neither did the King receiue the Shabas his Letter with such respect as my Masters, whom he called the King of England his Brother, the Persian barely Brother without any addition, which was an obseruation of the Iesuite, that vnderstood the Language.

He one and twentieth of October, I went to the Prince and opened my desire, to haue a certaine * clause in his Letter expounded, at which his highnesse sticke a little, and I perceiued his Highnesse to be as hollow as I imagined. Hee demanded then how hee should haue his Presents, or see such toyes as came vp, and moued mee to goe with him. I replied, I could not doe so vntill I had deliuered my Masters Message, and Tokens to the King, but that finished, I would my selfe attend his Highnesse with his Presents, and all such raritie as came to my hands, should be sent after him: he prest me to passe my word, and so I obtayned order for the Firman to my content. His Highnesse looking on a white Feather in my Hat, demanded if I would giue it him, I replied, I would not offer that I had worne, but if he please to command it, that or any thing in my power was to serue him. He asked if I had any more, I answered three or foure of other colours; hee replied, if I would giue them all, for that hee was to shew his Horses and Seruants to the King within two dayes, and that he wanted some, being very rare in those parts. I promised to bring all I had on the morrow that his Highnesse might take his pleasure.

Abdala Chan in a gallant Equipage both of his person and Attendants, in apparell, strange and antike, but in these parts Alia Soldado presented the Prince a white Horse, the Saddle and Furniture of Gold enamelled, a Beast of delicate shape, life and courage, who returned him a Sword plaine with a belt of Leather. There were brought before him many others, the Hilt of Siluer, Chapes set with small Stones, and Targets couered with Gold Veluets, some painted and bossed with Gold and Siluer, which he gaue to his Seruants. Against this Muster many Saddles and Furniture of Gold, rich set with stones, of his owne, were shewed for spare Horses, his Boots imbrothered, and all other ingredients of brauery. I confesse, the expence is wonderfull, and the riches daily seene inualluable.

This night past, it is reported sixe of the Princes Seruants came to murder Sultan Corforoone, but were refused the Key by the Porter; that the Queene Mother is gone to the King with an ouerture of all the practice, the truth is vncertaine, and it is dangerous to aske.

At euening, I went to the Durbar to visit the King, where I met the Persian Ambassador with the first Muster of his Presents, he appeared, rather a Iester or Iugler, then a person of any grauity, running vp and downe and acting all his words like a Mimicke Player (now indeed the Archikanne, was become a right Stagge) hee deliuered the Presents with his owne hands; which the

the King with smiles and cheerefull countenance, and many words of contentment received; his tongue was a great advantage to deliver his owne businessse, which he did with so much flattery and obsequiousnesse, that it pleased as much as his gift, ever calling his Majesty King and Commander of the World (forgetting his owne Master had a share in it) and on every little occasion of good acceptation hee made his Tesslims. When all was delivered for that day, hee prostrated himselfe on the ground, and knocked with his head, as if hee would enter in. The gifts were a faire Quiver for Bow and Arrowes delicately imbroydered, all sorts of European Fruits artificially in dishes, many other folding Purles and Knackes of Leather wrought with Needle-work in coloured Silkes, Shooes imbroydered and sticht, great Glasses in-layed in frames, one square piece of Veluet, imbroydered high with Gold in paynes, betweene which were Italian Pictures wrought in the stuffe, which hee said was the King and Queene of Venice, (which, as I suppose, was the Hangings called Arras) of these fixe were giuen, one onely shewed; many other Tricados of small value. After, the three Nines of Horses and Mules, which were faire ones, the Horses either had lost their flesh or beauty, for except one or two I iudged them vnfit for to be sent or taken by Princes. So he returned with many antike trickes to his place farre inferiour to that allowed me, which was alone and aboue all Subiects which at first Asaph Chan would haue put me by, but I maintayned it as my due. This is but the first act of his presenting, the Play will not be finished in ten dayes. At night I sent to the Princes Secretary for my promised writing: but his Highnesse was loth to let the Presents passe without ransacking, and had changed his mind refusing to seale the Letter.

Nine, a remarkable number.

The two and twentieth, at my coming, I delivered him two Plumages, and two Birds of Paradise; he accepted them easily, and my businessse being moued, and my resolution made knowne not to consent to open, nor to send them vp, but by the hands of my Seruants, at last he yielded and gaue command to the Secretary to dispatch me.

At night I went to the Durbar to obserue the Ambassadour of Persia, I found him standing in his ranke, and often remoued and set lower as great men came in. The King once spake to him, and he danced to the tune thereof, but gaue no present: onely the King commanded that hee should be feasted by the Nobles; The time was spent in seeing Saddles and Furniture for the remoue, of which his Maiestie gaue some to his Followers, it beeing daily expected to rise: the Kings Tents were out foure dayes since. I sent to the Secretary for my Firma, but hee delayed it with excuses.

The foure and twentieth, the King remoued to Hauaz Gemall, and called the Persian Ambassadour, where at night hee ate and dranke before the King with the Nobilities, in the same fashion that I did the Birth-day; the difference onely was, the King gaue him for expence twenty thousand Rupias, for which he made innumerable Tesslims and Sizedaes, not rising from the ground a good space, which extreemely pleased the King, and was base, but profitable Idolatry. The Prince attending his Father, I could get no dispatch in my businessse.

The Kings gift to the Persian.

The five and twentieth, the King returned at Euening, hauing been ouer-night farre gone in Wine: some by chance or malice spake of the merry night past, and that many of the Nobilitie dranke wine, which none may doe but by leaue. The King forgetting his order, demanded who gaue it? It was answered the Buxie (for no man dares say it was the King, when he would onely doubt it.) The Custome is, that when the King drinks (which is alone) sometime hee will command, that the Nobilitie shall drinke after, which if they doe not, it is an offence too, and so every man that takes the Cup of wine of the Officer, his name is written, and he makes Teselem, though perhaps the Kings eyes are mystie. The King not remembring his owne command, called the Buxie; and demanded if he gaue the order? He replied, No, (falsly: for he received it, and by name called such as did drinke with the Embassadour) whereat the King called for the list, and the Persons, and fined some one, some two, some three thousand Rupias, some lesse, and some that were neerer his person, he caused to be whipped before him, receiuing one hundred and thirtie stripes with a most terrible instrument, hauing at each end of foure cords, irons like Spurrowels, so that every stroke made foure wounds. When they lay for dead on the ground, he commanded the standers by to foot them, and after the Porters to breake their stauers vpon them. Thus most cruelly mangled and bruised, they were carryed out, of which one dyed in the place. Some would haue excused it on the Embassadour; but the King replied, hee onely bad giue him a Cup or two. Though drunkennesse be a common and a glorious vice, and an exercise of the Kings, yet it is so strictly forbidden, that no man can enter into the Gusel-Chan, where the King sits, but the Porters smell his breath: and if hee haue but tasted wine, is not suffered to come in; and if the reason be knowne of his absence, he shall with difficultie escape the whip: for if the King once take offence, the Father will not speake for the Sonne. So the King made the Company pay the Persian Embassadours reward.

Strange dealing with Nobles.

Terrible whipping.

Drunkennesse preuented.

Awe of the King.

The fixe and twentieth, I sent to Sorocolla for the Firman. He sent me a copy as ambiguous and fraudulent as the former, which I refused, and drew the misliked clause my selfe, which I sent backe, and was promised that on the morrow it should be sealed.

The eight and twentieth, the Kings day of remouue at hand, I sent to Asaph Chan for a warrant rant for carriages: the Merchants hauing sought all the Towne to remboue their goods to Agra, could find none, so I receiued order being enrolled by his Maiesty vpon my offer for twenty Camels, foure Carts, and two Coaches at the Kings price: whereof I disposed as many as the Factors needed to their vse. But it were an extreame error to omit a passage, either of wonderfull baseness in this great Monarch, or a tryall of me. The King had condemned diuers Theenes, among which were some boyes: there was no way to saue their liues, but to sell them for slaues: his Maiesty commanded Asaph Chan to offer two of them for money, which hee appointed the Cuttwall (that is the Marshall) to doe. My Interpreter made answere without my knowledge, that Christians keepe no slaues, that those the King had giuen I had freed, and that it was in vaine to propound it to me. But after I suspected it might be a tryall of me, whether I would giue a little money to saue the liues of two children: or else I supposed, if it were in earnest, it were no great losse to do a good deed. And to try the baseness or scope of this offer, I commanded my Interpreter to returne to Asaph Chan, to tell him that he had acquainted me with the motion and his answer: that I reprehended him for presuming in any case to giue my resolution, that my owne reply was, if there were any money to saue the life of two Children, to those whom they had robbed, or to redeeme them from the Law; both for respect of the Kings command, and for charitie I was ready to giue it, but I would not buy them as slaues, onely pay their ranfome and free them; that if he pleased to know the Kings pleasure that I might giue them libertie without offence, I was very willing to doe it. Asaph Chan replied, I might at my owne will dispose them, that it was an extraordinary goodnesse; with many prayes accepted the money, desiring mee to send it to the Cuttwall, and to vse my discretion to the boyes, not once offering to informe the King, which was one end of my liberality. I was loth to be coozened, and knew not whether this might be the profit of Officers or no, resolved to pay the money, but so as the King should not be ignorant I had more mercy then he, and that a Christian esteemed the life of a Moore above money. So I sent a Factor and my Interpreter to the Cuttwall, to acquaint him with the communication with Asaph Chan, and to let him know, if at night he would enforme the King, that I had offered to redeeme the Prisoners for charities sake, if after his Maiesty would consent to their liberty, I was ready to send him money; but to buy them as slaues, though for an houre, I would not, they should neuer come nor be manumised by mee, but that I desired his Maiesty to pardon them vpon my redemption, so I put them to the test of their base offer. This money exceeded not ten pound, a poore summe to impose on a stranger, or to bee gained by a King. The Cuttwall returned answere, hee would know the Kings pleasure, and accordingly aduise mee. Some would perswade me this is one of the Mogols signall fauours to choose out such great men, as he will giue occasion to doe good and honourable workes, to redeeme Prisoners, and that the money giues satisfaction to the Plaintiffe robbed, and that those so appointed by the King to ranfome others, make Sizeda as for some benefit receiued. Yet I find not any honour in a Prince to impose it on a stranger, to whom hee giues neither maintenance nor liberality; I went to the Durbar to see if his Maiesty would of himselfe speake to me, that I might deliuer my owne offer. The Cuttwall made many motions, brought in the Executioner who receiued some command, but I vnderstood it not, but expected my answere.

An old custome.

Sixe hundred rich Elephants and other brauery of the Prince. Rich Sword.

The first of Nouember, Sultan Corronne tooke his leaue and went to his Tents. The King at noone sat out at the Durbar, where the Prince brought his Elephants about sixe hundred richly trapped and furnished, and his fellowes by estimation ten thousand Horse, many in cloth of gold, with Hearne top-feathers in their Turbants, all in gallantry; Himselfe in cloth of Silver imbrodered with great Pearle and shining in Diamonds like a Firmament. The King imbraced him and kissed him, and shewed much affection: at his depature he gaue him a Sword, the Scabbard all of Gold set with stones, valued at an hundred thousand Rupias: a Dagger at forty thousand, an Elephant and two Horses with all the Furniture of Gold set with stones, and for a close one of the new Caroches (made in imitation, of that sent by his Maiesty my Master) and commanded the English Coachman to driue him to his Tents, into which he ascended and sat in the middle, the sides open, his chiefeest Nobles a foot walking by him to his Tents about foure mile. All the way he threw quarters of Rupias being followed with a multitude of people, he reached his hand to the Coachman, and put into his Hat about one hundred Rupias.

The Kings remoue.

The second, the King remoued to his Tents with his women, and all the Court about three mile. I went to attend him comming to the Pallace, I found him at the Farraco window, and went vp on the Scaffold vnder him; which place not hauing seene before, I was glad of the occasion. On two Treffels stood two Eunuches with long Poles headed with Feathers, fanning him; hee gaue many fauours and receiued many Presents, what hee bestowed hee let downe by a Silke, rould on a turning Instrument; what was giuen him, a venerable fatte deformed olde Matrone hung with Gymbals like an Image pluckt vp at a hole with such another Clue; at one side in a window were his two principall Wiues, whose curiositie made them breake little holes in a grate of Reed that hung before it, to gaze on me. I saw first their fingers, and after laying their faces close, now one eye now another sometime I could discerne the full proportion, they were indifferently white, blacke haire smooth vp, but if I had had no other light, their their Diamonds and Pearles had sufficed to shew them: when I looked vp they retyred and were so merry, that I supposed they laughed at me. Suddenly the King rose, and wee retyred to the Durbar, and sate on the Carpets attending his comming out: not long after he came and sate about halfe an houre, vntill his Ladies at their doore were ascended their Elephants, which were about fifty, all most richly furnished, principally three with Turrets of Gold, grates of Goldwyre euery way to looke out, and Canopies ouer of cloath of Siluer. Then the King descended the staires with such an acclamation of Health to the King, as would haue out-cryed Cannons. At the staires foote, where I met him, and shuffled to be next, one brought a mighty Carpe, another a dish of white stuffe like Starch, into which he put his finger, and touched the filh, and so 10 rubbed it on his fore-head; a ceremōny vsed presaging good fortune. Then another came and buckled on his sword and buckler, set all ouer with great Diamonds and Rubies, the belts of gold sutable: another hung on his quier with thirty arrowes, and his bow in a case (the same that was presented by the Persian Ambassadour) on his head he wore a rich Turbant, with a Plumbe of horne tops, not many, but long: on one side hung a Rubie vnset, as bigge as a Walnut; on the other side a Diamond as great; in the middle an Emerald like a heart, much bigger. His Shash was wreathed about with a chaine of great Pearle, Rubies and Diamonds drild: about his necke he caryed a chaine of most excellent Pearle thrice double, so great as I neuer saw: at his elbowes armelets set with Diamonds; and on his wrists three rowes of Diamonds of seuerall 20 sorts: his hands bare, but almost on euery finger a Ring; his gloues were English, stucke vnder his girdle; his coat of cloath of Gold, without sleeuues, vpon a fine Semian as thinne as Lawne: on his feet a paire of embroydered buskins with Pearle, the toes sharpe and turning vp. Thus armed and accommodated he went to the Coach, which attended him with his new English seruant, who was cloathed as rich as any Player, and more gaudy, and had trained foure horses, which were trapped and harnished in Gold Veluets. This was the first he euer sate in, and was made by that sent from England, so like, that I knew it not but by the couer, which was a Gold Persian Veluet. He got into the end, on each side went two Eunuches, that caried small Maces of Gold, set all ouer with Rubies, with a long bunch of white-horse-taile to driue away flies: before him went Drummes, ill Trumpets, and loud musicke, and many Canopies, Quittusols and other strange ensignes of Maiesty of cloath of Gold set in many places with great Rubies: nine spare horses, the furniture some garnished with Rubies, some with Pearles and Emeralds, some onely with studs enamelled.

Huge Gems.

The Persian Ambassadour presented him a horse; next behind him came three Palankees, the carriages, and feet of one plated with Gold, set at the ends with Pearle, and a fringe of great Pearle hanging in ropes a foot deepe: a border about, set with Rubies and Emeralds. A footman caryed a foot-stoole of Gold, set with stones, the other two were couered and lined with cloath of Gold. Next followed the English Coach, new couered and trimmed rich, which hee had giuen the Queene Normahell, who rode in it: after them a third of this Countrey fashon, which me thought was out of countenance: in it sate his yonger sonnes: after followed about 40 twenty Elephants Royall, spare, for his owne ascendings, so rich, that in stones and furniture they braued the Sunne. Euery Elephant had diuers flagges of cloath of Siluer, gilt Satin and taffata. His Noble-men hee suffered to walke a foote, which I did to the gate, and left him. His wiues on their Elephants were caryed like Parakitoes halfe a mile behind him. When he came before the doore where his eldest sonne is prisoner, hee stayed the Coach, and called for him: hee came and made reuerence with a sword and buckler in his hand, his beard growne to his middle, a signe of dis-fauour. The King commanded him to ascend one of the spare Elephants, and so rode next to him, to the extreame applause and ioy of all men, who now are filled with new hopes. The King gaue him one thousand Rupias to cast to the people, his Gaoler Asaph Chan and all the Moniters yet a foot.

Sultan's
roone deliuered

I tooke horse to auoyd presse and other inconuenience, and crossed out of the Leskar before him, and attended vntill he came neare his Tents. He passed all the way betweene a guard of Elephants, hauing euery one a Turret on his backe; on the foure corners foure banners of yellow Taffaty; right before a sling mounted, that carried a bullet as big as a great tennis ball, the Gunner behind it; in number about three hundred: other Elephants of honor that went before and after about sixe hundred, all which were couered with Veluet or cloath of Gold, and had two or three gilded banners carried: in the way ranne diuers foot-men with skinnies of water that made a continuall showre before him: no horse nor man might be suffered to approach the Coach by two furlongs, except those that walked a foot by, so that I hasted to his Tents, to attend his alighting.

Brauerie of Elephants.

They were walled halfe a mile in compasse, in forme of a fort, with diuers Coynes and Bulwarkes, with high Cannats of a course stuffe made like Arras, red on the out-side, within which figures in panes with a handsome gate-house. Euery post that bare vp these, was headed with a top of brasse. The throng was great: I desired to go in, but no man was suffered, the greatest of the Land sate at the doore; but I made an offer, and they admitted me, but refused the Persian Embassador and all the Noble men. Heere first the Persian Embassador saluted mee with a silent complecomplement only. In the midst of this Court was a throne of mother of Pearle, borne on two pillars raised on earth, couered ouer with an high Tent, the pole headed with a knob of gold, vnder it Canopies of Cloath of gold, vnder-foot Carpets. When the King came neare the doore, some Noble-men came in, and the Persian Embassador: we stood one of the one side, the other of the other, making a little lane: the King entring cast his eye on me, and I made a reuerence: he laid his hand on his brest and bowed, and turning to the other side, nodded to the Persian. I followed at his heeles till he ascended, and euery man cryed good, ioy, and fortune, and so tooke our places. He called for water, washed his hands and departed. His women entred some other Port to their quarter: and his sonne I saw not. Within this whole raile was about thirty diuisions with Tents. All the Noble-men retired to theirs, which were in excellent formes, some all white, some greene, some mingled, all incompassed as orderly as any house, one of the greatest rarities and magnificences I euer saw. The whole vale shewed like a beautifull Citie, for that the ragges nor baggage were not mingled. I was vnfitted with carriage, and ashamed of my prouision, but five yeeres allowance could not haue furnished me with one indifferent sute sortable to others; and which addes to the greatnesse, euery man hath a double, for that one goes afore to the next Remoue, and is set a day before the King riseth from thence. So I returned to my poore house.

November 5.

The fift of Nouember, the Prince sate in the same magnificence, order and greatnesse that I mentioned of the King: his throne being plated ouer with siluer, inlaid with flowers of gold, and the Canopie ouer it square, borne on foure pillars couered with siluer; his armes, sword, buckler, bowes, arrowes, and launce on a table before him. The watch was set, for it was euening when he came abroad. I obserued now he was absolute and curious in his fashion and actions: he receiued two letters, read them standing, before he ascended his Throne. I neuer saw so settled a countenance, nor any man keepe so constant a grauitie, neuer smiling, nor in face shewing any respect or difference of men; but mingled with extreame pride and contempt of all, yet I found some inward trouble now and then assaile him, and a kind of brokennesse and distraction in his thoughts, vnprovidedly and amazedly answering sutors, or not hearing; If I can iudge any thing, he hath left his heart among his Fathers women, with whom hee hath liberty of conuersation. Normahell in the English Coach the day before visited him and tooke leaue, hee gaue him a cloak all imbroydered with Pearle, Diamonds and Rubies, and carried away, if I erre not, his attention to all other businesse.

Fray betwixt
and English.

The sixt, I receiued a letter from Master Browne, from Amadauas, who certified me of a fray begun by the Portugalls: five of them setting on an English Boy in Cambaya, and disarming him, vpon rumours whereof Iohn Browne and James Bickesford went to his rescue, and were assailed by seuen of them. One shooting a Pistoll, hurt Iohn Browne in the hand, but his heart lay not there: they defended themselves honestly, branelly like Englishmen, killed one, hurt some others, and chased them vp and downe the Towne like beasts, to the great shame of such villaines, and reputation of our Nation. To reuenge this, the Portugalls being arriuen in their Frigats, diuers came ashore, no more English in Towne but the three mentioned. The Gouvernour vnderstood the occasion, and sent the Cutwall with a guard to our house, and shut the water ports, expelling the Portugalls, by commanding vpon paine of chastisement not to meddle with the English: and so deliuered them safe out of Towne, who are returned to Amadauas.

Card-play.

The ninth, I found the Prince earnest at Cards, but he excused himselfe of forgetfulnesse, and blamed the Officers formally; but in the wisedome of more courtesie then ordinary, calling me to see his Cards, and asking many questions. I expected he would speake of my going with him; but finding no such discourse, I told him I was come only to obey him, and to take my leaue, that I desired his pardon, that I hastened away, for that I was to returne to Adsmere, being vnprovidedly to stay all night. He answered, he sent for me to see me before his going, that I should presently be dispatched. Then he sent in an Eunuch, and diuers of his Captaines came smiling, saying the Prince would giue me a great Present, and if I feared to ride late, I should haue ten horse to guard me, and made such a businesse, as if I should haue receiued his best chaine of Pearle. By and by came a Cloath of gold Cloake of his owne, once or twice worne, which hee caused to be put on my backe, and I made reuerence very vnwillingly. When his Ancestor Tamerlane was represented at the Theater, the garment would well haue become: but it is heere reputed the highest fauour to giue a garment worne by a Prince, or being new, once laid on his shoulder.

Order to fire the Leskar at Adsmere.

The sixteenth, the King gaue order to fire all the Leskar at Adsmere, to compell the people to follow, which was daily executed. I was left almost desolate, and the Persian Embassador (who had fought, chid, brauld, complained, but could not get remedy) in the same estate, wee sent to bemone one another, and by his example I began to resolute to buy (for many would sell, which at the Kings price could not hire) and I cast it at the best hand I could, almost to saue the hire, though the carts were deare, for in three moneths the price was eaten; necessity inforced me, for the Towne was burnt and desolate. I was in danger of theues, that from the armie came and robbed in the night. I could not find bread to eate, yet I sent anew to Court, and resolved to abide all the inconueniences of a hard siege.

The

The seuenteenth, I receiued from Goa for truth, that Don Emannell de Menesses, with about three hundred of those saued ashore from out the Admirall, were arriued poore, robl and rifled by the Inhabitants of Angazesia, who had slaine many, and forced some to Circumcision. On the foure and twentieth of October, not one of the Fleet sent out from Lisbon arriued, to their great wonder. The Gallion of Mosambique was fought with by the Hollander that lately departed from Surat, who lay off and on before Goa as shee came in to meet the Ships expected; she was rich in Gold and other Commodities, but she escaped by meanes of the Port. Obserue the boldnesse of the Hollanders, to attempt with one ship, and to braue the head of the Indies. I receiued a promise for Camels to remoue.

The eighteenth, I could not procure carriages, but was so daily delaied, that I feared to stay. Two Carts I was inforced to buy, and Camels I was constantly promised. M. Biddolph remained in the Princes Leskar to get mony, the King was yet but twelue course from Adsmere. The Iesuite tooke his leaue of me, being forced to buy carriage, notwithstanding his order for it out of the Kings store, but scarcitie punished all men. This emptie time offering no discourse of my owne affaires, I shall digresse conueniently to mention the state of Sultan Corforoone, of whose new deliury into the hands of his enemies, euery mans heart and mouth was full. The King notwithstanding he had so farre agreed to satisfie his proud sonne at his departure, yet it seemed meant not to winke at an iniurie offered to the Elder, and partly to secure him in the hands of Asaph Chan, partly to satisfie the people that murmured, and feared the practise of some treachery against him, he tooke occasion to declare himselfe publicquely. Asaph Chan had visited his newe Prisoner, and in his fashion did not acknowledge him as his Prince, but rudely prest vpon him against his will, and with no reuerence. Some are of opinion, he pickt a quarrell, and knowing the braue nature of the Prince, that would not beare indignitie, tempted him to draw his Sword, or to vse some violence, which the guard should suddenly reuenge; or else it should bee declared to the King, as an attempt to kill his Keeper, and to escape: but the Prince was patienter; onely he got a friend to acquaint the King with the manners of his Iaylor. The King called Asaph Chan at the Durbar, and asked when he saw his charge; he answered two dayes past: his Maiestie replied, what did you with him? he sayes, onely visit him: but the King prest to knowe what reuerence and fashion he carried towards him? Asaph Chan found his Maiestie knew what had passed, and confessed he went to see him in affection, and offer his seruice; but that the Prince refused him admittance into his Chamber; which because he had charge of his safetie, hee thought it both necessary for him to doe, and discourtesie for the other to deny, therefore he prest in. The King returnes quicke, When you were in, what said you, and what did you? what duty shewed you toward my Sonne? He stands blancke, and confesseth he did not any reuerence: whereat the King told him, he would make his proud heart know him to bee his eldest and beloued Heire, his Prince and Lord, and if he once heare of any the least want of reuerence, or dutie toward him, he would command his sonne to set his feet on his necke, and trample on him: that he loued Sultan Coronne well, but he would make the world know, he did not intrust his Sonne among them for his ruine.

The three and twentieth, and foure and twentieth, I stayed for the Merchants, and receiued an answer from Spahan that my Letters were dispeeded for Aleppo, that our comming into Persia, was expected, but on conditions to fit the Shabas, so that it might aduance his designe of diuerting his Silkes from the way of Turkie: that the Generall of the Grand-signior lay with a mighty army at Argerone fixe dayes march short of Tauris, vncertaine, whether to assaile the Citie, or to enter Gorgeston and Gilan (the Countreys of Silks) to win that by conquest which he was prohibited by commerce. To meet both attempts, the Shabas was incamped at Salmas, a Village indifferently seated in the way; but if in two moneths the armies incounter not, winter approaching, and the wants which attend such multitudes, will dissolue them both, without any honourable action: or if they meete, the Persian though by report one hundred and eightie thousand, will not aduenture battell, but beeing light and able to march easily, without Cannon and Baggage, will fall on and off on euery side so on the Turkes armie, as he will breake, and waite him without hazard.

rable.

The seuenth, the King passed onely from one side of the Towne to the other, which was one of the best built I euer saw in India, for that there were some houses two stories high, and most such as a Pedler might not scorne to keepe shop in, all couered with tyle. It had beene the seat of a Raza Rashboote, before the Conquest of Echarsha, and stood at the foot of a great Rocke very strong, had many excellent workes of hewed stone about it, excellently cut, many Tankes arched, vaulted, and descents made large, and of great depths. By it stood a delicate Groue of two mile large, a quarter broad, planted by industry, with Manges, Tamerins, and other fruits, diuided with walkes, and full of little Temples and Altars of Pagods, and Gentilitiall Idolatry, many Fountaines, Wels, Tankes, and Summer-houses of carued stone curiously arched, so that I must confesse, a banished Englishman might haue been content to dwell there, but this obseruation is generall, that ruine and destruction eates vp all: for since the proprietie of all is come to the King, no man takes care for particulars; so that in euery place appeares the vastations and spoiles of warre, without reparation.

The ninth, returning, I viewed the Lescar, which is one of the wonders of my little experience, that I had seene it finished, and set vp in foure houres, except some of great men that haue a double prouision, the circuit being little lesse then twenty English miles, the length some waies three course, comprehending the skirts, and the middle, wherein the streets are orderly, and Tents ioyned; there are all sorts of shops, distinguished so by rule, that euery man knowes readily where to seeke his wants, euery man of qualitie, and euery trade being limited how farre from the Kings Tents he shall pitch, what ground he shall vse, and on what side without alteration, which as it lies together, may equall almost any Towne in Europe for greatnesse; onely a Musket shot euery way no man approacheth the Ataszkanka royall, which is now kept so strict, that none are admitted but by name, and the time of the Durbar in the Euening is omitted and spent in hunting or hawking on Tanks by Boat, in which the King takes wonderfull delight, and his Barges are remooued on Carts with him, and he sits not but on the side of one, which are many times a mile or two ouer. At the Iarruco in the morning he is seene, but businesse or speech prohibited: all is concluded at night at the Guzelchan, when often the time is preuented by a drow-sinesse which possesseth the King from the fumes of Bacchus. There is now a gre t whisper in Court, about a new affinitie of Sultan Corsoroone and Asaph Chan, and great hope of his libertie. I will finde occasion to discourse it, for that the passages are very worthy, and the wisdom and goodnesse of the King appeares, aboue the malice of others, and Noomabel fulfill the obseruation, that in all actions of consequence in Court, a woman is not onely alwaies an ingredient, but commonly a principall drug of most vertue, and she shewes that they are not incapable of conducting businesse, nor her selfe void of wit and subtiltie. It will discouer a Noble Prince, an excellent Wife, a faithfull Counsellour, a craftie Step-mother, an ambitious Sonne, a cunning Fauourite, all reconciled by a patient King, whose heart was not vnderstood by any of all these. But this will require a place alone, and not to be mingled among businesse.

Humilitie and Charitie superstitious, and therefore blind.

The sixteenth, I visited the King, who hauing been at his sports, and his quarry of fowle and fish lying before him, he desired me to take my choice, and so distributed the remainder to his Nobilitie. I found him sitting on his Throne, and a Begger at his feet, a poore silly old man all asht, ragd, and patcht, with a young roague attending on him. With these kind of professed poore holy men, the Countrey abounds, and are held in great reuerence, but for workes of chastisement of their bodies, and voluntary sufferings, they exceed the brags of all heretiques or Idolaters. This miserable wretch cloathed in rags, crowned with feathers, couered with ashes, his Maiestie talked with about an houre, with such familiaritie and shew of kindnesse, that it must needs argue an humilitie not found easily among Kings. The Begger fate, which his sonne dares not doe: he gaue the King a Present, a Cake, asht, burnt on the coales, made by himselfe of course graine, which the King accepted most willingly, and brake one bit and eate it, which a daintie mouth could scarce haue done. After he tooke the clout, and wrapt it vp, and put in the poore mans bosome, and sent for one hundred Rupias, and with his owne hands powred them into the poore mans lap, and what fell besides, gathered vp for him; when his collation of banquetting and drinke came, whatsoeuer he tooke to eate, he brake and gaue the Begger halfe, and after many strange humiliations and charities, rising, the old Wretch not being nimble, he tooke him vp in his armes, which no cleanly body durst haue touched, imbracing him, and three times laying his hand on his heart, calling him father, he left him, and all vs and me in admiration of such a vertue in a heathen Prince.

The sixe and twentieth, we passed through Woods, and ouer Mountaines, torne with bushes, tired with the incommodiousnesse of an impassible way, where many Camels perished, many departed for Agra, and all complained. I lost my Tents and Carts, but by midnight we met, the King,

King rested two dayes, for that the Leskar could not in lesse time recouer their order, many of the Kings women, and thousands of Coaches, Carts, and Camels, lying in the woody mountaines, without meat and water, himselfe got by on a small Elephant, which beast will climbe vp rockes and passe such straits, as no horse nor beast that I know can follow him.

The twenty fourth of Ianuary, newes arriued at Court, that the Decans would not be frightened out of their Dominion, which Asaph Chan and Normahal had pretended, to procure this Voyage, but that they had sent their impediments into the heart, and attended in the borders, with fifty thousand horse, resolved to fight, and that Sultan Caronne was yet aduanced no further then Mandoo, afraid both of the enemy and Chan Channa. These Counsellors changed their aduice, and declaring to the King that they conceiued the Decan, before his passage ouer the last hills, would haue yeelded by the terrour of his approach, but finding the contrary, perswaded him to conuert it to a hunting iourney, and to turne his face toward Agra, for that the other was not an enemy worthy his person. He replied this consideration came too late, his honour was engaged seeing he had so farre past, hee would prosecute their first counsells and his purpose, and aduenture the hazard of both. But hee daily dispeeded fresh troopes towards his sonne, partly from his owne, the rest commanded from governments, according to reports, thirty thousand horse, but not by muster.

Decans resist the Mogolls power. Mandoo.

The third of February, departing out of the Roade of the Leskar for ease and shade, and resting vnder a tree for the same commodities, came vpon me Sultan Corfuroone, the Kings eldest restrained sonne, riding vpon an Elephant, with no great guard nor attendance: his people desired me to giue him roome, which I did, but attended to see him, who called for mee, and with some gentle and familiar questions, full of courtesie and affabilitie hee departed: his person is good, and countenance chearefull, his beard growne to his girle; this only I noted, that his questions shewed ignorance of all passages in Court, in so much hee neuer heard of any Ambassadors nor English.

February 3.
Conference with Sultan Corfuroone.

The next at night, we came to a little Tower newly repaired, where the King pitched in a pleasant place vpon the Riuer of Sepra, short of Vgen, the chiefe City of Mulwa, one Course. This place called Calceda, was anciently a Seat of the Gentile Kings of Mandoo, one whereof was there drowned in his drinke, hauing once before fallen into the Riuer, and was taken vp by the haire of the head, by a slaue that diued; and being come to himselfe it was related to him to procure a reward: he called for the instrument of his safety, and demanding how he durst put his hands on his Soueraignes head, caused them to be stricke off. Not long after, sitting alone with his wife in drunkenesse, hee had the same mischance to slip into the water, but so that shee might easily haue saued him, which shee did not: and being demanded why, shee replied, shee knew not whether he would also cut off her hands for her recompence.

Sepra. Mulwa. Calceda. King drunken, drowned.

The eleuenth, the King rode to Vgen to speake with a Deruis or Saint, liuing on a hill, who is reported to be three hundred yeares old: I thought this miracle not worth my examination. At noone by a foot-post I receiued a letter, that the Prince, notwithstanding all Firmans and Commands of his Father, had intercepted the Presents and goods sent vp, to fulfill his base and greedie desire, and that notwithstanding any gift nor entreaty, or perswasions of Master Terry, to whose charge they were committed, would not part with them, but by force compelled them to returne with him toward Brampore: yet did he forbear to breake any thing open, but pressed the English to consent, which they refusing by my order, he thought to winne them by vexations; such is the custome to see all Merchants goods euen before the King, that he may first choose, but I resolved to breake that in our behalfe.

Old Deruis

Princes incivillitie.

The Prince to satisfie his desire, before I could haue knowledge, he sent a Post to the King to certifie him, that such goods he had slayed without mention of Presents, and prayed leaue to open them, and to buy what he fancied. So soone as I heard of this faithlesse vnciuill vsage, I resolved I was iustificable before all the world, if I vsed the extremitie of complaints, that I had practised all meanes to win and purchase fauour, and had suffered beyond the patience of a freeman, my former courses will witnesse, and leaue me without blame in ill successes, though I found it in a rougher way, seeing I could find no better in the smoothest. Briefely I resolved to appeale to Iustice by complaint, but as calmly and warily as I could, to expresse my whole griefe, extreme iniuries, and long patience. To go to Asaph Chan (though to neglect him would displease him) yet to trie him I feared would preuent my purpose: to send to him that I desired to visite the King at the Glutel-chand, I doubted what I intended might be suspected, if hee had heard of the iniury: so I practised first to preuent, and auoid preuention.

The Prophet, whom the King visited, offered me occasion, and my new Linguist was readie. I rode and met his Maiestie on his Elephant, and alighted making signe to speake: he turned his monster to mee, and preuented mee. My sonne hath taken your goods and my Presents: bee not sad, he shall not touch nor open a seale, nor locke; at night I will send him a command to free them, with other very gracious speeches, that he knew I came full of complaint, to ease mee he beganne first. Vpon the way I could doe no more, but at night, without further seeking to Asaph Chan, I went to the Guzel Chan, resolved to prosecute the complaint of forcing backe our goods,

goods, in respect of the charge and trouble, of the abuses of Surat, and all our other grievances. So soone as I came in, the King called my Interpreter, and deliuered by him, that he had written and sent his command very effectually, that not a haire should be diminished: I replied, the iniury was such, and the charge and abuses of our liberty by the Princes officers, that I desired redresse, for that we could not longer suffer. It was answered, what was past I must remit to his sonne, but by Asaph Chans mediation I could procure nothing but very good words, for he smoothed on both sides; so that I was forced to seeme content, and to seeke an opportunitie in the absence of my false friend and procurator. The good King fell to dispute of the Lawes of Moses, Iesus and Mahomet, and in drinke was so kind, that he turned to me, and said: I am a King, you shall be welcome Christians, *Moore*s, Jewes, he medled not with their faith; they came all 10 in loue, and he would protect them from wrong, they liued vnder his safety, and none should oppress them; and this often repeated, but in extreame drunkenesse he fell to weeping, and to diuers passions, and so kept vs till midnight.

Master Terry
welcomed.

Iudge all men what trauell I endured, by reason the Factors kept my Presents foure moneths; and sent them euen in the mouth of the Prince, arriued within two dayes of Brampore, and hereby euery way our charge doubled, that I rested not satisfied; but seeing I had begun, and that the Prince was, as I feared, enough exasperated with a little, I thought as good lose him to some purpose, as to none, at least to trie the King what hee would doe. So I waited aduantage, but sent backe the messenger to Master Terry, to stand out and attend the Kings answere, which I would speedily send him. And so resolved to dissemble that I hope to repay, when I came, with base 20 flattery worse then the theft, or at least to giue me some satisfaction, because trouble was in my face, for otherwise it is no iniury heere to bee so vsed: he beganne to tell me he had taken diuers things, that please him extreamely well, naming two Cushions embroydered, a folding Glasse, and the Dogges, and desired mee not to bee discontent, for whatsoeuer I would not giue him, I should receiue backe: I answered, there were few things that I intended not to present him; but that I tooke it a great discourtesie to my Soueraigne, which I could not answere, to haue that was freely giuen seized, and not deliuered by my hands to whom they were directed: and that some of them were intended for the Prince and Normahall, some to lye by me, on occasions, to prepare his Maiesties fauour to protect vs from iniuries that strangers were daily offered, and some for my friends or priuate vse, and some that were the Merchants, which I had not to doe withall: he 30 answered, that I should not be sad nor grieved, that hee had his choyce, for that hee had not patience to forbear seeing them, hee did mee no wrong in it, for hee thought I wished him first serued, and to my Lord the King of England hee would make satisfaction, and my excuse: the Prince, Normahall and he were all one; and for any to bring with me to procure his fauour, it was a ceremony, and vnnecessary, for he would at all times heare me; that I should be welcome empty handed, for that was not my fault, and I should receiue right from him; and to go to his sonne, he would returne me somewhat for him, and for the Merchants goods pay to their content: concluding I should not be angry for this freedome; he intended well: I made no reply. Then hee pressed me whether I was pleased or no. I answered his Maiesties content pleased me: so seeing Master Terry, whom I brought in with me, he called to him, Padre you are very welcome, and 40 this house is yours, esteeme it so, whensoeuer you desire to come to me, it shall bee free for you, and whatsoeuer you will require of mee, I will grant you.

Norable question about
a Satyre.

Then he conuerted himselfe with this cunning vnto me, naming all particulars in order: The Dogges, Cushions, Barbers case, you will not desire to haue backe, for that I am delighted in them: I answered no. Then said he there were two Glasse chestes, for they were very meane and ordinary, for whom came they? I replied, I intended one for his Maiestie, the other to Normahall. Why then, said hee, you will not aske that I haue, being contented with one? I was forced to yeeld. Next he demanded whose the Hats were, for that his women liked them. I answered, three were sent to his Maiesty, the fourth was mine to weare. Then said he, you will not take them from me, for I like them, and yours I will returne if you need it, and will not bestow that 50 on me, which I could not refuse. Then next he demanded whose the Pictures were. I answered, sent to me to vse on occasions, and dispose as my businesse required: so hee called for them, and caused them to be opened, examined me of the women, and other little questions, requiring many iudgements of them, of the third Picture of Venus and a Satyre: he commanded my Interpreter not to tell me what he said: But asked his Lords what they conceiued should be the interpretation or morall of that, he shewed the Satyres hornes, his skinne which was swart, and pointed to many particulars: euery man replied according to his fancie; but in the end hee concluded they were all deceived: and seeing they could iudge no better, hee would keepe his conceit to himselfe, iterating his command to conceale this passage from me: But bade him aske me what it meant: I answered, an Inuention of the Painter to shew his arte, which was Poeti- 60 call, but the interpretation was New to mee that had not seene it. Then he called Master Terry, to giue his iudgement, who replying, hee knew not. The King demanded why hee brought vp to him an inuention wherein hee was ignorant; at which I enterposed that he was a Preacher, and medled not with such matters, nor had charge of them, onely coming ming in their company, hee was more noted, and so named as their conductor.

This I repeate for instruction, to warne the company and him that shall succeed me to be very way what they send, may be subiect to ill Interpretation: for in that point this King and people are very pregnant and scrupulous, full of iealousie and trickes, for that notwithstanding the King conceited himselfe, yet by the passages I will deliuer my opinion of this conceit, which (knowing, I had neuer seene the Picture, and by Ignorance was guiltlesse) hee would not presse hard vpon me. But, I suppose, he vnderstood the Morall to be a scorne of Asiatiques whom the naked Satyre represented, and was of the same complexion and not vnlike; who being held by Venus a white woman by the Nose, it seemed that shee led him Captiue. Yet he reuealed no discontent, but rould them vp, and told me he would accept him also as a Present. For the Saddle and some other small Toyes, he would fit me with a gift to his Sonne, to whom he would write according to promise, so effectually that I should need no Solicitor, in many busineses with as many complements, excuses, professions & protestations as could come from any very Noble, or very base minde in either extreame. Yet he left not, but enquired what meant the figures of the beasts, and whether they were sent me to giue to him: I had vnderstood they were very ridiculous and ill shaped ordinary creatures, the varnish off, and no beauty other then a lumpe of wood; I was really ashamed and answered, it was not my fault, those that seized them must beare the affront, but that they were not intended to him, but sent to shew the formes of certaine beasts with vs. He replied quickly, did you thinke in England that a Horse and a Bull was strange to mee? I replied, I thought not of so meane a matter, The sender was an ordinary man in good will to mee for Toyes, and what he thought, I knew not: well said the King, I will keepe them, and onely desire you to helpe me to a horse of the greatest size. It is all I will expect, and a Male and Female of Mastiffes, and the tall Irish Grey-hounds, and such other Dogges as hunt in your lands, and if you will promise me this, I will giue you the word of a King, I will fully recompence you, and grant you all your desires.

The Kings requests.

I answered, I would promise to prouide them, but could not warrant their lines, and if they dyed by the way, onely for my discharge, their skinnies and bones should bee preserued, hee gaue extraordinary Bowes, layd his hand on his heart, and such kind of gestures as all men will witnesse, he neuer vsed to any man, nor such familiarity, nor freedom, nor profession of loue.

This was all my recompence, that he often desired my content to be merry, that the wrong he had done me, he would royally requite, and send me home to my Countrey with grace and reward like a Gentleman. But seeing nothing returned of what was seized, but words, I desired his Maiesty to deliuer backe the Veluets and Silkes being Merchants goods, that they were sent vp among mine by his Maiesties command, for that by that pretence, they escaped the rauine of the Princes Officers: so hee gaue order to call Master Biddolph to agree with him, and to pay for them to content. Then I deliuered a Letter I had ready written contayning my desire for Priuiledges and Iustice otherwise I should returne as a Fayzneane and disgraced to my Soueraigne, and desired some Iustice for Sulpherkarons Debt lately dead: he replied he would take such order with his Sonne for Surat, as I should haue no cause to complaine, and that he should cleere it for which he gaue instant order. For other places, he would giue me his commands, and euery way shew how much he loued me, and to the end I might returne to my Master with honour, Hee would send by me a rich and worthy Present with his Letter of my behauiour filled with many prayses, and commanded me to name what I thought would be most acceptable, I answered, I durst not craue, it was not our custome, nor stood with my Masters honour, but whatsoever he sent, I doubted not, would be acceptable from so potent a King, and so much loued of my Lord. He replied, that I thought he asked in iest, to please mee, and that he saw I was yet discontent, but he coniured me to beleue he was my friend, and would at conclusion proue so, and vowed by his head hee spake heartily concerning Presents, but I must not refuse for his instruction to name somewhat. This earnestnesse enforced mee to say, if his Maiesty pleased, I thought large

Persian Carpets, would be fittest; for gifts of cost and value, my Master expected not.

He answered, he would prouide of all sorts and sizes, and added to them what hee thought was fit, that your King may know I respect him: next, hauing Venison of diuers sorts before him, he gaue me halfe a Stagge, with these words, hee killed it himselfe, and the other halfe I should see bestowed on his wiues, which was presently cut out, in small pieces of foure pound and sent in by his third sonne, and two women that were called out to diuers such Mammockes, as if it had beene a dole to the poore, and carryed by the Prince bare in his hands. Now I had as much satisfaction, and so abundant grace as might haue flattered me into content, but the iniury was aboue words, though I were glad of these and of colour to dissemble, for hee sent as a conclusion to know if I were pleased, and did not depart discontent. I answered his Maiesties fauour was sufficient to make mee any amends. Then, said he, I haue onely one question to aske you; which is, I wonder much now I haue seene your Presents two yeares, what was the reason why your King sent a Merchant, a meane man before you with fve times as many, and more curious Toyes that contented all, and after to send you his Ambassadour with a Commillion and his Letter mentioning Presents, and yet what you brought was little, meane and inferiour to the other.

I acknowledge you an Ambassadour, I haue found you a Gentleman in your vsage, and I am amazed why you were so slightly set out.

I would haue replied, but he cut me off, I know it is not the Kings fault, nor yours, but I will let you see I esteeme you better then they employed you. At your returne, I will send you home with honour, with reward, and according to your qualitie; and not respecting what you brought me, will like a King present your Lord and Master: onely this I will require from you, and not expect it from the Merchants, to take with you a patterne of a Quiuer, and Case for my Bow, a Coat to weare, a Cushion to sleepe on of my fashion, which was at his head, and a paire of Boots, which you shall cause to bee embroydered in England, of the richest manner, and I will expect and receiue them from you, for I know in your Countrey they can worke better then any I haue seene, and if you send them mee, I am a King, you shall not lose by it, which I most thankfully vndertooke, and he commanded Asaph Chan to send me the patternes. Then he demanded if I had any Grape Wine. I could not denie it; he desired a taste next night, and if hee liked it he would be bold, if not, he desired me to make merrie with it. So spending this night onely on me, he rose.

The third of March, wee came to Mandon, into which the King entred in state, but no man was suffered to goe in before hee was set, by the aduice of his Astrologers, so that wee all sate without, attending a good houre.

The sixth, I came into Mandon, hauing sent before, and found a faire Court well walled, and in that a good Church, one great Tombe: it was taken vp by one of the Kings Seruants, but I got possession and kept it, being the best within all the wall, but two mile from the Kings house, yet so sufficient that a little charge would make it defensible against raines, and saue one thousand Rupias, and for Aire very pleasant vpon the edge of the hill.

Ill profore-
cast.

The eleuenth, at night I went toward the Court, but the King vpon newes of a Lion that had killed some Horses, was gone to hunt, so that I had leisure to seeke some water: for we were brought to a hill with a multitude of people (so great is the foresight, and so good the Policie) where was no water, that men and Cattle were like to perish, that little that was in Pooles some great men possessed, and kept by force, I could get none, the poore forsooke the Citie, and by Proclamation many were commanded away, all Horses and Cattel forbid, and so those who were now in hope to rest, were forced to seeke new Dwellings, who departed some two, three and foure Course off, to the extreame trouble of all men, and the terrible rising of prouisions. I knew not what to doe: my Roome and House was good, and though I were farre from Markets, yet it was a lesse inconuenience then to sit in the fields without house or shelter, onely I wanted water, so I rode my selfe to seeke some, and found a great Poole possessed by Chan, which was giuen by the King. I sent to desire him leaue to draw, who granted me foure load a day, which satisfied me in such sort, that with selling away some of those Iades that were put vpon me from Swat, and putting off my Cattell, I had hope to liue, to which purpose I sent two with them to lye out of Towne. There was not a misery, nor punishment, which either the want of Gouvernment, or the naturall disposition of the Clime gaue vs not.

¶ VIII

The New-yeares Feast: Suspitions of the English: Trade of Dabul, distaste of the Persian, English-men of Warre in the Indian Seas.

THe twelfth, I went to the King, and carried a New-yeares gift, a paire of very faire Kniues of my owne, and sixe Glasses of yours; the excuse I made was well receiued, and the King vsed mee with all grace, this onely was my comfort. He said whatsoever came from my hands was present sufficient, he accepted my loue, and it was his part now to giue me. I found a gainer by him, who had so farre performed his promise that I perceiued the King instructed in my desire, and gaue present order to an Officer to send for Master Bidolph to pay him to his content for such things as he claymed, and all the others were acknowledged to be receiued by name, and that when I went to the Prince, the King would write; but was loth to part with any thing, of which the best sweet bagge lay before him. I replied, I was as loth to goe empty handed: so it rested, the King commanded I should come vp and stand within, on the degrees of his Throne by him, where I found on one side the Persian Ambassadour, on the other the old King Candabar with whom I ranked, and he presently fell to begge a Knife which next day I sent. The King called for the Persian to come downe, to whom he gaue a Jewell, and a young Elephant, for which he kneeled and saluted the ground with his head. The Throne was the same vsed the last yeare, and all the other furniture: at the vpper end was set the King my Soueraignes Picture, the Queenes, my Lady Elizabeths, Sir Thomas Smiths and some others,

English Pi-

others, two pieces of good and fine Tapistrie below them, that came from Persia, a Throne of Gold set all ouer with Rubies, Emeralds and Turqueis, and the old Musicke of singing Whores. This day I dispatched to Surat my aduice of the Persian businesse and the new Ambassadour, and some remembrance to Abram Chan the Gouvernour from whom I receiued a Letter, that in his absence our Nation had beene wronged against his knowledge, but that his power being augmented by the Prince, he desired me to be confident in him, that while he liued in authoritie we should neuer suffer any such abuses, but we should liue in all freedome.

The thirteenth, I sent a Complement to Asaph Chan, a faire wrought Night-cap of mine owne, and a rich paire of Gloues which he returned as vfelesse in this Countrey; the Cap he receiued and desired some Alegant Wine, which I sent the next day at night. Aganor (whose diligence now gaue me great hope and ease) sent a Bannian his Secretary to tell mee hee had order for the dispatch of the Merchants goods, and that his man should attend Master Biddolph to finish it, that the patternes should be sent me home, and that the King would giue me a Coat and money to beare my charges to the Prince. I returned answere, that I had no vse of a Babylonish Garment, nor needed money; if his Maiestie were pleased to consider the iniuries offered, of which the Paper testified remayned in his hands, and to giue me his Letter to the Prince with some Presents or else to write in my excuse. it was all I would desire, but for his gifts I expected none but Iustice.

The one and twentieth: I yet could not at instant presse it further, only I discovered the Kings doubts, for he suspected my stealing out of his Countrey, and breach with our Nation for the Prince, either out of guiltinesse or feare, or perhaps cunning to make vs the pretence of his owne designs, had newly enformed the King, that next yeare, the English purposed the taking of Surat, and keeping it, of which our owne folly gaue some colour; for lately vpon one of their ordinary brabbles they caused two hundred Musketers to land and march toward Surat, and being met by diuers the ioyfull Mariners gaue out, they went to take it. This absurde brauado for a handful of men to passe twelue mile to a walled Towne, able to put out a thousand horse armed, and as many shot, a Riuer to passe which a few men would defend against a good Armie, gaue iust occasion of scorne and offence: and which the Prince apprehended for some other his owne ends, to refortifie the Castle and Towne, and to send downe Ordnance for the defence: a good prouision to keepe a doore open to flie out, if his Brother liue to correct his ambition. But this information occurring with my discontentes heere, and some free language, my pressure to goe to Bramptore, and flying newes that we had taken Goa, and were preparing a great Fleet in England, did cause some suspition in the King, which though he concealed it, yet hee thought to discover by the former Discourse, with which hee rested fully satisfied, but I did not: I had beene long fed with words, and knew as well as the heart that trembled, that feare of vs only preserved our residence.

The nine and twentieth of March: this complaining of Officers is a tune so new, so odious in Court, that it troubleth all great men, it beeing their owne case, who liuing vpon farming Governments in which they vse all tyrannie to the Naturals, are loth to suffer a way open to the Kings vnderstanding of their practice, who ordinarily hang men by the heeles, to confesse money, or to ransom themselves from no fault: this made all men enuie my imployment, and auoid me as an Informer.

A. D. 1617.
Tyranny of Officers.

The five and twentieth of April, I receiued from Dabull road from Cap. Pepwell, that according to aduise he had stayed the Iuncke bound for Mocha, but weighing the caution giuen by mee to consider well what correspondence were betweene that Prince and Mozolapatan, in whose Territorie the Solomon was and could not get to Sea, finding both alliance and friendship, he freed her without spoile, alleging the refusall of Trade to Middleton, which courtesie procured him, so good entertainment as the Indies affords seldome, free Trade and promise to take three hundred Clothes yearly: a good quantitie of Lead sold for money, and some Ordnance (which I like not to arme the Indians, and the Portugals friends, enemies to the Mogoll) and all other courtesies, which if this kindnesse proceeded not, for that the Iuncke was yet vnder command, giues me good hope of some Trade in sale yearly at the Port, howeuer the freeing of the Iuncke assures me the Commander will doe nothing by catching, preiudiciall to the Company, and deliuer himselfe honestly from the iealousies cast vpon him from Dabul, hee signifies his intent to proceed to Callicute, and if that Factorie be not worth supplies to transmit it to Dabul.

Letter from Capitaine Pepwell at Dabulla

The seven and twentieth, by the Foot-post I receiued from Mozolapatan, that the Salomon was got to Sea, and the Hoslander from Bantam arriued, who brought the ill newes of the losse of the Heitor and Concord, careening in the Roade of Iacatra, on Iana, in recompence that the Dragon, Cloue and Defence, were homeward laden from Bantam. I tooke this occasion to conuey a letter to the Gouvernour of Dabul ouer-land, to appretend the ouerture newly made by him of the trade: though I had little opinion of the place, yet I would not neglect that, nor encourage the next Fleet to proceed, but vpon better assurance then a forced friendship, and offers made while their Iuncke was in our power. The effect was to signifie the causes of our staying their goods for refusing trade to Sir Henry Middleton, but now finding in him a better inclination and a desire to receiue vs, & to establish a friendship and league, a promise to take cloth in good quantitie. I required if these motions were hearty, and such as befit a man of honour, that he would write to the King his Master, to procure his Firman with such priuiledges as were fit for Merchants, and his promise to buy our goods, and to fulfill all the friendly offers made by him, his Officer, vnder his Seale, and with expedition to send it mee to the Court of the great Mogoll: whereby I might receiue assurance and encouragement that they intended faith, and on such reception I did vndertake on the behalfe of the King of England, a good and firme Peace toward his Master, his subiects free passage in the seas, from any oppression by our Fleets: and that yearly I would either send a ship to his Port for trade, or if it so required, leaue & establish a residence in his Gouernment. I doubt not, but yearly for feare or loue, some good trade by sales may be made, but for enuestments, it will not be worth it: only I proceeded as I would haue wished all men, not with too seeming eager a desire, nor to swallow any offers and conditions hungerly, for strict care in the first setting is the best aduantage: and for misery of ensuing times, it being a generall rule neuer to mend your first estate, often to empaire it, euery mans best houre is when he is new, a stranger, and at first seene: after, the naturall lenitie of these Barbarians, finds all that brings not change, fastidious. This dispatch I committed to Master Bangham, and desired him to make diligent enquiry of the commodities, aduantages, inconueniences, humours and affections of these Decannies towards vs.

Dislike of the
bassador.

The thirtieth, the time that he brought me the excuses of the Persian Ambassador, for failing in taking his leaue of me, which he would not send by a seruant, but vttered the truth that the Ambassador was not sicke, as he pretended, but receiuing no content from the King in his business he suddenly tooke leaue, and hauing giuen thirty faire horses at his departure: the King gaue in recompence three thousand Rupias which he tooke in great scorne; whereupon the King prized all that the Ambassador had giuen him at meane rates, and likewise all that the King had returned since his arriual, euen to slaues, Drinke, Mellons, Pines, Plantanes, Hawkes, Plumes, the Eliphant and whatsoeuer at extreme high rates, and sending both Bills made it vp in money. This base vsage and scorne caused him to excuse his not seeing Asaph Chan and Estimon Dowlet on a Feuer, which hauing done hee could not come through the Towne to mee without discouerie, but desired him to acquaint me with the truth, and to make all excuse and profession that hee would recompence this discourtesie by double friendship to my Countermen in Persia: with some bitterness against the King, which Aganor as freely deliuered, and I seemed as vnwilling to heare. I presented them with some Aligant and Kniues, and we parted.

The twelfth of May, I receiued newes of a great blow giuen the Persian by the Turkes Army, so that Tanris was rased, and the Shabas not able to keepe the field.

The five and twentieth, a Lion and a Wolfe vsed my house, and nightly put vs in alarum, fetching away Sheepe and Goats out of my Court, and leaping a high wall with them. I sent to aske leaue to kill it, for that no man may meddle with Lions but the King, and it was granted: I ranne out into the Court vpon the noyse, and the beast missing his prey, seized on a little Island Dogge before me, that I had long kept, but the Wolfe one of my Seruants killed, and I sent it the King.

The fourteenth of Iune, certaine goods of the Iesuites were sent from Cambaya in a Cabinet, Phisicke and necessaries, and a Letter, which were betrayed by the bringer, and deliuered the King: which he opened and sent for the Padre to reade the Letter, and to see all in the Boxes, of which nothing liking him, he returned all; which I obserue as a warning to all that deale in this Kingdome, to be wary of what they write or send, for such is the custome and humour of the King, that he will seize and see all, lest any Toy should escape his appetite.

The eighteenth, I receiued Letters from Amadaur of the Hope of the fall of Indico, by the failing of the Goa Cassila, and that there was plentie to be bought but deare. That the Vnicornes Horne was returned as without vertue, concerning which I gaue him new aduice; many complaints against Surat and others, which I meddle not with. I receiued from Brampoore two Letters, how doubtfull the Debt of Ralph stood, and newes of the returne of Spragge from the Left kar of Decan. The Generall Meliskamber with much shew of honour, gaue instant order for priue search in all his Campe, for the Persian fled, and by me remanded; but finding him departed to Vizeapoores, by testimony that business was pursued no further, but by a Letter to a Dutch there resident. The Generall desired Spragge to be a meanes to bring him English cloth and swords to his Campe for the supply of his Souldiers which lye within sixe dayes of Brampoore. In my opinion, that had bene a good employment of some idle men, and a way to vent our dead commodities.

The thirtieth of Iuly, I receiued from Surat, of the casting away of two Dutch ships on the Coast of Damon, that hauing come from the Southward with Spices and China Silkes, were bound for the Red Sea, but losing their season with much extremitie of weather beating many weekes about the entrance for harbour, attempted the like at Socatra, and vpon the Coast of Arabia, but being not able to get in any way, they resolued for Surat, hoping by the last yeares good successe to be able to ride safely: but the yeares differ, and being forced to anchor in extre-

mitie their greater ship cut her Masts by boord, and after her Cables breaking, shee went ashore vpon the Coast Ozie ground within Musket shot. The ship kept vpright, but hauing lost their long Boat, and their Skiffe not able to liue by rafters, foure men got alhoare, and the Tydes heauing her in vpon the Spring, they saued much goods and all their people: her Pinnasse of sixtie Tunne was beaten to pieces.

The one and twentieth of August, the King of Candahor, came to visit me, and brought wine and fruit, sate halfe an houre, and for one Iest of his begged a bottle of wine.

The Prince Sultan Corferoone had his first day of hoped libertie, and came to take ayre and pleasure at the Banquetting house by me. The Prince at Brampoore had made a Marriage without the Kings consent, and gotten displeasure: besides some practice of his was discovered against his Brothers life; but this as a secret; he was called for to Court. Normahal and Asaph Chan by their Fathers aduice, came about to make a peace with Corferoone and Alliance, and with infinite ioy his libertie is expected.

The two and twentieth, the King feasted at Asaph Chans. I receiued from Aleppo and Persia, passages of the Warre, the Turkes retrait; but no word of our English: only, that the Captaine of Grinins, had written to practise their disgrace.

The five and twentieth, I aduised to Agra my proceeding in the Armenians businesse backe to Surat, and Brampoore of all occurrents. This day Asaph Chan feasted Normahal, the Prince Sultan Corferoone, as is reported, to make a firme alliance, and that he will bring away a Wife by his Fathers importunitie, this will beget his full libertie, and our proud Masters ruine.

The first of September, was the Kings Birth-day, and the solemnitie of his weighing, to which I went, and was carryed into a very large and beautifull Garden, the square within all water, on the sides flowres and trees, in the midst a Pinacle, where was prepared the scales, being hung in large tressels, and a crosse beame plated on with Gold thinne: the scales of massie Gold, the borders set with small stones, Rubies and Turkey, the Chaines of Gold large and massie, but strengthened with silke Cords. Here attended the Nobilitie all sitting about it on Carpets vntill the King came; who at last appeared clothed, or rather loden with Diamonds, Rubies, Pearles, and other precious vanities, so great, so glorious! his Sword, Target, Throne to rest on correspondent; his head, necke, breast, armes, aboue the elbowes at the wrists, his fingers euery one, with at least two or three Rings; fettered with chaines, or dyalled Diamonds; Rubies as great as Wal-nuts, some greater; and Pearles, such as mine eyes were amazed at. Suddenly hee entered into the scales, sate like a woman on his legges, and there was put in against him, many bagges to fit his weight which were changed fixe times, and they say was siluer, and that I vnderstood his weight to be nine thousand Rupias, which are almost one thousand pound sterling: after with Gold and Jewels, and precious stones, but I saw none, it beeing in bagges might bee Pibles; then against Cloth of Gold, Silke, Stuffles, Linnen, Spices, and all sorts of goods, but I must beleuee, for they were in fardles. Lastly, against Meale, Butter, Corne, which is said to be giuen to the Banians, and all the rest of the Stuffle: but I saw it carefully carryed in, and none distributed. Onely the siluer is reserued for the poore, and serues the ensuing yeare, the King vsing in the night to call for some before him, and with his owne hands in great familiaritie and humilitie to distribute that money. The scale he sate in by one side, he gazed on me, and turned me his stones and wealth, and smiled, but spake nothing, for my Enterpreter could not be admitted in. After he was weighed, he ascended his Throne, and had Basons of Nuts, Almonds, Fruits, Spices, of all sort made in thinne siluer, which he cast about, and his great men scrambled prostrate vpon their bellies, which seeing I did not, hee reached one Bason almost full, and powred into my Cloke, his Noblemen were so bold as to put in their hands, so thicke, that they had left me none, if I had not put a remayner vp. I heard he threw Gold till I came in, but found it siluer so thinne, that all I had at first being thousands of seuerall pieces had not weighed sixtie Rupias. I saued about twentie Rupias weight, yet a good dishfull, which I keepe to shew the ostentation, for by my proportion he could not that day cast away aboue one hundred pound sterling. At night he drinketh with all his Nobilitie in rich Plate. I was inuited to that, but told, I must not refuse to drinke, and their waters are fire. I was sicke and in a little fluxe of bloud, and durst not stay to venture my health.

The Kings weighing.

The ninth of September, the King rode to the Riuer of Darbadath, fue course on pleasure, and comming by my house I rode out to meete him. The custome is, that all men by whom hee passeth neere their gate, make him some Present, which is taken as a good signe, and is called Mombareck, good Newes, or good Successe. I had nothing to giue, nor might fitly goe with nothing, nor stay at home without discourtesie, which made mee venture vpon a faire Booke well bound filleted and gilt, Mercators last Edition of the Maps of the world, which I presented with an excuse that I had nothing worthy, but to a great King I offered the World in which he had so great and rich a part. The King tooke it in great courtesie, often laying his hand on his breast, and answering euery thing that came from mee was welcome. Hee asked after the ships arriual, which I told him I daily expected: hee told me hee had some fat wild Hogges sent him from Goa, and if I would eate any at his returne he would send me some. I made him due reuerence, and answered

swered any thing from his Maieftie was a feaft to me : he rode on his Eliphant, and the way was ftonie, and I offering to bring him toward the gate, hee bade God keepe mee, and returne to my houfe, demanding which it was, and praying it : indeed it was one of the beft in the Laskar, yet but an old Church and large Tombe inclofed : iterating his fare-well, he faid the way was ill, and defired me to goe home, and with much shew of courtesie tooke leaue.

Prince of Candabor vnciuillie.

The fixteenth, I rode to repay the visit of Marre Rustam the Prince of Candabor, who at my arriual sent word he durst not fee mee, except hee asked leaue of the King or acquainted Etimon Dowlet or Asaph Chan, which at the Darbar he would. I answered he should not need, for I neuer meant to trouble my selfe with a man so vnciuill, nor to come a second time. I knew well it was a shift out of ill manners ; that the King would bee no more angry for his bidding mee wel- 10 come to his houfe, then for his comming to mine, but that I cared not to see him, but came in ciuilitie to requite, that I took so in him. His man desired me to stay vntill he told his Master my answer, but I would not, and returned : at night, I rode to Court to visit the King, who questioned about the Booke of Maps, but I did forbear any speech of my debts.

The five and twentieth, I rode to the Court very weake, to make triall of the King about our debts, for that Muckshud had also newly answered he had mist his Prigany, and knew not how to pay, but by his house. I deliuered the King the Merchants Petition, which hee caused to bee read aloud, and the names of the debtors, and sureties, and summes distinctly, by Asaph Chan : which done, he called Araddat Chan, the chiefe of his officers of Household, and the Curwall, and gaue them order, but what I vnderstood not ; reading the names, hee questioned their abilities 20 and qualities, and what goods they receiued; finding some dead, some strangers : concerning Rulph, Asaph Chan offered to speake to the Prince at his arriual to finish it. My Interpreter was now called in, and the King conuerted to mee, giuing this answer : That the Merchants had made debts at their owne wills, and not brought a note of their goods to him, therefore if the men were insufficient, it was at their perill, for that it was no reason to expect the money from him, which, I suppose, he spake of his seruant Hergonen, who being dead, his goods were seized for the Kings vse : but seeing it was the first time, he would now assist me, and cause our money to be payed : but if hereafter the English would deliuer their goods to his seruants without mo- 30 ney or acquainting him, they should stand to the hazard; but if when their commodities came to the Court, they would bring a bill to him of all, he would first serue himselfe, and after distribute the rest to such as should buy that, and if any of them failed, he would pay the money himselfe : this is indeed the custome of Persia Merchants, to bring all to the King, which I haue often seene, who takes his choice, and deliuers the rest to his Nobilitie, his Scriuanes writing to whom, and his Officer cutting price; a copy of which is giuen the Merchant, and hee goes to their houses for money; if they pay not, there is an expresse Officer that hath order by currant course to force them. Then was it told my Interpreter what command the King had giuen, that Arad Chan should call the debtors before him, and cause them to pay : but this pleased not our Merchants, I thought it both a iust and gracious answer, better then in such cases priuate men can get of great Princes.

Mercator returned.

The King hearing I had been sicke, and wished for wine, gaue me five bottles, and commanded when I had ended those, to send for five more, and so as I wanted; and a fat Hogge, the fattest 40 I euer saw, sent vp by Mochreb Chan, that came from Goa, which at midnight was brought home by a Haddy with this message; since it came to the King it had eaten nothing but Sugar and Butter. I tooke this as a signe of fauour, and I am sure in that Court it is a great one. Then he sent for the Map-booke, and told me he had shewed it his Mulaies, and no man could reade nor vnderstand it, therefore if I would, I should haue it againe : I answered, at his pleasure, and so it was returned.

A Raia withstood the Kings forces.

The fixe and twentieth, there being a Raia in rebellion in the hills, not past twentie Course from the Laskar, the King lately sent out two Vmbras with horse to fetch him in, but he defended his quarter, slew one of them, and twelue Maancipdares, and in all of both sides about five 50 hundred, returning scornfull messages to the King to send his sonne, for he was no prey for ordi- nary forces.

October 2.

The second of October, the Prince entered the Towne, and all the great men in wondrous triumph : the King receiued him, as if he had no other, contrary to our expectation. Brampore left almost emptie vnder Chan Channa. I had sent to Asaph Chan, to excuse my not meeting him, for I was not able to stirre, nor had no Present. All the great men, and the Kings Mother, receiued him foure Course off. I sent also some of my seruants with my iust excuse, which his pride only nodded at.

English shippes taken by the English : which might else haue endangered their country-men.

The fifth, I receiued from Surat newes of our shippes arriual, the Admirall missing, and her Prize of Mosambique; the rest well, who had taken two English Rouers, set out by ( ) 60 who were found in chase of the Queene Mothers ship returned from the Red-sea, which they fortunately rescued and brought safe in; if shee had bin taken, we had all bin in trouble : with these the Companies Letter, in voice, instructions for Persia, and diuers other notes of aduise, that by reason of the Admiralls absence : they knew not what course to take with the men of Warre. I dispeeded dispeeded to Surat orders about all businesse, as appears in my Letters.

The sixt, I rode to visite the Prince, at his vsuall houre, to giue him welcome, and to acquaint him with our businesse, determining to make offer of all respect to him, and to that end not to come emptie handed, and bought a fine Chaine of gold, China worke: I sent in word; he returned that I should come next morning at Sunne rise, when he fate to be worshipped; or stay till his riding to Court; which I must haue done at his doore. This I tooke in extreame soone; his Father neuer denying me accesse; and his Pride is such, as may teach Lucifer: which made me answer roundly, I was not his Slaue, but a free Ambassadour of a King, and that I would neuer more visite him, nor attend him, hee had refused me Iustice; but at night I would see him with the King, to whom only I would addresse my selfe, and so departed.

The Princes
pride.

At night I went to the King, who receiued me graciously. I made a reuerence to the Prince, but he would not once stirre his head. Then I acquainted the King, that according to his order, I had brought an abstract of our ladings, desiring his command: after his manner he asked what and what, and was so wonderfully satisfied, especially with Arras, that he promised mee all fauour, all priuiledges, all that I would desire. He enquired for Dogges, which I could not answer, and for Jewels, which I told him they were dearer in England then in India, at which hee rested satisfied. I durst not name the Pearles for many reasons; if I had, our people had bene way-haid for by the Prince, and such snatching, as I could not auoyd infinite trouble; I knew I could bring them ashore, and to Court by stealth, that the lesser expected, the better welcome; but my maine reason was, I would make a friend by them. Therefore when Asaph Chan pressed me to know, I desired him to make that answer of dearenesse, and that I would speake with him alone; he soone vnderstood me, and made excuse.

The King being well pleased, I thought it good time to moue againe for the debts; and ha- uing my Petition ready, opened it, and offered it vp: the King not marking, others discouered what it was, and knew the King would bee enraged that his order was neglected: whereat one stept to me, and clapt downe my hand gently, desiring me not to doe so. I answered, Asaph Chan had absolutely refused me Iustice: at which he being by, came in, in much feare, calling Asaph Chan, desiring him to hinder me from complaint. I answered, our ships were arriued, and we could not forbear nor endure such delays: so they consulted together, and called the Cutwall, giuing order to execute the Kings command: who that night at midnight beset their Tents, and caught some of them, so that now we shall haue reason.

I had great thanks of all the Vmreies for protecting the Queenes ship, and our courtesie to their passengers, which they enformed the King, who tooke it kindly, and they all promised that they were obliged to loue our Nation, and would doe them all seruice: but they wondered we could not gouerne our people, but that theues could come out, without the Kings leaue.

At the Kings rising, Asaph Chan carryed me with him to his retyring place, and there first we translated the Abstract into Persian, to shew the King an houre after: in which I inserted the money with some addition, because the King might perceiue was brought profit to his Dominions; next the cloath and forts, then the fine wares in generall: lastly the grosse commodities, desiring his Maiestie to order what he would buy, and to giue vs liberty for the rest. This finished, Asaph Chan renewed the reason why I would speake alone, bad me be free, vowed and protested such friendship as I neuer could expect. I replied, The reason why I desired it, was to aske his counsell: for it was true I had somewhat, but my vsage last yeare was so bad, that I durst not trust any, but that he might see how I replied on him, I was willing on his oath to reueale it, which he presently gaue. I told him I had a rich Pearle, and some other ropes faire: I knew not whether it was fit to tell the King, lest the Prince were displeased; I told him how in the morning I had been to visite him, and his discourtesie, and my resolution: but that I knew his fauour was so necessary for vs, that I hoped I might recouer it, by this one respect that I kept the Pearle for him. This I said was my purpose and reason I concealed it; he was father in law to him, and fauorite of the King; I was ready to please both, and desired his aduice. He embraced me, and began: I had done discreetly, but I should acquaint neither: if I did, I should neuer want trouble: the King would vse me well, but keepe such a stirre to see it, and get it into his hand, according to custome, and then I must sue for mine owne. The Prince was rauinous and tyrannicall, and wearied all Nations. He bade mee steale all ashore, trust none, and shewed mee many conueyances; bade me obserue the vsage of the Portugalls, how they were ransacked, and desired to buy it, which if I would grant it, I should haue money in deposito, what I should aske, and he would for this trust of him, sollicite all my desires, that without him I could doe nothing. Now was an oportunitie to make a friend. I answered, I was willing, but I feared hee would reueale it; which hauing receiued his oath, and a ceremony of couenant by crossing thumbe, we embraced: I promised to be directed by him, and he to doe all that I required for the coming vp of the rest; he would take order to giue me Firmans, no man should touch any thing, but all come to me, to dispose of at pleasure. The Prince he would reconcile to me, and the next time he visited him, he would take me, and make him vse me with all grace, and for other businesse it should not be in his power to crosse me; but if he did, he would assigne vs a Syndic, which was in his government, gouernment, or procure any other Port at my desire, and whatsoever I demanded should be performed faithfully. He also aduised me to giue his sister Normahal some toy, he said he would make the King giue me money: to which I answered, I desire you to conuert it into the well vñage of my countrey-men, I asked no more.

Thus we rose, and he carryed me in to the King, with the Note translated, who gaue mee all good vñage; asked if the Arras were a Present: I answered yes, lest it should be seized, for the Prince was by. In conclusion, hee said hee would buy all the parcell of cloath, and many other things, appointing me to send for it speedily; Asaph Chan to take order for a Firman from the Prince.

Thus I had a good night, and I knew though they are all ( ) yet in this he would deale truly, because it was to helpe himselfe, and durst not betray me till he had the Pearle, for feare to misse it, nor after, for hauing himselfe betrayed the Prince. 10

ASAPH CHAN seeketh to further vs for hope of gaine, so also NORMAHAL: Master STEELES arrivall: Danger to the publike, by private trade: Stirres about a Fort. 20

Asaph Chan
friendship for hope of gaine.

He twelfth, according to promise, Asaph Chan carryed mee to the Prince, into his private roome, where I presented him with a small China Gold-chaine, in a China Cup, he vsed me indifferently: Asaph Chan periwaded him to alter his course towards vs, telling him hee gained yearly by vs a Lecke of Rupias at his Port: that it appeared we yearly encreased our trade, and it would in time bring profit; that if the hard measure were continued, we would quit both that and the Countrey, of which inconuenience would ensue. That we were his Subjects (such words he must vse) if for desire of toyes he gaue vs discontent, we would practise to conceale all from him; but if hee gaue vs that libertie which was fit, wee would strue to bring all before him, for that I only studied his content and fauour for my particular; that he should receiue mee, when I came, to visite him with honour, and according to my qualitie, it would encourage mee to doe him seruice, and content my Nation. Finally, hee moued him for a Firman for our present ease, and obtained it, promising all manner of content, and at instant gaue order to Asaph Chan his Secretary, to draw it in euery point according to my owne desires, and to write a Letter to the Gouvernour in recommendations of it: and that I should at all times haue any other Letter, when I called for it. It is easily seene with how base and vnworthy men I traffique. Asaph Chan for a sordid hope only of buying some toyes, was so reconciled, as to betray his sonne, and to me obsequious, euen to flattery: for the ground of all this friendship was, that he might buy the Gold taken in the prize, and some other knackes: to which end he desired to send downe a seruant, which I could not deny without losing him, I had so long laboured to get: neither was it ill for vs, for his payment is good, and it will saue vs much charge and trouble to sell aboard, especially wine and luggish that spoiles in cariage; and he obtained leaue vnder false colours, and wrote to the Gouvernour in our behalfe, with all manner of kindnesse. There is a necessitie of his friendship, his word is law, and therefore I durst not see his vnworthinesse, and hope by this course to winne him, at least to make present good vse of him. Vpon this occasion I moued for a Firman for Bengala, which he promised, and would neuer before hearken to: and this effect of his greatnesse I found, that hee prosecuted our debtors, as if his owne: and passing by the Cutwa on his Elephant, called to command dispatch, which was an vnusall fauour; vpon which Groo was imprisoned, and Muckshu had two dayes libertie only to pay vs; and I doubt not, but to end that in ten dayes, the summe being foure and forty thousand Rupias, and the debtors most shifting false knaues in India. 30 40 50

The one and twentieth, at this instant, came in to me from Asaph Chan, a seruant, in the name of Normahal, that shee had moued the Prince for another Firman, that all our goods might bee in her protection, and that shee had obtained it, and was readie to send downe her seruant with that, to see and take order for our good establishment, that shee would see that wee should not bee wronged. That Asaph Chan had done this for feare of the Princes violence, and because of his delayes; that now hee was sure that his sister had desired to bee our Protectresse, that the Prince would not meddle, that vpon his honour I should receiue all things consigned to mee; that shee had written such a command, and charged her seruant to assist our Factors, so that we should haue neuer more cause to complaine of Su-at. Therefore hee desired of mee two or three words to the Captaine and Factors to vse him kindly, and to let him buy for her some toyes, such as I would spare. This I durst not deny, though I saw the greedinesse; and gaue him a note on condition to see the Copy of the Firman which was sealed, and I could not without leaue, and so he was dispeeded: but you may by this iudge this place, how easie it were to raise a stocke last yeare, wee weer 60 were not looked after. Now because I translated the Cargazon of fine wares (yet concealed the Pearle) and gaue it the King ; euery one is ready to runne downe to buy : Normahall and Asaph Chan studying to doe me good offices ; many great men desiring a letter to send their seruants downe, so that if you had treble this stocke, it would be bought vp aboard, and saue you custome, and carriage, and spoile : for which purpose out of this I haue ordered your Factory to sell to the seruants of Normahall and her brother, whatsoeuer may bee spared, so that I may bee fitted at Court in any proportion. Thus I shall saue trouble and you charge, the Prince preuented, and our friends confirmed, and yet I hope sufficient for to please the King and his sonne : at the deli-10 uery of which Asaph Chan hath vnderaken the Firman for Bengala, or any Port, and a generall command and grant of free Priuiledges in all his Dominions.

The foure and twentieth, the King departed Mandao foure Course, and wandering in the hills, left vs irresolute what way to take, no man knowing his purpose. The six and twentieth, I got a warrant for ten Camels at the Kings price. The nine and twentieth, I remoued after : forced away by the desolations of the place.

The one and thirtieth, I arriued at the Kings Tents, but found him gone with few company for ten dayes a hunting, no man to follow without leaue, the Leskar diuided and scattered into many parts, ill water, deare prouisions, sicknesse and all sorts of calamitie accompanying so infinite a multitude ; yet nothing remoues him from following this monstrous appetite. Heere I vnderstood the Kings purpose was vncertaine, whether for Agra or Guzerat ; the latter giuen 20 out ; the former more probable, because his Councell desired to be at rest : but that how euer for the dispatch of my businesse, seeing hee would linger heere about a moneth, I was aduised, and thought it as fit to send for the goods and Presents, as to deferre it vpon vncertainties, being that dispatched, I had hope of some quiet in this course : I wore out my body, being very weake, and not like to recouer vpon daily trauell in the fields, with cold raw muddie water.

The second of Nouember, arriued Richard Steele and Master Jackson, with the Pearle and some other small matters stolen ahoare, according to my order, which I receiued and gaue quittance for : with him I had conference about his proiects, which because I would not rashly re-30 iect them, as he had set them afoot, after hauing made him see his fancies, and vnderstand the qualitie of these people, how for the water-worke, if to bee effected, it must bee begunne at our charge, and after triall, we shall not enioy the profit, but the Naturalls taught, and our people re- iected ; neither our commoditie vented by it, for that the Lead will treble his price by portage ouer-land ; and cannot bee deliuered at Agra so cheape as found there : yet I was content hee should make triall for satisfaction by carrying his work-men to Amadanas, to meete mee there, where by assistance of Mocrib Chan, who only is a friend to new inuentions. I would make of-
 40 fer to the King of their industry, and make prooffe what conditions may be obtained ; but in my iudgement it is all money and labour cast away. The Company must shut their eares against these proiectors, who haue their owne employments more in their ends, then their Masters profits : many things hold well in discourse, and in the theorique satisfe curious imaginations, but in practise and execution are found difficult and ayrie, especially to alter the constant receiued
 50 customes of Kingdomes, where some drinke only raine-water, some of a holy Riuer, some none but what is fetched by their owne cost : his second of reducing the Cassilaes and Merchants of Labor and Agra, by the Riuer Indus, that vsed to passe by Candahor into Persia, to transport by sea in our shipping for Iasques or the Gulph, is a meere dreame, some man in conference may wish it, but none euer practise it. The Riuer is indifferently nauigable downe, but the mouth is the residence of the Portugalls, retournes backe against the streame very difficult. Finally, wee must warrant their goods, which a Fleet will not doe, neither did the Portugall euer lade or noise such goods but only for those of Sindie and Tatta, that traded by their owne Iunckes, they gaue a Cartas or Passe to secure them from their Frigats, and traded with them, for which they payed a small matter, and that onely which came to the purses of the Grand of Din, Damon and Or-
 60 mu, or if all other difficulties were taken away, yet will the Laborers neuer bee drawne downe, being that Cassila consists most of returning Persians and Armenians that knew the passage from Iasques almost as bad, as from Candahor, and for that litle on the Confines of Sinde not worth mentioning. Notwithstanding for his better satisfaction, I was content hee should by experience learne his owne errors, so it were not at the Companies charge, but I suppose hee will let it fall, not knowing at which end to beginne

A third proiect for to ioyne the Trade of the Red Sea with this, I recommended to him, for that it was alreadie in vse, and the perill for the Guzerats very apparant, therefore I doubted not some Merchants might be drawne to lade in our ships at freight, whereby wee should make our selues necessary friends to these people, supply our owne defects, saue export of monies, and final-60 ly, for this yeare employ one ship of the olde account that should retorne in September : and receiue the proceed of the remaynes of this ioynt stocke, which will be sufficient to re-lade a great ship, otherwise to transport it ouer will be extreame losse. This I opened and vrged the consequence shewed which way to effect it, and commended by him to the Commander, the Cape Merchant, and your Factors with all earnestnesse, as by my Letters appeares. The consequence

I will make euident in your profit, if they follow it, for were the goods and estate all my owne, if I could not procure somewhat towards charge by freight from the Guzurats, yet hauing so many emptie vessels for so small a stocke, and two fallen into your hands of men of warre, I had rather goe emptie, and for company with them, then to omit that: there are many chances in that Sea, and in the way her returne onely of our owne remaynes, shall requite all forbearance; and be readie in time, for employed she must be if we intend to send the rest vpon this account, for that here is no harbourage at his arriual. I found him high in his conceits, hauing somewhat forgotten me, Matter Kerridge and him at warres, which I endeauoured to temper on all parts, but for his Wife I dealt with him cleerely, she could not stay with our safety, nor his Matters content; that he had ruined his fortunes, if by amends hee repayed it not; that shee should not trauell nor liue on the Companies Purse; I know the charge of women, that if he were content to liue himselfe like a Merchant, as others did frugally, and to be ordered for the Companies seruice and to send home his Wife, he was welcome: otherwise, I must take a course with both, against my nature. Hauing to this perswaded him, I likewise practised the discouragement of *Captaine Tower*son about his Wife, (you know not the danger, the trouble, the inconuenience of granting these liberties) to effect this, I perswaded, Abraham his Father in Law, here to hold fast: I wrote to them the gripings of this Court, the small hope or reliefe from his alliance, who expected great matters from him. Finally, I perswaded his returne quietly. To further this, I wrote to your chiefe Factor, that such things as hee had brought and were vendible, should be brought to your vse by Bill of exchange to such profit for him, as both might saue; and this inconuenience you bring on your selues by liberties vnreasonable. But to take tye of his trash to lye vpon your hands, vpon any condition I did prohibit.

I find by your Letter your strict command in priuate Trade, as well for your owne Seruants as others, whereby I collect, you meane not that he shall haue that libertie hee expects, for he is furnished for about one thousand pound sterling, first penny here, and Steele at least two hundred pound, which he presumes sending home his Wife, his credit and merit is so good towards you, that you will admit in this case to be rid of such cattell, I will not buy, but order that it be marked and consigned to you, that you may measure your owne hand. You discourage all your olde Seruants, some may doe all things for faire words, some nothing for good actions: I could instance some gone home two yeares since, that onely employed their owne stocke, did no other businesse, and liue now at home in pleasure, others that raise their fortune vpon your monies, from Port to Port, and returne rich and vnquestioned. Last yeare a Mariner had fixe and twentie Charles of Indico, others many Fardles, a third seuen thousand Mamudes, first pennie in Barroach, Bastaes, chosen apart, for hee inuested your Monies, and it is probable hee chose not the worst for himselfe: a fourth, about one hundred and fiftie pound first pennie. These I mention not for spight, but to moue you to equalitie, neither by their example these may escape, for they swallow you vp, but that an indifferent restraint be executed vpon all.

For the effecting of all these purposes, the sending home the woman and the prosecution of the Red Sea, I send backe Richard Steele with orders to Surat, hauing altered my purpose of the goods and Presents from the Leskar, it being declared that the King will for Guzurat, where I haue appointed Richard Steele, after hauing dispatched other matters, to meete with them and his Ingeniers. I also sent my aduice and directions to Captaine Pring, to take an Inuentorie of all the Monies and goods in the two men of Warre, to make it ouer to your stocke and land it, to sell or dispose of the ships, as his occasion shall require, the monies, if sold, to be put to stocke, to grant passage to some of the Chiefes, to entertaine the rest and to referre it to you at home, whom you will deal with the Owners that set them out. My opinion is peremptory, that their surprize is iust and iustificable, all their goods forfeited: if you will restore any thing, at your courtesie; but with the more rigour you deal with these, the better example you will leaue for such barbarous Piracies: for if this course be practised, take your leaue of all Trade about Surat, and the Red Sea, and let the Company of Turkie stand cleere of the Grand Signors reuenge, and we heere must expect cold Irons.

The sixth, I went to Asaph Chans, hauing receiued his Passe, vnto whom I shewed the Pearle according to promise, though the sorts fit not the Countrey iust as I was informed hereafter, yet their performance with him gaue him such content, that I am confident, I may vse Pharaohs words, The Land is before you, dwell where you will, you and your Seruants: for the price wee talked not, but he vowed such secrecie: and for my sake, who haue shewed this confidence in him, hee will giue more then their worth, and not returne one, and pay readie mony, of which hee professeth not to want, and to lend mee what I want: his Sister I haue promised to visit, whom hee hath made our protectresse, and briefly whatsoever contentment words can bring I receiue, and some good effects. When the Presents arriue, assure you I will not be liberall to your losse, little shall serue. Asaph Chan admonisheth mee himselfe, so they came with somewhat to induce them, as well accepted, bought as giuen: experience of others makes mee to approue of this doctrine.

Finishing these complements with him in his Bed-chamber, he rose to Dinner hauing invited me me and my people : but he and friends dined without, appointing mee a messe with him apart, for they eate not willingly with vs : where I had good cheere and well attended ; the reuerſion for my ſeruants.

After dinner, I moued Groos debt, told him the delays. Hee answered, I ſhould not open my lips, he had vndertaken it, that Groo by his meanes was finiſhing accounts with a Jeweller; that hee had ordered, as money was paid, it ſhould reſt in the Cutwalls hand for vs; which I found true : and the Cutwall promiſed to finiſh it in three dayes, deſiring mee to ſend no more to Aſaph Chan.

I cannot omit a baſeneſſe or fauour, according as you will interpret it. The King when his Priſons are full of condemned men, ſome he commands to be executed, ſome he ſends to his Vmracs to redeeme at a price : this he eſteemes as a courteſie, to giue meanes to exerciſe charitie, but he takes the money, and ſo ſels the vertue.

About a moneth before our remoue he ſent to mee, to buy three Abaffines (for fortie Rupias a man) whom they ſuppoſe all Chriſtians. I answered, I could not buy men as Slaues, as others did, and ſo had profit for their money, but in charity I would giue twenty Rupias a piece to ſaue their liues, and giue them libertie. The King tooke my anſwere well, and bade them to be ſent me. They expected money, and I was not haſtie; hearing no more of it, I hoped it had beene forgotten : but his words are written Decrees. This night the Officers ſeeing I ſent not, deli-20 my returne I payed, and freed the Slaues.

The tenth, I viſited Aſaph Chan, hauing receiued aduiſe from Surat of a new Firman, come downe to diſarmine all the English, and ſome other reſtrictions of their libertie: vpon a complaint made to the Prince, that we intended to build a Fort at Swally, and that our ſhippes were laden with Bricke and Lime for that end : which ſuſpition aroſe only by bringing a few on ſhoare to ſound the ſhips bell : yet the Alarum came to Court ſo hot, that I was called to anſwere; which when I made it appeare how abſurd the feare was, how diſhonorable for the King, how vnfit the place for vs, without water or harbourage : yet the iealouſie was ſo ſtrongly imprinted, becauſe formerly I had demanded a Riuer by Goya for that end, that I could hardly perſwade the Prince we intended not ſome ſurpriſe. By this you may iudge, how eaſie it were to get a Port for our ſelues, if you affected it, which I can, neither ſo profitable for you, nor a place tenable. Notwith-
30 ſtanding all remonſtrances, this furnace muſt be demolished, and a Hadley of horſe ſent downe to ſee it effected. The diſarming of our men, being all that our peopled ſtomacked, though it was on-ly to leaue their weapons in the Cuſtome-houſe, and that only of the ſhips company, though it were quieter for vs, except they were often more ciuill : yet I told Aſaph Chan wee would not endure the ſlauey, nor I ſtay in the Countrey; that one day the Prince ſent a Firman for our good vſage and grant of Priuiledges, the next day countermanded it; that there was no faith nor ho-
40 nour in ſuch proceedings, neither could I anſwere my reſidence longer. He replied, at night hee would moue the King, before the Prince, and giue me anſwere.

The thirteenth, I reuiſited Aſaph Chan : he told me wondrous matters of the Kings affection to my Soueraine, to my Nation, and to mee; that hee had ventured the Princes diſfauour for our ſakes, and had full promiſe for a new reformation : but becauſe he feared the Princes dealing, he gaue me this aſſurance, that he would take the Prigany of Surat, which the Prince muſt leaue, being made Gouvernour of Amadauas, Cambaya, and that Territorie : and to giue me ſatisfaction that he had not diſſembled with me, he deſired me to come at night to Court, and bring the King my Maſters Letter and the tranſlation, the oportunitie was faire to deliuer it : vpon the occaſi-40 on of which, he bade me perſiſt in my complaints, and offer to take leaue; I ſhould then ſee what he would ſay for vs, and ſo I ſhould beleue my ſelfe. At euening I went to the King, it being a very full Court, and preſented my Letter, which (the King ſitting on the ground) was layd be-fore him; and he buſie, tooke no great notice. Aſaph Chan whiſpered his Father in the eare, de-ſiring him to reade the Letter, and to aſſeſt vs, for that he might better begin that then himſelfe.

Etimon Dowlet tooke vp both Letters, gaue the English to the King, and read the tranſlated; to 50 which when the King had answered many words of complaint, to that point of procuring our quiet Trade, by his authoritie among the Portugals, he demanded if he would make peace. I an-ſwered, his Maieſtie knew long ſince, I offered to be governed by him, and referred it to his wiſ-60 dome, and had expected his pleaſure : he replied, hee would vndertake abſolutely to accord vs, and to make agreement in his Seas, which he would by anſwere to my Maſters Letters ſignifie, and therein giue him content in all other his friendly deſires. Notwithſtanding, I demanded leaue to goe before to Amadauas to meet the Kings Preſents and to prepare for my returne. Vp-on which motion, the queſtion grew betweene the King and the Prince, who complained that he had no profit by vs, and that he was content to be rid of vs. Aſaph Chan tooke the turne, and very roundly told the King, that we lroughe both profit to the Port, to the Kingdome, and ſecuritie; that we were vſed very rudely by the Princes ſeruants, and that it was not poſſible for vs to reſide without amends; it were more honourable for his Maieſtie to licence vs, then to in-treat vs ſo diſcounteouſly, for it would be the en. The Prince replied very cholerickly, that he had neuer done vs wrong, and had lately giuen mee a Firman at his entreatie. He replyes, It is true, you gaue a Firman to his content, and in ten dayes sent another, in effect, to contradict it, that he stood surety between both, had vndertaken from the Princes mouth our redresse, but now he had the shame and dishonor of it: that he ought me nothing, nor I him; he spake for no ends, but for the Kings Honor and Iustice, in that which he said that he did vs no wrong, he must appeale to me, who complayned that our goods were taken by force, that two yeeres past Rulph had begun it, would neuer pay vs, and his Officers continued euery shipping; that if the Prince were weary of vs, he might turne vs out, but then he must expect we would doe our owne Iustice vpon the Seas. He demanded if the King or Prince gaue mee meanes to eate, or who did? That I was an Ambassadour and a stranger, that liued and followed the King at great charge; that if our goods were forced, and after we could get neither goods nor money, how should I liue and maintayne my selfe. 10

This deliuered with some heate, the King caught the word, Force, Force, redoubling it to his sonne, and gaue him sharpe reprehension: the Prince promised to see me paid all; that he had taken nothing, but only caused the Presents to be sealed, because his Officers had no Custome, and desired to haue them opened before him, I absolutely refused it: also I told the King, I would only doe my dutie to my Master, in deliuering his Presents free, after I would giue the Prince all content.

Etimon Dowlet, who is alway indifferent, and now by his sonne made our friend, whispered with the King, and read a clause or two in my Masters Letter; at which the King made his son rise and stand aside. Asaph Chan ioyned in this priuate conference (which they told me was for my good) and in conclusion the Prince was called, commanded to suffer all the goods to come to my hands quietly, to giue me such priuiledges as were fit, which Asaph Chan should propound. The Prince would not yeeld the Presents, except Asaph Chan would stand surety that he should haue a share, which he did; and then we all agreed vpon that point. The King giuing mee many good words, and two pieces of his Pawne out of his dish, to eate of the same he was eating. Then I tooke leaue to goe to Amadanas, to meet the Presents, and so we parted. At night I set on my iourney, leaving my Tents, supposing the next day to reach the Citie, but I rode two nights, a day and a halfe with one baite vpon straw, and the fifteenth at noone arriued at Amadanas.

Ianuarie 8.
Words betwixt the Prince and the Ambassadour about Presents.

The eight of Ianuarie, there was some question about Presents, the Prince asking for them; I answered, they were readie, if hee pleased to receiue his. Then hee demanded, why I brake his seales? I told him, it was dishonorable for me to bring a Kings gifts in bonds, and great discourte- 30 sie to set seales vpon them: I expected and attended his licence twentie daies, but seeing no hope, I was enforced to doe it. Some heate began: at which appeared a Gentleman of the Kings, who was sent to obserue the passage, and to stickle, and told vs both, the King commanded wee should come before him at a Garden, where he sate, a Courte out of Towne, vpon the Riuer. So the Prince tooke his Palanke, and I a Coach, well attended by seruants both of father and son. When I came to the gates the Women were entring, and then no man can but the Prince; who made within a bitter complaint against mee, that I had dared to cut his seales, and to take out what I list. Asaph Chan was called for, who was my suretie, and the Prince laid it on him: he, 40 as the custome is, denyed it, excused himselfe, yet I had not accused him, but tooke it vpon me, as knowing my selfe better able to beare it, and that he would denie it. Then I was sent for to the water-side, where the King sate priuately, where I entered, with mee the Presents; but the King was within amongst his Women. Asaph Chan chafed at mee, for breaking his word, told mee, the Prince had shamed him: I replied by Iaddow, You know I had your consent, this man is witnesse; he denyed it to vs both: I replied, Though I would not cast it vpon him, it was true, for I had witnesse; Iaddow would not returne the answer, but told me he might not tell him he lyed to his face: and this is vsuall, if any command come from the King that he for- gets, he that brought the message will disauow it. I bore vp as high as I could; the great men told me it was a great affront, no man durst doe such a thing; others smiled: I answered, Not so 50 great as the Prince had done me often. Thus we spent the day, and the King appeared not, but priuately stole away, leaving vs all sitting in expectance.

At night word came the King was gone, and I offered to goe home, but was so well attended, I could not but by force: in the way new messengers came to seeke mee, and I arriued backe at the Kings Court, not hauing eaten or drunke; but the King was not come in, nor could I get loofe of my attendants, but they vsed me very respectfully, we sate an houre. Suddenly newes came to put out all lights, the King was come, who entred on an open Waggon, with his Norma- ball, drawne by Bullocks, himselfe Carter, and no man neare. When hee and his Women were housed, the Prince came in a horse-backe, and entring in, called for me: I found them alone with two or three * Capons, and about mid-night the King set on it an angrie countenance, told mee 60
I had broken my word, that he would trust me no more, (the Prince had desired him to doe so:) I answered as roundly, I held it fit to giue freely, I had done nothing of offence in my owne iudgement; if their customes were other, it was ignorance, and I must bee pardoned; wee had many disputes: at last, the Prince interposed, offered his friendship, and wee were all reconciled fully.

fully, and promises too large. Then I opened the Chests, gaue the King his Presents, the Prince his, and sent in that for Normahall: we were about two houres in viewing them. The Arras he tooke well, but said it was course, desired to haue a Sute of such, as the sweet Bagge: and wee concluded that in the morning I should come to the Prince, that he should be my Protector and Procurator, the goods except. Three things more then Presents were there returned mee: for those three the Prince told me he would pay, seeing his father tooke them.

The tenth, I went to the Prince, was receiued with all fauour, had order for a Firman for the man murdered, a declaration of his reconcilment in publike, command to all his Officers to take knowledge, and to his chiefe Rasa to be my Procurator, and to draw what Firmans so euet I desired. I presented Captaine *Tower*son and some English, whom hee vsed with grace, and for a signe of this peace, gaue me a Colth of siluer cloak, and promised to be the Protector of our Nation in all things. I told him of Master Steele and his Work-men: hee desired me to bring a small Present to his father at night, hee would present them, which I did. Hee kept his word, and spake for vs to him, who was willing enough. I presented Captaine *Tower*son to the King, who called for him vp, and after a few questions rose. At the Gushel Choes, I presented Master Steele and his Work-men: the King sate in a Hat I gaue him all night, called for Master Paynter, and after much Discourse, gaue him ten pounds, and promised to entertayne the rest.

The thirteenth, the Dutch came to Court with a great Present of China ware, Sanders, Parrats and Cloaues; but were not suffered to come neere the third degree: at last the Prince asked me who they were: I replied, The Hollanders, resident in Surat. Hee demanded if they were our friends: I replied, they were a Nation depending on the King of England, but not welcome in all places; their businesse I knew not. He said, for being our friends, I should call them vp, and so I was enforced to send for them to deliuer their Present: they were placed by our Merchants, without any speech or further conference. Finally, I had all granted I desired, I attend the performance and money: and thus I conclude, that without this contestation I had neuer gotten any thing; for I told the Princes Messenger in the presence of all the English, that if he vsed force to me or my goods, he might doe his pleasure, but it should cost blood: that I would set my Chop vpon his Masters ship, and send her for England.

Present of the Dutch.

The eighteenth, I receiued from Surat of the imprisonment of Spragge and Howard, at Bram- Spragge and Ho- poore, their house and goods seized, their liues in question, for drinking with the Cutwall in their ward accused, house, that one of the Cutwalls men dyed that night; vpon which they stand accused of Poyson: and the Cutwall to free himselfe of comming into the house, pretended that he came to fetch a mans wife away from Thomas Spragge. What the truth is I know not: Information is come to the King against them: and I went to the Prince, who vndertooke all my causes: but could not speake with him: with the same came complaint of a force vsed to the Cassila vpon the way, notwithstanding the Firman sent by the Rasa of the Countrey, in both which to night I will make petition to the King. My toyle with barbarous vniust people is beyond patience: at the Princes I found the Firman promised, drawne, but halfe the conditions agreed on left out, vpon which I refused it, and desired nothing but leaue to depart to treat with these in the Sea.

The one and twentieth, a command to free the English, and their goods, and that if the Moore came into their house to drinke, if they killed him with a Dagger, hee had his iust reward. The second to Rasa Partapsham, to repay vs all exactions whatsoever, not to take hereafter any dutie vpon the way towards his Port; and in case of failing, that he would deliuer his sonne into my hands; he further ordered the deliury of the Firman for Surat, the Articles by mee demanded, and to pay vs all our debts of Surat, and to cut it off vpon his Mancipdaries, that had taken that, without delay, he called to account his old Customers, charged the new to vse vs as his friends, shewed as much fauour publikely as I could require. I moued expedition; he replied, To morrow by nine in the morning all should be deliuered into my hands.

The two and twentieth, I went my selfe to receiue them; and carryed the Merchants, with some Pearle, that the Prince had bin instant to see, pretended to be Master *Tower*sons: but he had receiued some vncertaine iufornation of Pearles, to the value of twentie or thirtie thousand pound, which he hoped to draw from vs. When his Secretarie saw the small sorts, hee replied, the Prince had Mands of these: if we brought no better commoditie, wee might be gone, he cared not for our custome: how basely false, and couetous are those of Iewels, you may iudge. I vndertooke reply, that I had procured those from a Gentle woman to satisfie them; if they liked them not, they could not be made better, it was inciuility to be angry with Merchants for their good will, but told him I came for my Firmans, and expected them: I was answered, wee had deceiued their hopes, and the Prince would deceiue ours; Firman I should haue none, I had asked leaue to depart, I might come and take leaue when I pleased. I answered, nothing contented mee more, but that I would visit their vniustice in an indifferent place; that I would speake with the King, and depend no more on them, for I saw all was couetoulnesse and vnworthinesse: so I rose and parted; but he recalled me to come to the King and Prince together the next day, I should haue content.

And now Reader, we are at a stand : some more idle , or more busie spirits , willing either to take their rest, or to exchange their labour ; and some perhaps wishing they had the whole Iournall, and not thus contracted into Extracts of those things out of it, which I conceived more fit for the publike. And for the whole, my selfe could haue wished it, but neither with the Honourable Company, nor else-where could learne of it : the worthy Knight himselfe being now employed in like Honourable Embassage from his Maiestie to the Great Turke. Yet to supply the defect of the Iournall, I haue giuen thee the Chorography of the Countrey. Certaine Letters of his, written thence to his Honourable Lords and friends in England, out of all which well wrought on by an vnderstanding spirit, may bee hewed and framed a delightfull Commentary of the Mogoll and his Subiects. Take them therefore Reader, and vse them as a Prospective Glasse, by which thou maist take easie and neere view of those remote Regions, People, Rites, Religions.

And first here followes a description of the Countrey both by Map and Writing , and after them the Letters passing mutually betwixt his Maiestie and the Mogoll, and lastly, those of Sir Thomas Roe afore-said.

¶ X.

The seuerall Kingdomes and Prouinces subiect to the Great Mogoll SHAH SELIM GEHANGIER, with the Principall Cities and Riuer, the scituation and borders, and extent in length and breadth, as neere as by description I could gather them. The names I tooke out of the Kings Register : I begin at the North-west.

1.  Andahar, the chiefe Citie so called , lyes from the heart of all his Territorie North-west, confines with the Shabas, and was a Prouince of Persia.
2. Tata, the chiefe Citie so called, is diuided by the Riuer Indus, which falls into the Sea at Sindu, and lyes from Candahar South, from the middle of which, I suppose Agra West, some-what Southerly.
3. Buckar, the chiefe Citie so called, Buckar Suckar, lyes vpon the Riuer Sindu or Indus, to the North-ward, some-what Easterly of Tata, and West Confines vpon the Baloaches, a kinde of rude Warlike people.
4. Multan, the chiefe Citie so called lying also vpon Indus, East from Candahar, North from Buckar.
5. Haugickan, the Kingdome of the Baloaches, to the West of Tata and Bachar, and confines West vpon the Kingdome of Lar, subiect to the Shabas. Indus windeth it selfe into the Easter-side of it, it hath no renowned Citie.
6. Cabull, the Citie so called, a great Kingdome , the Northermost of this Emperours Dominions, and confineth with Tartaria.
7. Kysmier, the chiefe Citie is called Sirinaker, the Riuer of Bhat passeth through it, and findeth the Sea by Ganges, or some say of it selfe in the North part of the Bay of Bengala, it bordereth Cabul to the East Southerly, it is all Mountaines.
8. Bankish, the chiefe Citie is called Beishar.
9. Atack, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyeth on one side the Riuer Nilab, which runneth the North-west into the Riuer Indus.
10. The Kingdome of the Kataries, lyes at the foot of the Mountaines : it hath principall Cities, Dankely and Purbola, it bordereth North-east on Kishimer.
11. Pen-lab, which signifieth five waters, for that it is seated within five Riuer. The chiefe Citie is called Labor, it is a great Kingdome and most fruitfull, the Citie is the Mart of India for Traffique, it borders North-east on Multan.
12. Ianba, the chiefe Citie so called : it lyeth East on Pen-lab, it is very mountaynous.
13. Peitan, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyeth East of Ianba, and from the North-west Bengala it is full of Mountaines.
14. Nakarkut, the chiefe Citie so called, the North Eastermost confine of Mogor, it lyes to the North-east of the head of the Bay of Bengala, it is very mountaynous.
15. Siba, the chiefe Citie so called, it borders with Nakarkut Southerly , it is all Mountaynous.
16. Iesuall, the chiefe Citie so called Ragepar, it bordereth with Bengala South-east North, and with Siba and Nakarkat, it is full of Mountaines.
17. Delly, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyeth on the North-west side of the Riuer Iemnie, which which falleth into Ganges, and runneth through Agra: it is an ancient Citie, and the seat of the Mogols Ancestors, it is ruined: some affirme it to haue beene the seat of Porus conquered by Alexander, and that there stands a Pillar with a Greeke Inscription.

18. Menat, the chiefe Citie called Narnol, it lyeth on the East of Ganges.

19. Sanball, the chiefe Citie so called: it lyeth between Ganges and Jemui to the North-west of their meeting.

20. Bakar, the chiefe Citie is called Bikaneer, it bordereth North-west on Ganges.

21. Agra, a principall and great Kingdome, the Citie so called, the heart of the Mogolls Territorie, in North latitude about twentie eight degrees and an halfe: it lyeth most on the South-west-side of Jemui, the Citie vpon the Riuer, where one of the Emperours Treasuries are kept. From Agra to Labor, being three hundred and twentie Course, which is not lesse then seuen hundred miles, it is all a plaine, and the high-way planted on both sides with trees like a delicate walke: it is one of the great workes and wonders of the World.

22. Jennupar, the Citie so called, vpon the Riuer of Kaul, which I suppose to bee one of the five Riuers inclosing Labor, and the Countrey lyeth betweene it and Agra, North-west from one, South-east from the other.

23. Banda, the chiefe Citie so called, it confineth Agra to the West.

24. Patna, the chiefe Citie so called, it is inclosed by foure great Riuers; Ganges, Jemna, Serseli, and Kanda, so that it lyeth from Agra South-east towards the Bay of Bengala, where all these pay Tribute.

25. Gor, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyeth toward the head of Ganges.

26. Bengala, A mightie Kingdome inclosing the West-side of the Bay on the North, and win-deth South-westerly, it bordereth on Cormandell, and the chiefe Cities are Ragmehhell and Dekaka, there are many hauens, as Port Grand, Port Pequina, traded by the Portugals, Philipatan, Satigam, it contayneth diuers Prouinces, as that of Purp and Patan.

27. Roch, It hath no Citie of note, and bordereth on the South-west, East of Bengala and the Bay.

28. Udeza, the chiefe Citie Ikanat, it is the vtmost East of the Mogols Territorie beyond the Bay, and confined with the Kingdome of Maug, a sauage people lying betweene Udeza and

30 Pegu.

29. Canduana, the chiefe Citie is called Kerbakatenkah, it lyeth South-west of the South of Bengala.

30. Kualiar, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyeth to the South-east of Kanduana, and bordereth on Burhampur.

31. Chandes, the chiefe Citie called Burhampur, a great Kingdome, one of the ancient seats of Decan, and conquered from them, it lyth East on Guzerat, South of Chitor, West of Decan, and it is watered with the Riuer Tabeti, which falleth West into the Bay of Cambaya, it is now the seat of the Decan.

32. Malua, the chiefe Cities called Vgen, Narr, and Sering, it lyeth West of Chandes, betweene that and the Countrey of Ranna, on the East of the Riuer Sapra, which falls into the Bay of Cambaya, not farre from Surat.

33. Berar, the chiefe Citie is called Shahpur, it bordereth on Guzerat, and the hils of Ranna.

34. Guzerat, A goodly Kingdome inclosing the Bay of Cambaya, the chiefe Citie is Amadamar, it contains the Citie and Gouvernment of Cambaya, the beautie of India, the Territorie and Citie of Surat, and Baroach: it is watred with many goodly Riuers, as that of Cambaya falsly supposed to be Indus, the Riuer of Narbadab, falling into the Sea at Baroach, that of Surat, and diuers others, it trades to the Red Sea, to Achin, and many places.

35. Soret, the chiefe Citie called Ganagar, it lyeth to the North-west of Guzerat.

36. Naruar, the chiefe Citie called Ghehud, lyeth South-west from Chitor.

37. Chitor, an ancient great Kingdome, the Citie so called on a mightie hill, walled about ten English miles. There stands yet aboue an hundred Churches, the Palace of the King, many braue Pillers of carued stone. There is but one ascent cut out of the Rocke, passing foure magnificent gates, there remayne the ruines of an hundred thousand houses of stone: It is vn-habited, it was doubtlesse one of the seats of Porus, and was wonne from Ranna, his issue by Echarshaw the last Mogoll. Ranna flying into the strength of his Kingdome among the Mountaines, seated himselfe at Odepoore, who was brought to acknowledge the Mogol for his Superiour Lord, by Sultan Caronne, third sonne of the present Emperour, in the yeare 1614. This Kingdome lyeth North-west from Chandes, and North-east from the North-west of Guzerat, in the way betweene Agra and Surat: Ranna himselfe keeps the hils to the West, neere Amadamar.

The length is North-west to South-east. From Chandahar to Labor, three hundred and fiftie Courses, about eight hundred miles.

From Labor to Agra, three hundred and twentie Courses, about seuen hundred fiftie two miles.

* Let not the diuersitie of names trouble any in so remote tongues and differing pronuntiati- ons: if any other difficulties happen in comparing this discourse with the Map or Relations I confesse, I would haue sought better to satisfie my selfe, if Sir T. Roe had bin at home. As for Courses they are diuersly taken (as Southerne and Northerne miles with vs) in some places longer, in others shorter, which causeth scruple in the computation.

From Agra to Hbagipurpatua three hundred Courses, about sixe hundred and eightie miles.
From Hbagipurpatua to Kirasunder, three hundred Courses, about sixe hundred and seuentie miles.

In all, Courses one thousand two hundred and seuentie. Miles, about two thousand, eight hundred seuentie two.

The breadth in all is North-east to South-west from Harduar to Duarsa, sixe hundred and fittie Courses, about fiftene hundred miles.

The Kings Letters sent to Selim Shagh the Great Mogor, in the yeare 1614. by Sir Thomas Roe.

IAMES, by the Grace of Almighty God, the Creator of Heauen and Earth, King of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, Defendor of the Christian Faith, &c.

To the high and mightie Monarch the Great Mogor, King of the Orientall Indies, of Chandahar, of Chifmer and Corazon, &c. Greeting.

We hauing notice of your great fauour toward Vs and Our Subiects, by Your Great Firma to all Your Capitaines of Riuers, and Officers of Your Customes, for the entertaynement of Our louing Subiects the English Nation with all kind respect, at what time soeuer they shall arrive at any of the Ports within Your Dominions, and that they may haue quiet Trade and Commerce without any kind of hinderance or molestation, &c. As by the Articles concluded by Suc Suff Governour of the Guzerats, in Your Name, with Our louing Subiect Captaine Thomas Best appeareth: Haue thought it meete to send unto You Our Ambassadour, which may more fully and at large handle and treat of such matters as are fit to be considered of, concerning that good and friendly correspondence, which is so lately begonne betweene Vs: and which will without doubt redound to the honour and utilitie of both Nations. In which consideration, and for the furthering of such laudable Commerce, Wee haue made choice of Sir Thomas Roe Knight, one of the principall Gentlemen of Our Court, to whom Wee haue giuen Commission vnder Our Great Seale of England, together with directions and instructions further to treat of such matters as may be for the continuance and increase of the utilitie and profit of each others Subiects: to whom We pray You to giue fauour and credit in whatsoeuer Hee shall mooue or pro- pound toward the establishing and enlarging of the same. And for confirmation of our good inclination, and wel-wishing toward You, We pray You to accept in good part the Present, which our said Ambassadour will deliuer unto You, And so doe commit You to the mercifull protection of Almighty God.

A Copie of the Grand Moghor his Letter to the King.

VNto a King rightly descended from his Ancestors, bred in Military Affaires, and clothed with Honour and Iustice,

A Commander worthy of all command, strong and constant in Religion, which the great Prophet Christ did teach, King IAMES, whose loue hath bred such impression in my thoughts, as shall neuer be forgotten, but as the smell of Amber, or as a Garden of fragrant flowers whose beautie and odour is still increasing so be assured my loue shall grow and increase with yours.

YOur Letter which you sent me in the behalfe of your Merchants, I haue receiued, whereby I rest satisfied in Your tender loue towards me; and desire You not to take it ill, for not hauing writ unto You heretofore: for this my present Letter, I send to renew Our loues, & herewith do certifie You, that I haue sent forth my Firmawnds thorow all my Countreies to this effect, that if any English Ships or Merchants shall arrive in any of my Ports, my people shall permit and suffer them to doe what they will freely in their Merchandizing causes, aiding and assisting them in all occasions of iniuries that shall bee offered them, and that the least cause of discourtesie be not done vnto them, as also that they bee as free and freer then my owne people. And as now and formerly I haue receiued from You diuers Tokens of Your loue: so I desire your mindfulness of me by some Nouelties from Your Countrey, as an Argument of friendship betweene Vs: for such is the custome of Princes heere.

As for your Merchants, I haue giuen expresse order through all my Countrey, to suffer them to sell, buy, transport, and carry away at their pleasures, without the let or hinderance of any person whatsoeuer, all such Goods and Merchandize, or other things, as they shall desire to buy, and let this my Letter as fully satisfie You in the desired peace and loue, as if my owne sonne had beene the Messenger to ratifie the same. And if any in my Countrey not fearing God, nor obeying their King, or any other void of Religion, should indeuour, or be an Instrument to breake this league of friendship; I would send my sonne Sultan Coronne, a Souldier approued in the Warres, to cut him off, that no Obstacle may hinder the continuance, and increasing of Our affections.

My

MY Lord, only for promise, which is an honest debt, I send your Lordship a Journall till my arrivall at Brampore, a Citie of houses made of mudde, where one of the Kings sonnes keepeth his Court. He is called Perueys. I had need to write an Apologie for it, there being nothing of worth, nothing memorable; and yet not my fault: but I had rather trust your Noblenesse, then trouble you with excuses, and so descend to a more universall description of the state and customes of the Land.

They have no written Law. The King by his owne word ruleth, and his Gouvernours of Prouinces by that authoritie.

Once a weeke he sitteth in iudgement patiently, and giueth sentence for crimes Capitall and Ciuill. He is euerie mans heire when he dyeth, which maketh him rich, and the Countrey so euill builded. The great 10 man about him are not borne Noble, but Favourite raised: to whom hee giueth (if it be true) wonderfull meanes. They are reckoned by Horses: that is to say, Coronels of twelue thousand Horses; which is the greatest, whereof are foure, besides his sonnes and wife: so descending to twentie Horses; not that any of these are bound to keepe, or raise any at all. But the King assigneth them so much land, as is bound to 20 maintaine so many Horses as a rent, each horse at five and twentie pounds sterling by the yeere, which is an incredible Reuenue giuen away: so many, (that is, almost all, but the Ploughmen, Artificers, and Tradesmen in Townes) liuing upon it. But as they die, and must needs gather, so it returneth to the King like Rivers to the sea, both of those he gaue to, and of those that haue gained by their owne industry. But for the most part he leaueth the widowes and children their horses, stuffe, and some other stocke; and then putteth them into a Signiory (if the fathers were of sixe or seven thousand horses) perhaps of a thousand or 30 five hundred: and so setteth them to begin the world anew, and aduanceth them as they deserue of him. They all rise by presenting him, which they strue to doe both richly and rarely: some giuing a hundred thousand pounds in iewels at a time.

He hath one beloued wife among foure, that wholly gouerneth him. He receiued lately a Present from the King of Bilampore, to obtaine peace, (whose Ambassadour knocked his head three times against the ground) of six and thirtie Elephants, of two whereof the chaines and all tackles were of beaten Gold, to the weight of foure hundred pounds; two of silver, of the same fashion; the rest of Copper: fiftie Horses richly furnished, and ten Leckes of Rupias in iewels, great Pearles, and Balasse Rubies. Euerie Lecke is an hundred thousand Rupias; euerie Rupia two shillings sixe pence sterling; so tenne Leckes is a Million of Rupias.

30 His Territorie is farre greater then the Persians, and almost equall, if not as great as the Turkes. His meanes of money, by reuenue, custome of Presents, and inheriting all mens goods, aboue both. His Countrey lyeth West to Sinde, and so stretcheth to Candahar, and to the Mountaines of Taurus North. To the East as farre as the utmost parts of Bengala, and the borders of Ganges: and South to Decan, it is two thousand miles square at the least, but hath many pettie Kings within, that are Tributaries.

The true descended heire of Porus, that was overcome by Alexander, called Ranna, is lately conquered, more by composition then force: the King hauing rather bought him then wonne him, and hereby no way augmented his Reuenue, but giuen a great Pension to him. His Countrey I crossed, betwene this Towne of Asmere and Brampore. Ceter hauing bene anciently the chiefe Towne, and surely standing on an hill, steepe as a Rocke. some fiftene miles about, that is all walled: the Citie within, but with one 40 ascent, and fine admirable gates in the ascent, all ruined and no person dwelling. But there stand an hundred Muschees, many Lanternes, and such reuerend and braue Reliques of Imagerie and carued workes, that few or hardly any where can be equalled. In generall, all the old Cities are beaten downe; by what policie I vnderstand not: but the King seeketh the ruine of any thing not begunne by his Ancestors: so that all the Land hath not an house fit for a Cottager, but in such Cities as hee fauoureth. Surat is best builded of any: and in old time they in these parts made mightie workes, which euerie day decay. At Surat there is a Tanke for water of free-stone, in a polygon forme, of aboue an hundred sides, euerie side eight and twenty yards: it hath staires on euerie side for men to descend, and many stopes for horses. It is a wonderous worke, both for the hugeness, and for the braue building.

I haue now on the Court to touch, and mine entertainment. The King neuer used any Ambassadour 50 with so much respect: without any dispute giuing mee leaue to vse mine owne customes; not requiring that of me, which he vsed of the Persian. He presented me with a welcome before I spake; and said the King and he were brothers, with many other courteous words. I hauing bin sicke, he offered me Physitians. He tooke the Presents in good part, and was so fond of the Coach, that at night in his Court he got into it, and made two or three of my men draw him a little in it. He is very affable, and of a cheerefull countenance, without pride. Three times a day hee sitteth out in three places: Once to see his Elephants and 60 beasts fight, about noone: After, from foure to five or sixe, to entertaine all that visit him. At night from nine till mid-night, with all his great men, but none else, where he is below with them, in all familiaritie. I visited him in the second of these, where I found him in a Court, set aboue like a King in a Play, and all his Nobles and my selfe below on a stage couered with carpets; a iust Theater: with no great state, but the Canopies ouer his head, and two standing on the heads of two wooden Elephants, to beat away flies. They weare nothing but Calicoes, but are euer attendant.

The great men ride in Traines, some two hundred, some five hundred Foot-men following them, The Grander, and foure or five Banners carried before them; and an hundred or two hundred Horses after them. This is all their pride. They keepe their Horses most delicately, fed with Butter and Sugar: and though they they be not very great, yet they are of delicate shape, both of Persia, Arabs, and of this Land.

I haue one Observation more to make of the falsenesse of our Maps, both of Mercator, and all others, and their ignorance in this Countrey. First, the famous Riuer Indus doth not emptie himselfe into the Sea at Cambaya, as his chiefe mouth, but at Sinde. My reason is, Lahor stands vpon Indus: from whence to Sinde it is nauigable; to Cambaya not so. Lahor in the Maps is also falsely set downe, it lying North from Surat aboue a thousand miles: the Citie where the Kings ordinarie residence is, Agra, not described at all; but it standeth North North-east from Surat on a Riuer, that fals into Ganges. But the King now resideth in a base old Citie, wherein is no house but of mudde, not so great as a Cottage on Hownloheath: only himselfe hath one of stone. His Lords liue in Tents: and I haue suddenly built to my mudde wals, vpon canes, a doozen thatched roomes. This Towne is short of Agra ten daies iourney, two hundred miles, which standeth from hence North North-east. This place is from Bramport North foure hundred and fiftie miles. Bramport from Surat East aboue two hundred miles. The latitude neere sine and twentie degrees. 10

Thus, my Lord, I haue said some-what, but to little purpose, I forget not some Bookes for you: but Load-stones heere are none: They are in the farre East Countreies: neither is there any correspondence with China. To Persia, and so to Aleppo there goe Carauans: to Cathaya none.

Heere is no newes but of Persia. The King hath taken away water and reliefe from Ormus, and banished the Portugals his Territories. He hath lately ouer-runne the poore Georgians with fire and sword: and being of an unquiet nature intendeth the conquest of the Vsbiqes, a Nation betweene Samarchand and him, which he aymes at. He lately stricke off his sonnes head with his owne hand. Hee is fauoured and feared of the Mogoll, as being Lord of the more warlike Nation: for these are more then halfe Bra-manes, whose Religion is not to kill a Louse byting them: and the Mogolls are an effeminate people. So that the Turke the last yeere sending on Ambassage, to entreate him not to assist the Persian, hee gaue him very harsh entertainment, made him Salem to the ground, and as soone as he was dismissed, sent the Persian ten Leckes of Rupias. 20

I shall be glad to doe your Lordship seruice in England; for this is the dullest, basest place, that euer I saw, and maketh me weary of speaking of it. Therefore if you be also weary of reading, I am glad. I shall desire your Lordship to let Master Hackwell reade the Iournall: for I promised him one, but I had not leasure to write it.

And so with all respect, and little Ceremonie, I hope to returne to doe you better seruices: in the meane time to liue a miserable life, though with abundance and state enough, yet I want the conuersation and presence of those friends I loue and honour: in which number your Lordship hath made me presume to esteeme you, and to account my selfe 30

Your Lordships humble friend, to doe you seruice,

A Letter of Sir THOMAS ROE, to &c.

My it please your ( ) places farre remote, hauing some-what of wonder in the distance, cause much expectation in themselves of strange matters among the Vulgar, such as I, supposing they should haue subiect of worthy and large discourse. But these are unlike the Starres, that seeme lesse the further off: heere the remotenesse is the greatnesse, and to maintayne the ancient priuiledge of Travellers, they haue beene so farre Alchymists as multiplication; some ground, some spirit, to quicken the bodie of their monstrous Relations. 50

Where I shall begin, what I shall say worthy one of your ( ) vacancies from great Affaires, I know not: to undertake a Cosmographicall description were a labour not unworthy of time, but not proportionall to a Letter; Ortelius, Mercator, Atlas, nor any understanding any truth herein. Yet for the maynesse of the error, I will obserue, that the famous Riuer Indus doth not powre himselfe into the Sea, by the Bay of Cambaya, but farre Westward at Sinde. For from Lahor standing a thousand mile North, in-the Maine vpon Indus, it is nauigable to Sinde, to Cambaya not, but certaine by-streames begotten by the seasons of Raine make mightie inundations, which haue cherished the error: all the rest is as false both in bearing, distance, longitude and latitude, as that, but the correction heere incomprehensible; the true latitude of this place sine and twentie degrees and a halfe.

A description of the Land, customes and manners, which are incidents, are fitter for winter-nights; 60 they are either ordinarie, or mingled with much Barbarisme.

Lawes they haue none written: the Kings iudgement binds, who sits and giues audience with much patience, once weekly, both in capitall and criminall causes, where sometimes he sees the execution done by his Elephants, with too much delight in blood.

Execution.

His Gouverneurs of Prouinces rule by his Firmans, which is a brieft Letter authorizing them. They Gouverneurs take life and goods at pleasure.

Many religious, and in them many Sects; Moores or Mahometans adhering to Ally, such is the Religions and King; Banians or Pythagorians, for the transmiration (and therefore will not kill the Vermin that Sect. bites them) who often buy many dayes respite in charitie from killing any flesh at all, in such a Prouince or Citie. Gentiles of sundry Idolatries, their Wines adorning the Pile, and entering the Funerall fires with great ioy and honour.

The extent of his Territorie is West to Sinde, North-west to Chandahor, North almost to Taurus, Extent. East to the borders of Ganges, and South-east all Bengala, the Land bordering the Gulph South to Decan, much greater then the Persian, almost equall (if not fully) to the Turke, if his Land were crish together into a square, as this. Agra, the ordinary residence of the King, is a thousand miles from any border, farther from some. The right issue of Porus, is heere a King in the midst of the Mogols King- domes, neuer subdued till last yeere: and to say true, he is rather bought then conquered, wonne by gifts, Porus his issue, not by Armes, to acknowledge a Superior Lord.

The Pillar erected by Alexander, is yet standing at Dely, the ancient seat of the Ancestors of Ranna the issue of Porus. Alexanders Pillar.

The buildings are all base, of mudde, one story high, except in Surat, where are some stone houses, but Buildings pub- I know not by what policie, the King seeks the ruine of all the ancient Cities which were brauely built, and like and pri- now lye desolate and ruined. His owne houses are of stone, both in good forme and faire, but his great uare. men build not for want of inheritance, but as farre as I haue yet scene, line in Tents, or houses worse then a Cottager; yet where the King affects, as at Agra, because it is a City erected by him, the buildings are (as is reported) faire and of carued stone.

In Reueneue, doubtlesse, he exceeds either Turke or Persian, or any Easterne Prince: the summes I dare Reason of his not name, but the reason; all the Land is his, no man hath a foot. He maintaynes by rents giuen of Sig- great Reueneue and Wealth. nories, counted by Horses, all that are not Mechanique: and the Reuenuues giuen to some, are a Germane Princes estate. Secondly, all men rise to greater and greater Signiories as they rise in fauour, which is on- ly gotten by frequent Presents, both rich and rare. Lastly, he heires all mens goods that dye, as well those Inheritance, that gained by industry, as Merchants, as those that liued by him, and takes all their money; leaues the Widow and Daughters what he pleaseth; giues the sonnes some little Signiorie, and puts them anew to the World, whose Fathers die worth two or three Millions.

But I am fallen by my purpose, not to interrupt your ( ) with these, presuming of your pardon; I will only say a little of the Court, and so passe to that is more necessarie.

The King sits out in three severall places, thrice every day, except some occasion preuent him: an houre Court Cu- at noone to see his Elephants fight; at foure till siue to entertayne all commers, to be scene and worshipped; stomes. nine till mid-night, with his principall men in more familiaritie, being below among them.

I went to present my selfe at the second of these: I came into a Court full of base people, and at a raile which shut them out right against the King, I was stayed in his sight to demand audience (onely a cere- monie) so he sent his principall Officers to bring me up: he sate in a place like a Theatre above, where the King sits in a Play, and I was conducted foure steps up, inst vnder him, like a stage, all on Carpets; my selfe and all his great men were Actors, the common-people below gazing on. Hee preuented mee with speech, calling the King his Brother, and that I must consequently be welcome: for the barbarous custome of kneeling and knocking the ground with the head (which he neuer pardoned, neither the Turkes nor Persian Ambassadors) he required not, but at my first motion granted me all libertie of mine owne man- ner, and as all say, he neuer vsed such respect to a living man.

All the policy of his state is to keepe the greatest about him, or to pay them as farre off liberally. No Policie and Counsell, but euery Officer answereth to the King apart, his dutie. Politic.

He is of countenance cheerefull, and not proud in nature, but by habite and custome; for at night he is very affable, and full of gentle conuersation. Disposition.

I beleue your ( ) is weary of him, and would passe into Persia, from whence wee receiue for Persian newes, truth, that the Sophie hath distressed Ormus, by taking away the water and prouisions of the Maime. At Ormus they are in great necessitie, so that if the Sophie had any helpe of shipping to take it, hee might be perswaded to put it into our hands, to turne his sikkes from the passage of his enemy the Turke; a matter of infinite consequence. For if I were to open these Trades, I would shew important differences for the Kingdome of England, but it would require large Discourse. He hath made lately a Road with fire and sword vpon the poore Georgian Christians, and subdued them, and being of a spirit naturally vnpeace- full, he prepares for the conquest of Samercand, as his end, but pretends the punishing of a valiant Race of Tartars, called Vsbiques, betweene him and his desire. Hee smote off his eldest sonnes head with his owne hands, returning from Georgia, and hath by sharpe Edict binished all Portugalls all his Domini- ons. Neuer were such oportunities to discharge the Portugall from all these Coasts. Our Trade heere, Portugalls, and the Dutch Plantation below Goa, hath so shortned their returnes, that halfe their Gallions come not; those that doe come bring new supplies for the Garrisons, but returne so empty, that the charge is but de- fraud. We haue now twice beaten a great Armado with few ships, an Armado that was appointed por- calligar los hereticos Ingleses (the words of one Father to another) and after to punish the Mogoll for 1640 entertayning vs, so that he hath lost more in reputation (which was his strength) then in substance. But if his his Maestie would condescend that we should assault them, as they doe vs, it would utterly breake them, it being both the nobler and safer part of a Warre, to which we are subiect at their pleasures, then to defend alwayes: besides, they make this vse in reports of vs, that the King of England is so affraid of the King of Portugall, that he dares not warrant an assault, but only to defend: what they say of the King and our Nation is so slanderous, that perit sua mole.

Further East, the Dutch hath taken many Townes, and playes the Mole better then he, and hath beaten him in many Sea-conflicts; he is declining on all sides, and a little weight on his head now laid, would sinke him. It is a matter of great consequence for future times; and though I haue no hope, I propound it to your ( ) to make what vse seemes best to your wisdoms. I haue reward enough, if I haue pardon for my talkatiuenesse, but it is obedience to your ( ) and not presumption, whose wisdoms and sinceritie I did euer honour, to whom I shall be happy to be tyed

My it please your ( ) &c. The frailtie of passage betweene this place and England, especially of my last Letter that wandred ouer Land, and rather went vpon discouery then businesse, aduise me to send your ( ) transcripts of them: not that there is contained any matter worthy your Honours leasure, but seeing you commanded mee to write, the relation of one to another, will somewhat cleare the whole discourse. For broken and vndependant pieces and fragments, haue little light in them, lesse pleasure and no profit: so that he that would doe any thing in this matter should write a history, and take it somewhat high, to shew the beginning and growth of this Empire, what fortunes and what impediments it hath overcome, what friendship it hath needed and effected, the ambitions and diuisions in the present state, that like impostumes lye now hid, but threaten to break out into the rending and ruine of the whole, by bloody war. The practises, subtilties and cariages of factions and Court-secrets, falsely called wisdoms, wherein I assure your ( ) they are pregnant, and excell in all that arte which the Diuell can teach them, and are behind none in wicked Craft, some passages whereof were not unworthy nor unpleasant to relate.

Iesuiticall beasts.Prouerb of English and Portugal.

Their Religions suffered by the King, and practised without enuie or contention on any part; how the Portugals haue crept into this Kingdome, and by what corners they got in; the entrance of the Iesuits, their intertainment, priuiledges, practises, ends, and the growth of their Church, whereof they sing in Europe so loud praises and glorious successes. Lastly, the arrivall of our Nation on this Coast, their fortunate or blessed victories ouer their enemies, that not only sought how to possesse these quarters by themselves, and to forbid all others that which Nature had left free, as if God had created the world for them onely, but also to abuse this people, as if they alone were the sonnes of warre; they only triumph, and that all other Europeans stricke saile to their fortune and valour, which now is brought so low in value, that it is growne into a prouerbe (one Portugall to three Moores, one Englishman to three Portugalls) so that the best foundation of their greatnesse is absolutely mined and blowne up. And our reception here stands on the same ground from which we haue cast them downe, which is Feare, an honorable, but vncertaine Base of so great a charge. For if either the enemy once preuaile, or other misfortune happen to vs, our welcome shall turne round with it, the profit and fitnesse of this trade for England, while it may stand, not only respecting the Company now intressed, but the state, whether the Common-wealth in generall lose or winne. For often in trafique private men prosper by detriment of the Republike, as in all trades that maintaine vanitie and sinne.

This worke or method were worthy some paines, and as would require a good iudgement and much time, both which are wanting to me; so it would not be unprofitable to reade, nor without some pleasure to view and meditate the diuers operations and workes of God, the variable constitutions and dispositions of men, and all things vnder their gouernment: but seeing nature and conueniencie haue denyed me ability and leasure, to set vpon so great a labour, I haue chosen one branch only to treat of to your ( ) without other method, then by way of bare relation, which is the estate of the Church heere, as well Christians, as of all other diffused sects of Infidels.

But to continue, as in a Parenthesis, the aduice I gaue your Honour in my last, of our constitution heere, and the newes of Persia: Briefely I stand on very sickle termes; though in extraordinary grace with the King, who is gentle, soft, and good of disposition, yet on points and disputes with an insolent and proud sonne of his, into whose hands he hath remitted all power, which hee is neither worthy nor able to manage. He is Lord of the Port, and by his folly gines me much trauell, so sordidly ambitious, that he would not haue me acknowledge his father King, nor make any addressees, nor deliuer any Presents nor complements of honour, but to himselfe; which I will neuer yeeld to, and so I maintaine my credit by confidence on the priuiledges of my quality, and the Kings goodnesse. Yet an Ambassadour in this Court that knowes himselfe, and will not wrong his Master, shall oftner winne enemies then friends. Their pride endures no termes of equality, especially where there is no other honour nor title, but what is measured by expence: so that to maintaine one that shall in his equipage and life hold proportion with his quality, in this Court, will cost much more then the profit of the Trade can spare; and he that liues under it wrongs his degree, and slides into contempt. I doe my utmost to hold up with little poore meanes, but my opinion is, a meaner instrument would better effect businesse of traffique that might creepe, and shew, and suffer some affronts, which my ranke may not endure: And I find the King of Spaine would neuer send any Ambassadour hither out of Greatnesse, knowing they are not receiued with proportionable honour and with my small experience I could doe the Company better seruice by my returne, in aduise how to gouerne the whole.

Concerning Persia, the Turke hath only yet made a Brauado, and performed little, the passages are stoppt, and the King drawing his armies into his Borders to defend himselfe, and finding no great worke, tooke occasion to take in by force a revolted Nation to the East of Babylon. The people are called Coords. How by the Ancients or the true Geographical situation of their Countrey, I am yet ignorant in.

Sir Robert Sherley by an ill passage to Goa, lost the opportunitie of the Fleete for Lisbon, and is stayed there another yeare, so that negotiation will not be so speedily aduanced, as I feared; we shall haue breath to worke upon it, according as it shall be requisite in the iudgement of your Honours in England, or at least of the Merchants whom it first regardeth.

Heere is arrived a Persian Ambassadour with little newes, it being nine moneths since his departure from Spahan. He brought many rich Presents, and did such obeysance, prostrating himselfe and knocking the ground with his head, that I beleene his Master will not accept of it, except (as is supposed) hee bee commanded to use a l'obsequiousnesse, and to flatter this Mon. of greatnesse, his errand being to procure money for ayde against the Turke: in which kind he findes often liberall supplies and succours, which is not felt from this sea of treasure; although to mediate a peace for the Kings of Decan be the pretence, whose protection the Persian takes to heart, iealous of the encrease of this Empire: yet I doubt not he will be satisfied with siluer, and suffer his Allyes to be overcome: he is not allowed so good ranke nor presence in Court as I, which got it by dispute, and haue kept it by contention to the displeasure of some; neither did the King do so much honour in reception of his Masters Letter, nor vouchsafing once to giue the Persian any title of Maiesty, as of my Soueraigne Lords, which not a little contented me. Other aduantages he hath of language, neighbour-hood and acquaintance, which are defects, but no faults of mine. The King is now ready to march towards Decan, whose Armie is commanded by his sonne, and wee with much toyle shall hang in the skirts.

Our Fleet arriuing this yeere 1616. in the way met the Admirall Carrick of Lisbon, bound for Goa, about Molalia, an Iland in twelue degrees North latitude, and haling her after the courtesie of the Sea, was requited with disgracefull languages, and sine great shot: which occasion apprehended, shee was fought with three dayes, at last put ashore and fired her selfe: shee was of burthen fiftene hundred tunnes, and by pregnant circumstances, the expected Vice-Roy sent for Goa, perished in her: which is one of the greatest disgraces and losses that euer happened to the Portugals in these parts: The reward of their owne insolencie in this fight. The chiefe Commander of the English was slaine, and the new declared maimed, little other losse. Thus your ( ) hath some touch of our affaires, and I will fall upon my purpose of the Church with your fauour and patience.

Before the inundation of Tamerlane the great, the ninth Ancestor of this King, these Countries were gouerned by diuers petty Gentile Princes not knowing any Religion, but worshipped according to their seuerall idolatries, all sorts of creatures. The Descendants of him brought in the knowledge of Mahomet, but imposed it upon none, by the Law of Conquest leauing consciences at libertie. So that these Naturals from the Circumcision (which came in with the Moores) called them Mogols or chiefe of the Circumcised. Among the Moores there are many strict Mahometants that follow Ally his Sonne-in-law, and other new risen Prophets which haue their Xeriffes, Mulas and Priests, their Mosques, Religious Votaries, Washings, Prayings, and Ceremonies infinite; and for Penetentiaries, no Heresie in the World can shew so strange Examples, nor bragge of such voluntarie pouerties, punishments, sufferings and chastisements as these; all which are esteemed holy men, but of a mingled Religion, not vpright with their great Prophet. The Gentiles are of more sorts, some valiant, good Souldiers, drinking Wine, eating Hog-flesh, but worshipping the figure of a Beast: some that will not touch that flesh which is not holy by imputation: others that will not eate any thing wherein euer there was any bloud, nor kill the Vermine that assaulteth them, nor drinke in the Cup with those that doe; Superstitious in Washing, and most earnest in their Profession, but all of them ascribe a kind of Diuinitie to the Riuer of Ganges, at which at one Season of the yeare foure or sine hundred thousand meete, and cast in Gold and Siluer for Oblation.

In like manner, to a Pigs head in a Church neere this Citie, and to all liuing Cowes, and to some other beasts and kinds. These haue their Synagogues, and Holy Men, Prophets, Witches, Sooth-sayers, and all others the Demits Impositions. The Molacs of Mahomet know some-what in Philosophy, and the Mathematickes are great Astrologers, and can talke of Aristotle, Euclide, Auerroes, and other Authors. The Learned Tongue is Arab.

In Ecbarsha.

In this Confusion they continued untill the time of Ecbarsha Father of this King, without any noyse of Christian profession, who being a Prince by nature iust and good, inquisitive after Nouelties, curious of new Opinions, and that excelled in many vertues, especially in pietie and reuerence towards his Parents, called in three Iesuites from Goa, whose chiefe was Ieronimo Xavier a Nauarrois. After their arrivall he heard them reason and dispute with much content on his, and hope on their parts, and caused Xavier to write a Booke in defence of his owne profession against both Moores and Gentiles: which finished he read over nightly, causing some part to be discussed, and finally, granted them his Letters Patents, to build, to preach, teach, conuert, and to vse all their Rites and Ceremonies, as freely and amply as in Rome, bestowing on them meanes to erect their Churches and places of Denotion: So that in some few Cities they haue gotten rather Templum, then Ecclesiam. In this Grant he gave grant to all sorts of people to become Christians that would, euen to his Court or owne bloud, professing that it should be no cause of disfaour from him. Heere was a faire beginning to a forward Spring of a leane and barren Haruest.

Templum sine Ecclesia.

Ecbarsha himselfe continued a Mahometan, yet he beganne to make a breach into the Law, considering that Mahomet was but a man, a King as he was, and therefore reuerenced; hee thought hee might proue as good a Prophet himselfe. This defection of the King spread not farre, a certaine outward reuerence detayned him, and so he dyed in the formall profession of his Sect.

* Vnderstand it in generall sense, for one not settled in any Religion, of all, and there ore of none.

Ghehangier-sha, his sonne, the present King, being the issue of this new fancie, and neuer circumcised, bred up without any Religion at all, continues so to this houre, and is an Atheist: sometimes he will make profession of Moore, but alwayes obserue the Holy-dayes, and doe all Ceremonies with the Gentiles too. He is content with all Religion, only he loues none that changeth: But falling into his Fathers conceit, hath dared to enter farther therein, and to professe himselfe for the maine of his religion, to be a greater Prophet then Mahomet, and hath formed to himselfe a new Law, mingled of all: which many haue accepted with such superstition, that they will not eate till they haue saluted him in the morning; for which purpose he comes at the Sunnes rising to a window open to a great plaine before his house, where multitudes attend him: and when the Moores about him speake of Mahomet, hee will sooth them, but is glad when any one will breake out against him. Of Christ he neuer utters any word unreuerently, nor any of those sects, which is a wonderfull secret working of Gods truth and worthy obseruation. Concerning the new planted Christian Church he confirmed, and enlarged all their priuiledges, euery night for one yeare spending two houres in hearing disputation, often casting out doubtfull words of his conuersion, but to wicked purpose.

Of this see before in the Journalls of Mister Hawkins and Finch.

And the rather to giue some hope, he deliuered many Youthes into the hands of Francisco Corrie, now resident heere, to teach them to reade and write Portugall, and to instruct them in humane learning, and in the Law of Christ; and to that end he kept a Schoole some yeares, to which the King sent two Princes, his brothers sonnes, who being brought up in the knowledge of God and his sonne our blessed Sauour, were solemnly Baptised in the Church of Agra with great pompe, being carryed first up and downe all the Citie on Elephants in triumph, and this by the Kings expresse order, who often would examine them in their progression, and seemed much contented in them: this made many bend towards the same way, doubting his Maiesties intention. Others that knew him better, supposed he suffered this in policie, to reduce these children into hate among the Moores for their conuersion, of whom consisted the strength of his estate, but all men failing of his purpose which was thus discovered. When these and some other children were settled, as was thought, in Christian Religion, and had learned some principles thereof, as to marry but one wife, not to be coupled with Infidels, the King sets the boyes to demand some Portugalls wines of the Iesuits, who thinking it only an idle motion of their owne braines, chid them, and suspected no more. But that being the end of their conuersion, to get a woman for the King and no care taken: the two Princes came to the Iesuits, and surrendered up their crosses and all other rights, professing that they would be no longer Christians, because the King of Portugall sent them no Presents nor wines, according as they expected. The Padre seeing this, began to doubt there was more in that then the boyes reuealed, especially seeing their confidence that had cast off the awe of Pupils, and examining the matter, had it confessed, the King commanded them. They refused to accept the crosses, answering they had been giuen by his Maiesties order, and they would not take notice from boyes of any such surrender, but bade them desire the King to send some of those, who by a kind of order are to deliuer all his Maiesties Commands, whose mouthes are by priuiledges sufficient authority, and then they would accept them; hoping, and knowing the Kings nature, that he would not discover himselfe to any of his Officers in this poore plot. The boyes returned with this message, which enraged the King; but hee being desirous to dissolue the Schoole, and to withdraw the youthes without noyse, he bade them call the Iesuits to the womens doore, where by a Ladie he receiued the order, and without taking any notice since of any thing, his kinsmen recalled, who are now absolute Moores, without any taste of their first faith, and so the fruit of all these hopes are vanished. And I cannot find by good search that there is one Christian really and orderly conuerted, nor makes the profession, except some few that haue been baptised for money, and are maintained by the Iesuits; of which sort there would be more, but that they find the deceit, and cannot endure the burthen. This is the truth of all their bragge and labour, and the full growth of their Church heere.

Conuerts how poore:

But that your ( ) may a little more vnderstand the fashion of the King and the Iesuits proceedings, I will make you one or two merry and late relations, and either say he is the most impossible man in the world to to be conuerted, or the most easie; for he loues to beare and hath so little religion, yet, that he can well abide to haue any decided.

Not many daies since the Iesuits house and Church being burned, the Crucifix remained safe, which under-hand was giuen out for a miracle, and much talked of. that would be content any use might be made of an accident to enlarge the name of Christ, held my peace: but the Iesuit suspecting I would not agree to the miracle, disanowed it to me, and made it a matter of reason, why it was not burned; insinuating that the Moores had caught up this opinion of miracle without his consent, or suggestion, though he confessed he was glad of the occasion.

Miracle.

But the King who neuer let slippe any opportunity of new talke or novelty, calls the Iesuit, and questioneth with him of it, he answereth ambiguously; whereupon his Maiesty demanded, if he did not desire to conuert him, and receiuing full answer, replied: You speake of your great miracles, and of many done by you, in the name of your Prophet: if yee will cast the Crucifix and Picture of Christ into a fire before me, if it burne not, I will become a Christian: The Iesuit refused the triall as vniust, answering, that God was not tyed to the call of men, that it was a sinne to tempt him, that he wrought miracles according to his owne Councell, but offered to enter the fire himselfe for prooffe of his faith, which the King refused. Heere arose a great dispute, begonne by the Prince, a most stiffe Mahometan, and haer of all Christians, that it was reasonable to trie our Religion by this offer, but withall, if the Crucifix did burne, then that the Iesuit should be obliged to render Moore: he urged examples of miracles professed to be done for lesse purposes then the conuersion of so mighty a King, and in case of refusall of the triall, spake scornfully of Christ Iesus. The King undertooke the argument, and defended our Sauour to be a Prophet, by comparison of his workes with those of their absurd Saints, instancing the raising of the dead, which neuer any of theirs did. The Prince replied, To giue sight to one naturally blind, was as great a miracle. This question being pressed hotly on both sides, a third man to end the controuersie, interposed that both the father and the sonne had reason for their opinions: for that to raise a dead body to life, must needs be confessed to be the greatest miracle euer done, but that to giue sight to an eye naturally blind, was the same worke, for that a blind eye was dead, sight being the life thereof: therefore he that gaue sight to a blind eye, did as it were raise it up from death.

Disputes of religion and miracles.

Thus this discourse ended, and so in wisdom should I: But I cannot leaue out an apish miracle which was acted before this King, which the Iesuites will not acknowledge, nor owne as their practise; onely of the truth de facto, there is no doubt. A Ingler of Bengula (of which craft there are many and rare) brought to the King a great Ape, that could, as he professed, diuine and prophesie: and to this beast by some sects is much diuinitie ascribed: The King tooke from his finger a Ring, and caused it to be hid under the girdle of one among a dozen other boyes, and bade the Ape diuine, who went to the right child, and tooke it out. But his Maiesty (somewhat more curious) caused in twelue severall papers in Persian letters, to be rewritten the names of twelue Lawgiuers, as Moles, Christ, Mahomet, Ally, and others: and shuffling them in a bagge, bad the beast diuine which was the true law: who putting in his foot tooke out the inscribed of Christ. This amazed the King, who suspecting that the Apes master could reade Persian, and might assist him, wrote them anew in Court Characters*, and presented them the second time: the Ape was constant, found the right and kissed it. Whereat a principall Officer grew angry, telling the King it was some imposture, desiring he might haue leaue to make the lots anew, and offered himselfe to punishment if the Ape could beguile him; he wrote the names putting only eleuen into the bagge, and kept the other in his hand. The beast searched, but refused all; the King commanded to bring one, the beast tore them in fury, and made signes the true Law-giuers name was not among them. The King demanded where it was, and he ran to the Noble-man and caught him by the hand, in which was the paper inscribed with the name of Christ Iesus. The King was troubled, and keepes the Ape yet. This was acted in publike before thousands: But where the abuse was, or whether there were any, I iudge not; only one of the Iesuits schollers ran to him with open mouth, professing the King had an Ape a good Christian. Of this accident the Iesuits make great account: to me they slight it, except the truth of the fact, which is not vnlike one of their owne games.

A strange story of an Ape.

* Court characters are such as he only and his nearer Ministers vied in Mysteries of State, unknowne to all others.

Your ( ) will pardon me all this folly, to interrupt you with so much and so vselfe tattle; I should be glad to remoue where I might learne and practise better matter: but I cannot repent my iourney: it hath made me learne and know my God and my selfe better then euer I should haue learned either among the pleasures of England; he hath wonderfully shewed me his mercy, and taught me his iudgement: his goodnesse be glorified and magnified for euer. I humbly desire your ( ) to present my name (I dare not say my seruice) before his Maiestie my Lord and Master: it is enough for me if I be not forgotten; I shall neuer merit nor aspire the employments of his fauour, but I will pay my vower, and pray for his Maiesty that he may liue a happie and glorious long life to the comfort of his Church, and enioy the Crowne of Crownes, prepared by the King of Kings for those that loue him; wherein I haue failed to your Honour, or by mine owne weaknesse, your ( ) will measure by this rule, Exigit & postulat amicitia non quod cuique dabitur, sed quod quisque efficere potest, and you will pardon the assuming so high a word as friendship, with this interpretation, Seruus est humilis amicus, which as I am bold to professe, I will be ready to demonstrate by obedience to your command,

A Letter of Sir THOMAS ROE, to another Right Honorable Councillor.

IF my last sent your Honour, by the way of Aleppo, be miscaried, this present discourse will be undependant and obscure, which causeth me to send a transcript that you may command from Sir Thomas Smith, how farre that designe of bringing in the Spaniard by Sherley had proceeded, and my poore opinion, that will informe with the present estate of the warres there in preparation: what hath succeeded, your Honour shall receive, that Sherley was stayed at Goa, by falling short eight dayes of his passage this last yeare, where he was entertained with honours and maintenance, which makes mee iudge his offers and negotiation is gracious. The Shabas yet so depends on that hope, that he continues the prohibition of exportation of Silkes thorow Turkie. 10

Some few dayes since I receiued aduise from Spahan, that Sherley hath written to the King, that with much ioy and ready embracement he hath so farre proceeded with the Vice-Roy of Goa, in a conclusion of the league, as his commission hath power, that he is ready to embarke for Spaine to accomplish it fully. If it proceed and take effect, I can make it euident, that it will renewe and strengthen all the ruines and decayes of the Portugals in the Indies, and make all other wauering Princes accept them; only I will not presse the consequence where it will be so fully understood.

the Turkes double.

The * Shabas is in the field at Salmas, a Village indifferent to the wayes to Tauris or Gordgeston, attending the Turkes Generall, who with a monstrous armie (if it be not encreased by fame) is incamped at Argerom, irresolute which of these two attempts he shall begin, being not above five dayes from the one, and ten from the other. But these great armies will dissolue of themselves, and I am of opinion there will be no great effect of them, the winter approaching: and that they will treat a peace, which the Turke will neuer embrace, but with the opening of the trade, & liberty of ancient commerce: which though the Persian yeeld vnto, yet if the Spaniard accepts his offers, the liberty given the Turke will be vuselesse, for that the Silkes shall come downe to Ormus; but I hope your Honour will prevent it, God hath provided you leasure. 20

The King of Persia lately enquired anew after the English, for he is indifferent what Christian hath the trade, so that the Grand-Signior lose it: for his first offer to the Spaniard, will take his truce, and after we may haue the leauings.

We haue sent to Ialques a ship from our Port of Surat, with Cloath and English goods, to make the first offer of a residence, and to get a kind of a possession: For where it was free to refuse or accept vs, it will be now an iniury to turne vs out, being come upon assurance of his Letter receiued by me. But though I did not consent to the going of this ship, because I knew both the Port unfit, the goods vnuendible, and preiudiciall to the great expectation and promises, which makes me feare the Shabas will despise vs, and iudge vs by this beginning, and so with the more roundnesse either conclude with the Spaniard, or make peace with the Turke (for his designe is either wholly to diuert the trade or nothing) yet I will mend it as well as I can, by the helpe of an Ambassador lately arriued at this Court; who, as I suppose, is come to get ayde of monoy, in which kind he often findeth liberall relieves, and this King of India may better spare then any Monarch of the East. 30

the Copies.

The aduantage to bee made of it in England, is (if I may giue my opinion) that when Sir Robert Sherley shall arriue in Spaine and negotiate his imployment, the Ambassadour of his Maiestie resident may craue audience, and produce the Letters granted to vs, and vrgue our possession of the Port; and therefore require in the name of his Maiesty, that in this new contract either the English may be comprehended, or at least that nothing passe on the part of the King of Spaine, preiudiciall to the subiects of his Maiestie, nor contrary to the amity of the two Nations: which if the Spaniard shall enterprise, to the expulsion of vs, it is in my opinion (the trade being in a free Kingdome granted vs) a iust cause of such a breach, as may produce Letters of Mart and reprisall in all the Easterne parts to right our selues. I will in the meane time amaze the Persian with as many doubts as I can infuse into him of the ( ) and hopes of vs. 40

In this Court which is now in the field towards the conquest of Decan (with an effeminate armie fitter to be a spoile, then a terror to enemies) I shall so farre effect my imployment, as to confirme our trade and people on equall conditions to the inhabitants and borne subiects, who suffer themselves, abuses of Gouernours which can neuer be remedied, but by an whole change of the regiment and forme of dominion. For the constancy I will no farther giue my word, then our owne prosperitie, and the others feare, and the Portugals feeblenesse shall confirme to vs. 50

The trade is profitable and fit for England, but no way understood by the Company how to effect it at best aduantage, and yet we haue done little but discover errors. I haue no power to meddle in that, but if I were at home ten dayes, I would doe them better seruice then heere in ten yeares. To prooue and demonstrate euery particular and circumstance, were rather the subiect of a Booke then of a Letter, but I will doe my part euery way, according to my ability, & iudgment faithfully and honestly. Besides (though they may think I speak for mine own ends) I assure your honor it is not fit to keep an Ambassador in this Court. I haue shuffled better out, and escaped and auoyded affronts and slauish customes clearer then euery did. I am allowed ranke above the Persian, but he out-strips me in rewards: his Master iues peere vs, but his Ma- 60

iestie commanded me to doe nothing unworthy the honour of a Christian King, and no reward can humble me to any basenesse. I see what the Perian does and suffers. I know one that would creepe and sue, might effect more businesse then I, for euery little matter cannot trouble the King; and his great men are more proud, and expect that from me I cannot giue them. The King of Spaine could neuer be drawne to send any, and their experience hath taught them, that besides he should not be receiued in honour correspondent to his quality, they knew an easier way to effect their ends. I shall not returne a rich man, and then many will condemne me for want of prouidence or wit to get it, but they know not the Indies, it growes heere in as rough wayes as in Europe. I will trust to the Company, and to my merit. I could write your Honour many remarkable accidents in this gouernment and Kingdome: all the policy and wicked craft of the Dinell is not practises alone in Europe, heere is enough to be learned or to be dispised, but you haue not leasure to entertaine so forraigne discourses; that part which may be worth knowing: as the proceeding of the Iesuits, the growth of their Church, and the commixture of this Kingdome with Europe by trade, and the allyes it embraces, if I find not leasure to put them into method, I will weary your Honour with them by a fire-side in broken pieces.

The Portugall pursues vs heere with virulent hatred, but God doth chastise him, and his pride sees it not. The Admirall Gallion bound for Goa, a vessell of fiftene hundred, armed with sixe hundred men falling among our Fleet, a small ship hailed her after the custome of the Sea, which shee requited with silence, except of her Ordnance: the Commander of our Fleet, Benjamin Ioseph, came up with her, and demanded reason, but was returned scorne, so that he began a fight, in which he lost his life. A new commission being opened, Humfrey Pepwell succeeded him, to his place and resolution, with the losse of his eye and other hurts, fought untill the Gallion hauing her Masts shot, ran ashore on Comara, an Iland inhabited by Moores, in the latitude of eleuen degrees, one and fiftie minutes, where the Generall Don Emanuel de Meneses, with three hundred escaped, but fired the ship, shee was very rich, and the succour of India this yeere: her companions were lost at sea, and on the fourteenth of Octob. there was no newes of any of them which were three ships, this is the greatest disaster and disgrace euer befell them, for they neuer mist their Fleet in September, nor lost any Vessell as this, which was reported inuincible, and without supplies they perish viterly. The Ilanders rifled the Generall and all his followers, and they are since arriued at Goa, naked and bare in the Gallion of Mosambiques, which had likewise beene dangered by a Hollander, but the neerenesse of the Port saued her. All these considered, me thinkes, the Heauens conspire the fall of the Portugall in this quarter, if his Maiestie would be pleased to bend onely his Royall countenance. But I shall (I hope) returne and not expect to see it effected in my time. I will intreate your Honour to preserue my name in the Kings memorie, not for any worthinesse, but an humble desire to serue him: and that you will be pleased to accept of my endenours, and esteeme me such as I am, one that loues and honours you; and that will pray to God as the best expression of my affection, to increase you in all worthy honour, and to blesse you with his holy spirit.

Your Honours humble, faithfull Seruant,

THOMAS ROE.

I humbly desire your Honor to do me the fauour to thanke Sir Thomas Smith, in my behalfe, that hee may find my gratitude to my Friends.

From the Campe of the Great Mogoll, Emperour of India,

Nouember 30. 1616.

Part of a Letter to the Companie of the East-India; Dated the three and twentieth of Nouember, 1616.

MY Honourable Friends, I receiued your Letter on the twelfth of October, 1616. from the Charles, safely arriued with foure ships at the barre of Surat, the six and twentieth of the former moneth, of what past at Sea. I doubt not you will receiue ample Relation, onely a little difference in the report of our Fleet, and the Portugals I will mention, that we began the fight, and that no Vice-Roy being sent this yeere, an ancient Souldier, Don Emanuell de Meneses, that had twice beene Generall of their Forces, was in the Admirall, who being beaten ranne herselfe ashore at Mosambique, and are now arriued at Goa. This Tale hangs very ill together, for that I know they first made fine shot, and that it is impossible they could passe from Aguzesia to Mosambique in a Canoa, or that the Inhabitants hauing robbed them, durst carrie them into their strength, or that all this could be effected, and newes of their arriuall came from Goa in so little time. So that my iudgement is, they make their Relation as neere ours as they can, and are loth to confesse truth, that either all perished, or the Vice-Roy, which were the greatest losse and dishonour euer happened to them in India.

I shall not need to write you any long Discourse of your Affaires, nor my opinion, for that in a continued

Iournall

Iournall I have set downe all passages, and send you the Copie of my Letters to your Factories, wherein many points are disputed and opened, from both which you may make best your owne collection and iudgement: for in them casually all your businesse is handled and discussed at full, and it may bee collected into such a method as you may sit at home, and see it at once.

But because some points in my last Letters, I followed at my first comming at others reports, which since I find vaine and frivolous, and others perhaps are unresolved in my generall Discourse, I will runne over the materiall points with brevity: for I extremely desire that you once understood the constitution of this Trade, how to governe and settle it, that by varietie of fond opinions you bee not counselled to unnecessary charge, nor fall into grosse errors and damage.

* Understand this, so long as they by force and armes oppose the English proceedings and seek to supplant them; as hitherto.

Concerning the aiding the Mogoll or coasting his subjects into the Red Sea, it is now uselesse, yet I made offer of your affections: but when they need not a courtesie, they regard it as a Dogge doth dry bread when his belly is full. The King hath peace with the Portugals, and will neuer make a constant warre, except first we displant them. Then his greatnesse will step in for a share of the benefit, that does not partake of the perill: when they have peace, they scorne our assistance, and speake as loud as our Cannon: if Warre oppresse them, they dare not put out under any protection, nor will pay for it. You must remove from you all thought of any other then a Trade at their Port, wherein if you can defend your selves leave them to their fortune; you can neuer oblige them by any benefit, and they will sooner feare you then love you. Your residence you need not doubt so long as you tame the Portugall; therefore awayde all other charge as unnecessary, that resists not him; he onely can preiudice you. For a Fort at my first arrivall, I received it as very necessary, but experience teacheth me, we are refused it to our advantage, if he would offer me ten. I would not accept one; first where the River is commodious, the Country is barren and untraded, the passages to parts better planted so full of Theeves, that the Kings authoritie availes not, and the strength of the hills assures them in that life, if it had bene fit for Trade, the Naturals would have chosen it; for they feele the incommoditie of a barren Haven: and it is argument enough of some secret inconvenience, that they make not use of it but if it were safe without the walls, yet is it not an easie worke to divert Trades, and to draw the resort of Merchants from their accustomed Marts, especially for our commoditie which is bought by parcels, and cannot be called staple. Secondly, the charge is greater then the Trade can leane, for to maintayne a Garrison will eat the profit; it is not an hundred men can keepe it. For the Portugall if he once see you undertake that course, will set his rest upon it to supplant you. Warre and Traffique are incompatible, by my consent, you shall no way ingage your selves but at Sea, where you are like to gaine as often as to lose: it is the begging of the Portugall, notwithstanding his many rich Residences and Territories, that hee keepe Souldiers that spend it; yet his Garrisons are meane. He neuer profited by the Indies, since he defended them. Observe this well.

It hath bene also the error of the Dutch, who seeke Plantation heere by the Sword, they turne a wonderfull stocke, they prowle in all places, they possesse some of the best, yet their dead payes consume all the gaine. Let this be received as a Rule, that if you will profit, seeke it at Sea, and in quiet Trade: for without Controuersie it is an error to affect Garrisons and Land Warres in India. If you made it ouely against the Naturall, I would agree: to make it for them they are not worth it, and you should be very wary how to ingage your reputation in it. You cannot so easily make a faire retrait as an on-set; one disaster would either discredit you, or interresse you in a Warre of extreme charge and doubtfull event. Besides, an action so subject to chance as Warre, is most vnfitly undertaken, and with most hazard, when the remotenesse of place for supply, succours and counsels, subject it to irrecoverable losse, for that where is most uncertaintie, remedies should be so much the neerer to occurre to all occasions. At Sea you may take and leane, your Designes are not published; the Road of Swally, and the Port of Surat, are fittest for you in all the Mogols Territorie, I have weighed it well and deliuer you that shall neuer bee disproved, you need no more, it is not number of Ports, Factories and Residences that will profit you, they will increase charge but not recompence it; the inconvenience of one respectively to your sales, and to the commoditie of Inuestants, and the well employment of your Seruants is all needfull, a Port to secure your ships, and a fit place to unlade will not be found together. The Road at Swally, during the season, is as safe as a Pond; Surat, Cambaya, Baroach, and Amadaur, are better traded then all India, and seated commodiously. The inconveniences are, the Portugals at Sea, and the landing of goods, to meet with which first you must bring to passe, that your lading bee readie by the end of September at your Port; which may be effected by a stocke before-hand, or by taking up money for three monethes, and so you may discharge and lade in one, and depart for excellent season for England, and the Enemy shall not haue time with force to offend you, nor will be newly arrived; and if the preparation be ancienter we shall know it. For the second, to land goods without danger of Frigats, and to saue the carriage ouer land, you must send a Pinnasse of threescore twine, with ten Peece that drawes but seuen or eight foot water, to passe up the River betwene Swally and Surat, and so your goods will be safe, and in your owne command to the Custome-house-Key; and it will a little awe the Towne; shee may proceed after according to your appointment.

The Commodities you sell passe least in that quarter, the goods you seeke being principally Indico and Cloth, no one place is so fit for both, and the lesse inconveniences are to bee chosen, of this you shall gather more at large my opinion and reasons, in my Iournall and Discourses to your Factors, perhaps some of them will contradict it: but I am not deceived, nor haue private ends, to keepe Factories to employ and aduance friends, the places and number of seruants I haue deliuered my indgement in, and could manifest the past errors, but not mend them. Sindu is possessed by the Portugals, or if it were free, were no fitter then Surat, nor safer: as it is, it will be more subiect to perill. Your Factors sent me foure or fise clauses out of your Commission, that concerned Persia, a Fort, a Plantation in Bengala, all which they knew were not of use: with no other purpose, proposition or resolution, they will acquaint me. They cannot abide I should understand or direct them, if they resolve of any thing in their opinion for your profit, and send to me, I will effect the Court part, but you will find in my Letters and Iournall how they use mee, which doubtlesse at first was sowed by some iealousie of yours which will cost you dearely.

For the settling your Traffique heere, I doubt not to effect any reasonable desire, my credit is sufficient with the King and your force will alway bind him to constancie; it will not need so much helpe at Court, as you suppose, a little countenance with the discretion of your Factors will with easie charge returne you most profit, but you must alier your stocke, let not your seruants deceive you, Cloth, Lead, Teeth, Quick-silver, are dead Commodities, and will neuer drin: this Trade, you must succour it by change, and you will find my opinion discussed in Letters. I haue this yeere past many difficulties by the perversesse of Sultan Caronne, Lord of Surat, but by Gods direction, I haue overcome them; Articles of treatie on equall termes I cannot effect, want of Presents disgraced me: but yet by Peees I haue gotten as much as I desired at once. I haue recovered all Bribes, Extortions, Debts made and taken before my time till this day, or at least at honorable composition. But when I deliuer the next gifts to the Mogoll, in the Princess absence, I will set on a new for a formall * contract, &c.

* That which followes, as other Letters also, I haue willingly omitted, as not so fit for vulgar Readers, being Mysteries of Commerce.

I Haue heard that Sir Thomas Roe at his Returne, desiring the Great Mogor or Mogoll, his Letters of Commendation to His Maiestie, easily obtayned that request, but found him very scrupulous where to set his seale; lest, if vnder, hee should disparage himselfe; if ouer, it might cause distast to the King; his resolution and preuention therefore was this, to send the Letter vnsealed, and the great Seale it selfe, that so His Maiestie might according to his owne pleasure affixe it. The Seale is Siluer; the type and forme whereof, contayning only the Mogols Genealogie from Tamerlane, in seuerall Circles, with the English Translation, I haue heere added.

The Description of the Great Mogols Seale.

CHAP. XVII.

A Letter of M<sup>r</sup>. THOMAS CORYAT, which traualled by Land from Ierusalem to the Court of the Great Mogol, written to M<sup>r</sup>. L. WHITAKER. To which are added pieces of two other, to entertayne you with a little Indian-Odcombian mirth.

Most deare and beloved Friend, Master L. W.
Anima dimidium mee.

From the Court of the most mightie Monarch, called the Great Mogol, resident in the Towne of Asmere, in the Orientall INDIA. Anno 1615.

Ordinall salutations in the Authour of saluation, IESVS CHRIST. Where I writ unto you last, I remember well; euen from Zobah, as the Prophet SAMUEL calleth it (2. Booke, Chap. 3. vers. 3.) that is, Aleppo, the principall Emporium of all Syria, or rather of the Orient World; but when, in truth I haue forgotten, for I keepe not Copies of my Letters, as I see most of my Country-men doe, in whatsoeuer place of the World I finde them. Howbeit, if my coniecture doe not much faile mee, I may affirme that it was about fifteene moneths since, about a moneth after, I returned unto Aleppo from Ierusalem, after which time, I remayned there three moneths longer, and then departed thence in a Carauan into Persia, passing the noble Riuer Euphrates (the chiefeft of all the irrigated Paradise, where-hence, as from their originall, the three other Riuers were deriued) about foure dayes iourney beyond Aleppo: on the further side of which, I entered Mesopotamia, alias Chaldea, for the Euphrates in that place determinateh Syria and Mesopotamia. There-hence I had two dayes iourney to Vr of the Chaldeans, where Abraham was borne, a very delicate and pleasant Citie. There I remayned foure dayes, dayes, but I could see no part of the ruines of the house, where that faithfull seruant of God was borne, though I much desired it. From thence, I had foure dayes iourney to the Riuer Tygris, which I passed also; but in the same place where I crossed it, I found it so shallow, that it reached no higher then the calfe of my legge: for I waded ouer it afoote. Now I well perceiue by my ocular experience, that Chal tea is named Melopotamia, for that it is inclosed with the foresaid Riuer. Traucto Tigride, I entred Armenia the greater: After that, Media the lower, and resided sixe dayes in the Metropolis thereof, heretofore called Ecbatana, the Summer seate of Cyrus his Court, a Citie est soone mentioned in the Scripture, now called Tauris, more wofull ruines of a Citie (sauiug that of Troy and Cyzicam in Natolia) neuer did mine eyes behold. When I seriously contemplated those 10 ipnata, the dolefull testimonies of the Turkish deuastations, I called to minde Ouids Verse:

Ludit in humanis diuina potentia rebus.

And that of HESIOD,

Τὰ δὲ ἀνθρώπων νόσφι δῖος ὕψις ἐφασμέντι.

From that, I had two dayes iourney to a Citie that in Strabos time was called Arfacia in Media the higher, now Casbin, once the Royall seate of the Tartarian Princes, foure dayes iourney from the Caspian Sea. From Casbin, I had three and twentie dayes to Spanan in Parthia, the place of 20 residence of the Persian King. But at my being there, he was in the Countrey of Gurgistan, ransacking the poore Christians there with great hostilitie, with Fire and Sword. There I remayned two moneths, and so with a Carauan travelled into the Easterne India, passing foure moneths and odde dayes, in my tranell betwixt that (through part of the true Persia, and a large tract of the noble and renowned India) and the goodly Citie of Lahor in India, one of the largest Cities of the whole Vniuerse, for it containeth at the least sixteene miles in compasse, and exceedeth Constantinople it selfe in greatness. But a dozen dayes before I came to Lahor, I passed the famous Riuer Indus, which is as broad againe as our Thames at London, and hath his originall out of the Mountayne Caucasus, so much ennobled by the ancient both Poets and Historiographers, Greeke and Latine; which Plato for curiositie sake, in his tranells of these parts went to see. It lyeth not farre from that 30 upon the Confinis of Scythia, now called Tartaria: My selfe also conceiuing some hope of seeing it before my finall farewell of India. I had almost forgotten one memorable matter to impart vnto you: About the middle of the way, betwixt Spanan and Lahor, iust about the Frontiers of Persia and India, I met Sir Robert Sherley and his Lady, travelling from the Court of the Mogol, (where they had benee very graciously receiued, and enriched with Presents of great value) to the King of Persia's Court; so gallantly furnished with all necessaries for their traualles, that it was a great comfort vnto me, to see them in such a flourishing estate. There did hee shew mee, to my singular contentment, both my Bookes neatly kept; and hath promised mee to shew them, especially mine Itinerarie, to the Persian King: and to interpret vnto him some of the principall matters in the Turkish Tongue, to the end I may haue the more gracious accessse vnto him, after my returne
40 thither. For thorow Persia I haue determined (by Gods helpe) to returne to Aleppo. Besides other rarities that they carried with them out of India, they had two Elephants and eight Antlepes, which were the first that euer I saw: but afterwards, when I came to the Mogols Court, I saw great store of them. These they meant to present to the Persian King. Both hee and his Lady vsed mee with singular respect, especially his Lady, who bestowed fortie shillings vpon mee in Persian money, and they seemed to exult for ioy to see mee, hauing promised mee to bring mee in good grace with the Persian King, and that they will induce him to bestow some Princely benefite vpon mee: this I hope will bee partly occasioned by my Booke, for hee is such a iocund Prince, that hee will not bee meanly delighted with diuers of my facetious burroughpicks, if they are truly and genuinely expounded vnto him.

50 From the famous Citie of Lahor I had twentie dayes iourney to another goodly Citie called Agra, through such a delicate and euen Tract of ground, as I neuer saw before; and doubt whether the like be to be found within the whole circumference of the habitable World. Another thing also in this way, being no lesse memorable then the plainnesse of the ground: a row of Trees on each side of this way where people doe trauell, extending it selfe from the Townes-end of Lahor, to the Townes-end of Agra; the most incomparable shew of that kind, that euer my eyes surueyed. Likewise, whereas there is a Mountayne some ten dayes iourney betwixt Lahor and Agra, but very neare ten miles out of the way, on the left hand: the people that inhabite that Mountayne, obserue a custome very strange, that all the brothers of any Family, haue but one and the selfe-same wife so that one woman sometimes doth serue sixe or seuen men: the like whereof I remember I haue read in Strabo, concerning the Arabians that inhabited 60 Arabia felix. Agra is a very great Citie, and the place where the Mogoll did alwayes (sauiug within these two yeares) keepe his Court but in euery respect much inferiour to Lahor.

From thence to the Mogols Court, I had ten dayes iourney, at a Towne called Asmere, where I found a Cape Merchant of our English-men, with nine more of my Country-men, resident there vpon termes of

of Negotiations, for the right Worshipfull Company of Merchants in London, that trade for East-India.

I spent in my iourney betwixt Ierusalem and this Mogols Court, fiftene monethes and odde dayes: all which way I trauesed afoote, but with diuers paires of shooes, hauing beene such a Propateticke, (I will not call my selfe Peripateticke, because you know it signifieth one that maketh a perambulation about a place, περιπατειν, signifying to walke about) that is a walker forward on foot, as I doubt whether you euer heard of the like in your life: for the totall way betwixt Ierusalem and the Mogols Court, containeth two thousand and seuen hundred English miles. My whole perambulation of this Asia the greater, is like to be a Passage of almost six thousand miles, by that time that in my returne backe thorow Persia, afterward also by Babylon and Niniue, I shall come to Cairo in Egypt, and from that downe the Nilus to Alexandria, there to be one day (by Gods helpe) imbarqued for Christendome; a very immense dimension of ground. 10

Now I am at the Mogols Court, I thinke you would bee glad to receiue some narration thereof from me, though succinctly handled: for I meane to be very compendious, lest I should otherwise preoccupate that pleasure, which you may hereafter this reape by my personall relation thereof. This present Trince is a very worthy person, by name Selim, of which name I neuer read or heard of any more then one Mahometan King, which was Sultan Selim of Constantinople, that liued about eightie yeeres since, the same that conquered Ierusalem, Damascus, Aleppo, Cairo, &c. adding the same to the Turkish Empire. He is fiftie and three yeeres of age, his natiuitie day hauing bin celebrated with wonderfull pompe since my arriuall heere: for that day he weighed himselfe in a paire of golden Scales, which by great chance I saw the same day (a custome that he obserues most inuicably euery yeere) laying so much Gold in the other Scale as counteruaileth the weight of his bodie, and the same he afterward distributed to the poore. He is of complexion neither white nor blacke, but of a middle betwixt them: I know not how to expresse it with a more expresse and significant Epitheton then Olive: an Olive colour his face presenteth: hee is of a seemely composition of bodie, of a stature little vnequall (as I guesse not without grounds of probability) to mine, but much more corpulent then my selfe. The extent of his Dominion is very spacious, being in circuit little lesse then foure thousand English miles, which very neere answereth the compasse of the Turkes Territories: or if any thing be wanting in Geometricall dimension of ground, it is with a great pleonasmie supplied by the fertilitie of his soile: and in these two things he exceedeth the Turkes, in the fatnesse (as I haue said) of his Land, no part of the World yeelding a more fruitfull veine of ground, then all that which lyeth in his Empire, sauing that part of Babylonia, where the terrestriall Paradise once stood: whereas a great part of the Turkes Land is extreame barren and sterile, as I haue obserued in my peregrination thereof, especially in Syria, Mesopotamia and Armenia; many large portions thereof being so wonderfull fruitlesse, that it beareth no good thing at all, or if any thing, there Infelix Iolium & Iteriles dominantur aenae. 30

Of his Reuenues and of all other things of this State, reade Captain Hawkins his Relations, who had better meanes and iudgement to know them. The Vnicornes are no other but the Rhinoceros.

Secondly, in the coniunction and vniou of all his Territories, together in one and the same goodly Continent of India, no Prince hauing a foot of Land within him. But many parcels of the Turkes Countries are by a large distance of Seas, and otherwise, diuided asunder. Again, in his Reuenue he exceedeth the Turke and the Persian his Neighbour by iust halfe: for his Reuenues are forty Millions of Crownes of six shillings value, by the yeere: but the Turkes are no more then fiftene Millions, as I was certainly informed in Constantinople; and the Persians sine Millions, plus minus, as I heard in Spahan. It is said that he is uncircumcised, wherein hee differeth from all the Mahometan Princes that euer were in the World. 40

He speaketh very reuerently of our Saniour, calling him in the Indian Tongue, Ifazaret Eesa, that is, the great Prophet, Iesus: and all Christians, especially vs English, he vseth so benenolently, as no Mahometan Prince the like. He keepeth abundance of wilde Beasts, and that of diuers sorts, as Lyons, Elephants, Leopards, Beares, Antlops, Unicornes; whereof two I haue scene at his Court, the strangest beasts of the World: they were brought hither out of the Countrey of Bengala, which is a Kingdome of most singular fertilitie within the compasse of his Dominion, about foure Moneths iourney from this, the midland parts thereof being watered by diuers Channels of the famous Ganges, which I haue not as yet scene, but (God willing) I meane to visit it before my departure out of this Countrey, the neere part of it being not aboue twelue dayes iourney from this Court. The King presenteth himselfe thrice euery day without faile to his Nobles, at the rising of the Sunne, which he adoreth by the eleuation of his hands; at noone, and at sine of the clocke in the euening: but he standeth in a roome aloft, alone by himselfe, and looketh vpon them from a window that hath an embroydred sumptuous couerture, supported with two siluer Pillasters to yeeld shadowe vnto him. Twice euery weeke, Elephants fight before him, the brauest spectacle in the World: many of them are thirteene foot and a halfe high; and they seeme to iustle together like two little Mountaines, and were they not parted in the midst of their fighting by certaine fire-workes, they would exceedingly gore and cruentate one another by their murdering teeth. Of Elephants the King keepeth thirtie thousand in his whole Kingdome at an unmeasurable charge; in feeding of whom and his Lions, and other Beasts, he spendeth an incredible masse of Money, at the least tenne thousand pounds sterling a day. I haue rid vpon an Elephant since I came to this Court, determining one day (by Gods leaue) to haue my Picture expressed in my next Booke, sitting vpon an Elephant. The King keepeth a thousand Women for his owne body, whereof the chiefe (which is his Queene) is called Normal. You may remember to relate this vnto your Friends, that I will now mention as a matter very 60 very memorable; I spent in my tenne Monethes travell betwixt Aleppo and the Mogolls Court, but three pounds sterling, yet fared reasonable well every day; victuals being so cheape in some Countries where I travelled, that I oftentimes lived competently for a penny sterling a day: yet of that three pound I was coozened of no lesse then tenne shillings sterling, by certaine lewd Christians of the Armenian Nation: so that indeed I spent but fiftie shillings in my tenne Monethes Trauailes. I haue bin in a Citie in this Countrey, called Detee, where Alexander the Great ioyned Battell with Porus King of India, and conquered him; and in token of his victorie, erected a Brasse Pillar, which remayneth there to this day. At this time I haue many Irons in the fire; for I learne the Persian, Turkish, and Arabian Tongues, hauing already gotten the Italian (I thanke God) I haue beene at the Mogolls Court three Monethes already, and am to tarrie heere (by Gods holy permission) five Monethes longer, till I haue gotten the foresaid three Tongues, and then depart here-hence to the Ganges, and after that, directly to the Persian Court.

Your assured louing Friend till death,

THOMAS CORYATE.

From the Court of the Great Mogoll, resident at the Towne of Asmere in the Easterne India, on Michaelmas day.
Anno 1615.

I Doe enioy at this time as pancraticall and athleticall a health, as euer I did in my life: and so haue done euer since I came out of England, sauing for three dayes in Constantinople, where I had an Ague, which with a little letting bloud was cleane banished, the Lord bee humbly thanked for his gracious blessing of health that he hath giuen unto mee. I was robbed of my money, both gold and siluer (but not all, by reason of certaine clandestine corners where it was placed) in a Citie called Diarbeck in Mesopotamia, the Turkes Countrey, by a Spabe, as they call him, that is, one of the Horse-men of the Great Turke; but the occasion and circumstance of that misfortune, would bee too tedious to relate. Notwithstanding that losse, I am not destitute of money I thanke God. Since my arrivall heere, there was sent unto this King one of the richest Presents that I haue heard to bee sent to any Prince in all my life time: it consisted of diuers parcels; one being Elphants, whereof there were one and thirtie, and of those, two so gloriously adorned, as I neuer saw the like, nor shall see the like againe while I live. For they wore foure chaines about their bodies all of beaten gold: two chaines about their legges of the same; Furniture for their buttockes of pure gold: two Lions upon their heads of the like gold: the ornaments of each, amounting to the value of almost eight thousand pound sterling: and the whole Present was worth ten of their Leakes, as they call them; a Leake being ten thousand pound sterling: the whole, a hundred thousand pounds sterling.

To the High Seneschall of the Right Worshipfull Fraternitie of Sireniacall Gentlemen, that meete the first Friday of euery moneth, at the signe of the Mermaid in Bread-street in London, giue these: From the Court of the Great Mogoll, resident at the Towne of Asmere, in the Easterne-India.

Right Generous, Ioniall, and Mercuriall Sirenaickes; I haue often read this Greeke Prouerbe, ἑλπίς ἑλπίς, that is, one hand washeth another, and the Latine, Mulus Mulum scabit, one Mule scratcheth another; by which the Ancients signified, that courtesies done unto Friends, ought to bee requited with reciprocall offices of friendship. The serious consideration hereof, doth make me to call to minde that incomparable elegant safe-conduct, which a little before my departure from England, your Fraternitie with a generall suffrage gaue me for the securitie of my future Peregrination, conuinnated by the pleasant wit of that inimitable Artizan of sweet Elegancie, the moytie of my heart, and the quondam Seneschall of the Noblest Societie, Master L. W.

Therefore since it is requisite that I should repay some-what for the same, according to the Lawes of humanitie: Such a poore retribution as I sent unto you from Aleppo, the Meirpolitan Citie of Syria, by one Master Henry Allare of Kent, my Fellow-pilgrime there-hence to Ierusalem; I meane a plaine Epistle, which I hope long since came unto your hands: I haue sent unto you by a man no lesse deare unto mee then the former, one Master Peter Rogers, a Kentish man also, from the most famigerated Region of

of all the East, the ample and large India: assuring my selfe, that because I am not able to requite your lone with any essentiall gratulations, other then verball and scriptall, you will as lovingly entertaine my poore Letters, being the certaine manifestation of an ingenuous minde, as if I should send unto you the minerall riches or Drugges of the Noble Countrey.

Thinke it no wonder I pray you, that I haue made no vse in all this space since I left my native Countrey, of the superexcellent Commeate; for I haue spent all my time hitherto in the Mahometan Countries, and am like to spend three yeeres more in these Musselman (as they call them) Regions of Asia, after of Europe, before I shall arrive in Christendome. For this cause I left it in Aleppo, with my Countermen, there to receive it from them againe, after that I shall haue ended my Indian and Persian perambulation: and there-hence to carrie it once more to Constantinople, and that by the way at Iconium, Nicæa, Nicomedia, and in the Countrey of Natolia, a iourney of fortie dayes. From that finally thorow the heart of Greece, by the Cities of Athens, Thebes, Corinth, Lacedæmon, Thessalonica, and to the Citie of Ragouze, heretofore Epidaurus, so sacred for the Image of Esculapius in the Countrey of Sclauonia, once called Illyricum; from thence I haue three dayes iourney to the inestimable Diamond set in the Ring of the Adriatique Gulfe, (as once I said in the first Harangue that euer I made to Prince Henrie of blessed memorie, translated since my departure from London, from the Terrestriall Tabernacles, to the Cœlestiall Habitations) venerous Venice, the Soueraigne Queene of the Mare superum: if the great Iehouah shall be so propitious unto me, as to grant me a prosperous arrivall in that Noble Citie, I will there beginne to shew your safe conduct, and to decantate, yea and to blazon your prayes for the same: and after in every other place of note, untill I shall arrive in glorious London, communicate it to the most polite, with that the Cities will yeeld, thorough which my laborious fecte shall carrie me, it would bee supernuacaneou to commemorate unto you the almost incredible extent of Land, I trauesed from Ierusalem to the Court of the Great Mogoll in India, where I now reside; with the variable Regions and Prouinces inter-iacent betwixt them, and the manifold occurrences and obseruations of speciall worke in this vaste Tract; for it would bee such a fastidious Discourse, that it could not be well comprehended in a large sheete of Paper: but Master Whitaker, I hope, I will not faile to import unto you in a few compendious Relations, which I haue acquainted him with, in a particular Letter to himselfe: of which, if I should haue written againe to you, it would haue proued Crambe bis cocta.

The Gentleman that bringeth this Letter unto you, was Pracher to the English Merchants, conuersant at the Court of the aforesaid mightie Monarch, in the Towne of Asinere in this Easterne-India: and in diuers louing offices hath bene so kind unto me, that I intreat your Generosities to entertaine him friendly for my sake, to exhilarate him with the purest quintessence of the Spanish, French and Rhenish Grape, which the Mermaid yeeldeth; and either one in the name of you all, or else the totall vniuersalitie of the one after another, to thanke him heartily, according to the qualitie of his merits. Farewell, Noble Sirenaickes.

Your Generosities most obliged Country-man, euer to be commanded by you, the Hierosolymitan-Syrian-Mesopotamian-Armenian-Median-Parthian-Persian-Indian Legge-stretcher of Odcomb in Somerset,

THOMAS CORYATE.

Pray remember the recommendations of my dutifull respect; to all those whose names I haue beere expressed, being the louers of Vertue, and Literature; and so consequently the wel-willers (I hope) of a prosperous issue of my designements, in my laborious pedestriall perambulations of Asia, Africa, and Europe.

Written with mine owne hand, at the Court of the Great Mogoll, Shaugh Selim, resident in the Towne of Asmere, in the umblicke of the Orientall India, the eight day of Nouember, being Wednesday, Anno Dom. 1615.

Inprimis, to the two Ladies Varney, the Mother and the Daughter, at Boswell House without Temple-barre,

2 Item, to that famous Antiquarie, Sir Robert Cotten, at his House in the Black-Friers. Pray tell him that I haue a very curious white Marble head of an ancient Heros or Gyant-like Champion, found out very casually by my diligent peruestigation amongst the ruines of the once renowned Citie of Cyzicum, mentioned by Cicero in his second Oration (if my memory doth not faile me) against Verres, situate in an Peninsula of Bythinia, in the goodly Countrey of Natolia, neere the Sea Propontis: to this head will his best Antiquities what soeuer veile bonnet.

3 Item,

- 3 Item, to that churteous, sweet, and elegant-natured and nurtured Gentleman, Master William Ford, Preacher to our Nation at Constantinople, if you happen to meet him in any part of England; one that deserueth better of me, then any man in all this Catalogue: for of him haue I learned whatsoeuer superficial skill I haue gotten in the Italian Tongue: pray reduplicate my commendations vnto him.
- 4 Item, to Master George Speake, my generous and ingenuous Countrey-man, the Sonne and heire apparant of Sir George Speake, in Somerset-shire; him you are like to find in any Terme, either at the Middle-Temple, or in some Barbers house neere the Temple.
- 5 Item, to Master Iohn Donne, the Author of two most elegant Latine Bookes, Pseudo-martyr, and Ignatij Conclaue: of his abode either in the Strand, or else-where in London, I thinke you shall be easily informed by the meanes of my friend, Master L. W.
- 6 Item, to Master Richard Martin, Counseller, at his Chamber in the Middle-Temple, but in the Terme-time, scarce else.
- 7 Item, to Master Christopher Brooke of the Citie of Yorke, Counseller, at his Chamber in Lincolnes Inne, or neere it.
- 8 Item, to Master Iohn Hoskins, alias Equinoctiall Pasticraft, of the Citie of Hereford, Counseller, at his Chamber in the Middle-Temple.
- 9 Item, to Master George Garrat; of whose beeing you shall understand by Master Donne aforesaid.
- 10 Item, to Master William Hackwell, at his Chamber in Lincolnes Inne.
- 11 Item, to Master Benjamin Iohnson the Poet, at his Chamber at the Black-Friers,
- 12 Item, to Master Iohn Bond my Countrey-man, chiefe Secretarie vnto my Lord Chancellor.
- 13 Item, to Master Doctor Mocket, resident perhaps in my Lord of Canterburies house at Lambeth, where I left him.
- 14 Item, to Master Samuel Purchas, the great Collector of the Lucubrations of sundry Classicall Authors, for description of Asia, Africa, and America. Pray commend me vnto him and his wifes Master Cooke, by the same token, that he gaue me a description of Constantinople, and the Thracius Bosporus, written in Latine by a French-man, called Petrus Gillius: which Booke, when I carried once in an after-noon under mine arme, in walking betwixt our English Ambassadors House in Pera, on the opposite side to Constantinople, and the Flemish Ambassadors house, I lost it very unfortunately to my great grieve, and neuer found it againe, &c.

There is another and later Letter of his to his Mother, written the last of October 1616. part of which for the Odecombian stile and Coryaticall straine, I haue hither transcribed. Great pitie it is that his voluminous Obseruations of his foot Pilgrimage, longer then perhaps of any man euer hath bin in that kind, are either lost, or at least not come to some discreet hand, which might, no doubt, distill good instructions thence for the publike, as sweet fresh water out of the huge salt Ocean.

Some written Notes of his, it pleased Sir Thomas Roe to giue me, whence (omitting such things as before you haue had in Sir Thomas Roes owne Obseruations) I haue inserted a few, following this Letter.

From Agra, the Capitall Citie of the Dominion of the Great Mogoll in the Easterne India, the last of October 1616.

Most deare and wel-beloued Mother, though I haue superscribed my Letter from Asmere, the Court of the greatest Monarch of the East, called the Great Mogoll in the Easterne India, which I did to this end, that those that haue the charge of conueyance thereof, perceiuing such a title, may bee the more carefull and diligent to conuey it safe to your hands: yet in truth the place from which I wrote this Letter, is Agra, a Citie in the said Easterne India, which is the Metropolitan of the whole Dominion of the fore-said King Mogoll, and ten dayes iourney from his Court at the said Asmere. From the same Asmere I departed the twelfth day of September An. 1616. after my abode there twelue moneths and sixtie dayes; which though I confesse it were a too long time to remaine in one and the selfe-same place, yet for two principall causes it was very requisite for me to remaine there some reasonable time: first, to learne the Languages of those Countries, through which I am to passe betwixt the bounds of the Territories of this Prince and Christendome, namely these three, the Persian, Turkish, and Arab: which I haue in some competent measure attained vnto by my labour and industry at the said Kings Court, matters as amiable vnto me as money in my Purse, as being the chiefest, or rather only meane to get me money, if I should happen to be destitute, a matter very incidentall to a poore Foot-man Pilgrim, as my selfe, in these Arabian and Mountain Countries, thorow which I trauell. Secondly, that by the helpe of one of those Languages, I might both procure vnto my selfe accessse vnto the King, and be able to expresse expresse my mind unto him about the matter for the which I should haue occasion to discourse with him. These were the reasons that moued me so long to tarry at the Mogols Court, during which time, I abode in the house of the English Merchants, my deare Countrymen, not spending one little piece of money either for dyet, washing, lodging, or any other thing. And as for the Persian tongue, which I studied very earnestly, I attayned to that reasonable skill, and that in a few moneths, that I made an Oration unto the King before many of his Nobles, in that language, and after I had ended the same, discoursed with his Maiestie also in that tongue very readily and familiarly; the Copy of which speech, though the tongue it selfe will seeme to an English-man very strange and vnconth, as hauing no kind of affinitie with any of our Christian languages, I haue for newelie sake written out in this Letter, together with the translation thereof in English, that you may shew it to some of my learned friends of the Clergie, and also of the Temporaltie, in Euill, and elsewhere, who belike, will take some pleasure in reading so rare and vnusuall a tongue as this is. The Persian is this that followeth.

The Copie of an Oration that I made in the Persian tongue to the Great Mogol, before diners of his Nobles.

Lord * Protector of the World, all haile to you : I am a poore Traueller and World-seer, which am come hither from a farre countrey, namely England, which ancient Historians thought to haue beene situated in the farthest bounds of the West, and which is the Queene of all the Islands in the World. The cause of my comming hither is for foure respects. First, to see the blessed face of your Maiestie, whose wonderfull fame hath resounded ouer all Europe, and the Mahometan Countreies. When I heard of the fame of your Maiestie, I hastened hither with speed, and trauelled very cheerfully to see your glorious Court. Secondly, to see your Maiesties Elephants, which kind of beasts I haue not seene in any other Countrey. Thirdly, to see your famous Riuer Ganges, which is the Captayne of all the Rivers of the World. The fourth is this, to entreate your Maiestie that you would vouchsafe to grant me your gracious Passe, that I may trauell into the Countrey of Tartaria to the Citie of Samarcand, to visit the blessed Sepulchre of the Lord of the Corners (this is a title that is given to Tamberlaine in this Countrey, in that Persian language : and whereas they call him the Lord of the Corners, by that they meane, that he was Lord of the corners of the World, that is, the highest and supreme Monarch of the Vniuerse : ) whose fame, by reason of his Warres and Victories, is published ouer the whole World : perhaps hee is not altogether so famous in his owne countrey of Tartaria, as in England. Moreover, I haue a great desire to see the blessed Tombe of the Lord of the Corners for this cause ; for that when I was at Constantinople, I saw a notable old building in a pleasant Garden neare the said Citie, where the Christian Emperour that was called Emanuel, made a sumptuous great Banquet to the Lord of the Corners, after he had taken Sultan Bajazet, in a great battell that was fought neere the Citie of Brusia, where the Lord of the Corners bound Sultan Bajazet in fetters of gold, and put him in a Cage of yron. These foure causes moued me to come out of my native Countrey thus farre, hauing trauelled afoote, thorow Turkie and Persia, so farre haue I traced the World into this Countrey, that my Pilgrimage hath accomplished three thousand miles, wherein I haue sustayned much labour and toyle, the like whereof no mortall man in this World did euer performe, to see the blessed face of your Maiestie, since the first day that you were inaugurated in your glorious Monarchall Throne. After

After I had ended my Speech, I had some short discourse with him in the Persian Tongue, who amongst other things told me, that concerning my travell to the Citie of Samarcand, he was not able to doe me any good, because there was no great amity betwixt the Tartarian Princes and himselfe, so that his commendatory Letters would doe me no good. Also he added, that the Tartars did so deadly hate all Christians, that they would certainly kill them when they came into their Countrey. So that he earnestly dissuaded me from the iourney, if I loved my life and well fare; at last, he concluded his discourse with me, by a summe of money, that he threw downe from a window, thorow which he looked out into a sheet tied up by the foure corners, and hanging very neere the ground, an hundred pieces of siluer, each worth two shillings sterling, which counteruailed ten pounds of our English Money: this businesse I carried so secretly by the helpe of my Persian, that neither our English Ambassadour, nor any other of my Countymen (saving one speciall, private, and intrinsicall friend) had the least inckling of it, till I had thoroughly accomplished my designe: for I well knew that our Ambassador would haue stopped and barracadoed all my proceeding therein, if he might haue had any notice thereof, as indeed hee signified vnto me, after I had effected my project, alleaging this, forsooth, for his reason, why hee would haue hindered me, because it would redound somewhat to the dishonour of our Nation, that one of our Countrey should present himselfe in that beggerly and poore fashion to the King, out of an insinuating humour, to craue Money of him: But I answered, our Ambassadour in that stout and resolute manner, after I had ended my businesse, that he was contented to cease nibbling at me, neuer had I more need of Money in all my life, then at that time: for in truth I had but twentie shillings sterling left in my Purse, by reason of a mischance I had in one of the Turkes Cities called Emert, in the Countrey of Mesopotamia, where a Mischance Turke stripped me of almost all my Monies, according as I wrote vnto you in a very large Letter the last yeare, which I sent from the Court of this mightie Monarch, by one of my Countymen that went home by Sea in an English ship, laden with the Commodities of this India, which Letter, I hope, came to your hands long since. After I had bene with the King, I went to a certaine Noble and Generous Christian of the Armenian Race, two dayes iourney from the Mogolls Court, to the end to obserue certaine remarkeable matters in the same place, to whom, by meanes of my Persian Tongue, I was so welcome, that he entertayned me with very ciuill and courteous complement; and at my departure gaue mee very bountifully twenty pieces of such kind of Money as the King had done before, counteruailing fortie shillings sterling. About tenne dayes after that, I departed from Asmere, the Court of the Mogoll Prince, to the end to begin my Pilgrimage, after my long rest of fourtene Moneths, backe againe into Persia, at what time our Ambassadour gaue mee a piece of Gold of this Kings Coyne worth foure and twentie shillings, which I will saue (if it bee possible) till my arrivall in England: so that I haue receiued for beneuolences, since I came into this Countrey, twentie markes sterling, saving two shillings eight pence, and by the way, upon the confines of Persia, a little before I came into this Countrey, three and thirtie shillings foure pence in Persian Money, of my Ladie Sherley: at this present I haue in the Citie of Agra, where-hence I wrote this Letter, about twelue pounds sterling, which according to my manner of liuing upon the way, at two pence sterling a day, (for with that proportion I can live pretty well, such is the cheapnesse of all eatable things in Asia, drinkable things costing nothing, for seldome doe I drinke in my Pilgrimage any other liquour then pure water) will maintaine me very competently three yeeres in my travell, with meate, drinke and cloathes. In this Citie of Agra, where I am now, I am to remaine about sixe weekes longer, to the end to expect an excellent opportunity, which then will offer it selfe vnto me, to go to the famous Riuer Ganges, about five dayes iourney from this, to see a memorable meeting of the gentle people of this Countrey, called Banians, whereof about foure hundred thousand people go thither of purpose to bathe and shauie themselves in the Riuer, and to sacrifice a world of Gold to the same Riuer, partly in stamped Money, and partly in massie great lumpes and wedges, throwing it into the Riuer as a Sacrifice, and doing other strange Ceremonies most worthy the obseruation. Such a notable spectacle it is, that no part of all Asia, neither this which is called the great Asia, nor the lesser, which is now called Natolia, the like is to be seene; this shew doe they make once euery yeare, comming thither from places almost a thousand miles off, and honour their Riuer as their God, Creator and Saviour; Superstition and Impietie most abominable in the highest degree of these brutish Ethnicks, that are aliens from Christ and the Common-wealth of Israel. After I haue seene this shew, I will with all expedition repaire to the Citie of Lehor, twentie dayes iourney from this, and so into Persia, by the helpe of my blessed Christ, &c.

Your dutifull, louing and obedient Sonne, now a desolate Pilgrime in the World,

THOMAS CORYATE.

A great Raja a Gentile, a notorious Atheist, and contemner of all Deitie, glorying to professe he knew no other God then the King, nor beleeuing nor fearing none: sitting dallying with his women, one of them plucked a haire from his brest, which being fast rooted, plucked off a little of the skinne, that blood appeared; this small skarre festered and gangrened incurably, so that in few dayes he despaired of life, and beeing accompanied with all his friends and diuers Courtiers, he brake out into these excellent words: Which of you would not haue thought that I being a man of Warre, should haue dyed by the stroke of a Sword, Speare or Bow? but now I am inforced to confesse the power of that great God, whom I haue so long despised, that hee needs no other Lance then a little haire to kill so blasphemous a wretch, and contemner of his Maiestie, as I haue beene.

Echar iugling!

Echar Shagh had learned all kind of Sorcery, who beeing once in a strange humour to shew a spectacle to his Nobles, brought forth his chiefeest Queene, with a Sword cut off her head, and after the same perceiuing the heauinesse and sorrow of them, for the death of her (as they thought) caused the head, by vertue of his Exorcismes and Coniunctions, to be set on againe, no signe appearing of any stroke with his Sword.

Wiuelly fidelity

Sultan Cursaroo hath but one Wife, for which one principall reason is, that during his imprisonment, the King intending to make a hunting Progresse of foure moneths, consulted how to keepe him safe in his absence; at last resolved to build a Towre, and immure him within it, without gate, doore or window, except some small holes to let in Ayre higher then he could come vnto; putting in all sorts of prouision whatsoeuer, both fire, clothes, &c. with some seruants to abide with him for that time. While this was building, his Wife came and fell at the Kings feete, and neuer would let goe till shee had obtayned leaue to bee shut vp with him: the King much perswading to enioy her libertie; she vtterly refused any other comfort, then to be the companion of her Husbands miseries; amongst which this was the greatest, that if any of those that were immured, beeing in number fiftie, should haue dyed in the Kings absence, there was no meanes to burie them, for that no man was admitted to come neere the Towre.

The Fountaine found the first day by one of my Lords people, Master Herbert, brother to Sir Edward Herbert, which if he had not done, he must haue sent ten Courie euery day for water, to a Riuer called Narbode, that falleth into the Bay of Cambaya at Buroch; the custome being such, that whatsoeuer Fountaine or Tanke is found by any great man in time of drought hee shall keepe it proper and peculiar to himselfe, without the interruption of any man whatsoeuer. Echar pietie.

Echar Shagh, a very fortunate Prince and pious to his Mother: his pietie appearing in this particular, that when his Mother was carried once in a Palankeen betwixt Labor and Agra, he traouelling with her, tooke the Palankeen vpon his owne shoulders, commanding his greatest Nobles to doe the like, and so carried her ouer the Riuer from one side to the other, and neuer denied her any thing, but this, that shee demanded of him, that our Bible might be hanged about an Alles necke, and beaten about the Towne of Agra, for that the Portugals hauing taken a ship of theirs at Sea, in which was found the Alcoran amongst the Moors, tyed it about the necke of a Dogge, and beat the same Dogge about the Towne of Ormuz: but hee denied her request, saying, That if it were ill in the Portugals to doe so to the Alcoran, being it became not a King to requite ill with ill, for that the contempt of any Religion, was the contempt of God, and he would not be reuenged vpon an innocent Booke: the morall being, that God would not suffer the sacred Booke of his Truth to be contemned amongst the Infidels.

Profligate lust:

One day in the yeere, for the solace of the Kings Women, all the Trades-mens Wiues enter the Mohal with some-what to sell, in manner of a Faire, where the King is Broker for his Women, and with his gaines that night makes his supper, no man present, (obserue that whatsoeuer is brought in of virill shape, as instance in Reddishes, so great is the iealousie, and so frequent the wickednesse of this people, that they are cut and iagged for feare of conuerting the same to some vnnaturall abuse) by this meanes hee attaines to the sight of all the prettie Wenches of the Towne: at such a kind of Faire he got his beloued Normahal.

After

After Shaoof Freed had wonne the Battle of Labor by a stratagem, the Captaines being taken by the King, and hanged vpon Flesh-hooks and Stakes, made an entrance for the King to Labor, his sonne Cusuroo being then taken Prisoner, and riding bare-footed vpon an Elephant; his Father demanded him how hee liked that Spectacle of his valiant and faithfull Captaines hanging in that manner, to the number of two thousand: hee answered him, that hee was sorrie to see so much Crueltie and Iniustice in his Father, in executing them that had done nothing but their dutie; for that they liued vpon his Bread and Salt: but hee should haue done right if hee had saved them, and punished him which was their Master, and the Authour of the Rebellion.

10 For more cleere declaration of this excellent vertue vpbraiding the coldnesse of our Charitie, you shall vnderstand a custome of this King, who sleeping in his Gusle-can, often when hee awakes in the night, his great men (except those that watch) being retired, calls for certaine poore and old men, making them sit by him, with many questions and familiar speeches passing the time, and at their departure cloathes them, and giues them bountifull Almes often, whatsoever they demand, telling the money into their hands.

The Kings external charity. Hee had added heere of the Kings respect to two-fold Daruses which you haue before in Sir T. Roe.

For a close of this Discourse, I cannot forget that memorable Pietie, when at Asmere hee went afoot to the Tombe of the Prophet Hod. Mundin there buried, and kindling a fire with his owne hands, and his Normahal, vnder that immense and Heidelbergian-aquipollent Brasse-pot, and made Kitcherie for five thousand poore, taking out the first Platter with his owne hands, and 20 seruing one; Normahal the second, and so his Ladies all the rest. Cracke mee this Nut, all the Papall Charitie vaunters.

An Armenian desirous to turne Moore, procured a Noble-man to bring him to the King, whom the King asked why hee turned Moore, whether for preferment? hee answered, No. Some few Monethes after crauing some courtesie of the King, hee denyed it him, saying, That hee had done him the greatest fauour that could bee, to let him saue his soule, but for his bodie hee himselfe should prouide as well as he could.

The King likes not shifters of Religion.

The King likes not those that change their Religion, hee himselfe beeing of none but of his owne making, and therefore suffers all Religions in his Kingdome. Which by this notable example I can make manifest: The King had a Seruant that was an Armenian, by name Scander; to whom vpon occasion of speech of Religion, the King asked if hee thought either hee or the Padres had conuerted one Moore to bee a true Christian, and that was so for conscience sake, and not for money: who answered with great confidence, That hee had one which was a perfect Christian, and for no worldly respect would bee other, whom the King caused presently to bee sent for: and bidding his Master depart, demanded why hee was become a Christian, who rendred certaine feeble, implicate, Iesuiticall Reasons, and auowed that hee would neuer be other: whereupon the King practised by faire speeches and large promises, to withdraw him to the folly of Mahomet, offering him Pensions, meanes, and command of Horse, telling him hee had now but foure Rupias a Moneth Wages, which was a poore Reward for quitting his, prapuced faith; but if hee would recant, hee would heape vpon him 40 many Dignities: the Fellow answering, it was not for so small Wages hee became Christian, for hee had limbes, and could earne so much of any Mahometan, but that hee was a Christian in his heart, and would not alter it. This way not taking effect, the King turned to threatnings, and menacings of Tortures and Whippings; but the Profelyte manfully resolving to suffer any thing, answered, hee was readie to endure the Kings pleasure. Vpon this resolution, when all men expected present and seuerer castigation, the King changed his tune, highly commending his constancie and honestie, bidding him goe and returne to his Master, and to serue him faithfully and truly, giuing him a Rupia a day Pension for his Integrity. About two Monethes after, the King hauing beene a hunting of wilde Hogges, a beast odious to all 50 Moores, and accustomed to distribute that sort of Venison among Christians and Razbootes, sent for this Armenian, Master of this conuerted Catechumen or Mahometan, to come and fetch part of his Quarrie. The Armenian not beeing at home, this his principall Seruant came to know the Kings pleasure, who commanded him to take vp a Hogge for his Master, which no Moore will touch; which hee did, and being gone out of the Court-gate, was so hooted at by the Mahometans, that hee threw downe his Present in a Ditch, and went home, concealing from his Master what had passed. About foure dayes after the Armenian comming to his watch, the King demanded of him whether the Hogge he sent him were good meat or no; who replied, hee neyther heard of, nor see any Hogge: whereat the King remembring to whom this Hogge was deliuered, caused the fellow to be sent for, and examining the matter, had it confessed how he threw away the Hogge, and neuer carryed it home: the King pressing to know the reason, the poore fellow answered how he was mocked for touching it, and it being a thing odious to the Moores, for shame he threw it away: at which he replied, By your law there is no difference of meats, and are you ashamed of your lawes? or to flatter the Mahometans, doe you in outward things forsake it? now I see, thou art neither good Christian, nor good Mahometan, but a dis- 60

sembling knave with both, while I found thee sincere, I gaue thee a pension, which now I take from thee, and for thy dissimulation doe command thee to haue a hundred stripes, which were presently giuen him in stead of his money, and bade all men by his example take heed, that seeing hee gaue libertie to all Religions, that which they choose and professe, they may sticke vnto.

I had thought at first to haue finished all these Indian Voyages in this fourth Booke: but perceiving it to grow into such greatnesse, and withall such great alterations as the Turkish Trade at Moha, and especially the Persian at Iasques, haue caused in the English Trade, with the contrary Attempts of the Portugals, and chiefly the Dutch, (before no good Friends, and there the worst of Enemies) to the English-Indian Trade; I thought fit to make thereof a fifth Booke.

August 17.

As I haue beene euer an enemy to the Portugals, so doe I purpose to continue for euer: I doe hereby faithfully promise to be and continue a friend to the English, and my Successors after mee: to endeavour the taking in of the Fort of Cranganor, and to possesse the English thereof, as their owne, with the Island thereof, which is in length on the Sea-coast nine miles, and in breadth three.

Provided, that I purpose to build therein a house for some of my owne people, to the number of one hundred persons.

I will also endeavour, with the ayde of the English, hereafter to take in the Fort and Towne of Cochinchin, belonging formerly to my Crowne and Kingdome, and then to deliuer it into the possession of the English, as their owne proper lands and possessions: Provided, that the charge of the surprize be equally borne, the one halfe by my selfe, the other by the English Nation: and the benefit of the spoyle thereof, in whatsoeuer qualitie, the one halfe to belong to me, the other halfe to the English Nation.

The Samorine to haue no right, title or interest in the aforesaid Towne, Precincts, or appurtenances of Cochinchin at all.

And the Samorine doth also covenant for himselfe, his Heires and Successors, that the whole Trade of the English, in whatsoeuer commodities brought in, or carryed out, shall pay, yeeld or allow no manner of custome, imposition, taxe, toll, or any other duty of whatsoeuer qualitie.

And to these Covenants, which the shortnesse of time did not permit to amplifie: I the Samorine haue religiously sworn by the great God I serue, to performe accordingly, and that not only for my selfe, but for my Successors after me: and in witnesse hereof, haue laid my hand upon this writing.

And the said William Keeling doth promise to acquaint the Kings Maiestie with the premisses, and to endeavour his Maiesties undertaking thereof accordingly.

A Stocke was made, as the State present permitted, and three Factors appointed, George Woolman chiefe, Peter Needham, one of the Generalls seruants, second; my selfe (Roger Hawes) third, Edward Peake, a Youth attendant, and to learne the language; and John Stamford a Gunner, to assist the Samorine, if need required in his warres. On the tenth, the ships departed, leauing vs in a shrambe at the waters side, with our goods and a Present for the Samorine, where wee continued till the thirteenth, at which time the last of our goods were carryed to the Samorines Castle: whom thus possessed of our goods, we much suspected.

On the twentieth, hee would needs see Master Woolmans Trunke, supposing wee had store of money (Needham had told him wee had five hundred Ryalls of eight) and finding little aboute fiftie Ryalls, he would needs borrow fifty, which wee could not deny him, and offered a pawne not worth halfe, which we refused to take, hoping after this money lent: hee would permit vs to depart for Calicut, but found delayes. He also vrged vs to giue his brother a Present.

On the eight and twentieth, he came vp into the Chamber where we were, and gaue Master Woolman two Gold-rings, and to euery of the rest one: and the next day called vs to the sight of his tumbling sports. The same night Stamford went out with his sword in his hand, telling the Boy hee would come againe presently, and the next newes we heard of him, was that hee was met with by the King of Cockins Nayros, hauing lost himselfe (being drunke) they demanded whither he would go, he said to the Samorines, whither they vnderooke to bring him, and hee knew not himselfe betrayed till he came at Cochinchin. This put vs in great feare, but the Samorine gaue vs good words, saying, he had rather now find him a knaue, then when hee should haue put trust in him.

In Aprill, we got liberty to depart with our goods for Calicut, where the two and twentieth we arriued, and were kindly entertained: but were faine to stay in the Custome-house, till wee might get a more conuenient house, which was made ready for vs the sixt of May, with promise of a better after the Raines. Faine would we, according to the Generall his order, haue sent a messenger with his and our Letters to Surat, to acquaint our Countreimen with our being heere: but the Gouvernour would not content till wee had sold our goods, for their better encouragement.

On the eighteenth, one was sent. Part of the goods were sold by the Gouvernours procurement, to the Merchants at Calicut, soone after on the six and twentieth, and faire promises of part of payment shortly; but it is not the custome of best or worst in this countrey, to be as good as their word, being certaine only in dissembling. Master Woolman was desirous to go to Nassapore to make sale, but the Gouvernour put him off with diuers shifts from time to time.

The third of Iuly, the messenger sent for Surat returned with reports, that being well onward on his way, hee was set vpon, beaten, his money and Letters taken from him: amongst which was a letter of Generall Keeling to the next Generall, which grieved vs, suspecting yet he was robbed with his owne consent, and of his honesty only. A Broker of Nassapore told Master Needham that they were sold to the Portugals; the Gouvernour hearing of it, and hanging downe his head, as guilty therein. We sold goods heere to Merchants of Nassapore.

The seventeenth of August, Master Woolman dyed. Our promised money we could not get, and our Broker told vs, that some one of the debtors would goe to the Gouvernour, and with a bribe procure redress, the rest refusing till they paid all.

On the foure and twentieth, the Samorines sister sent vs word, shee would both cause them to pay, pay, and lend vs any money we needed: but we found her as the rest. The Queene Mother also made vs faire shewes. Diuers likewise promised to conuey letters to Surat for vs, but with words as diuers from the euent, and aduerse to all truth.

10 Master Needham thus wronged, further wronged himselfe by indiscretion, threatening hee would be gone to the King of Cochin, in presence of a Nayro appointed to attend vs, who discovered the same; and he added yet further, to put him in feare with making shew of violent reuenge, as he did also to a Scrivano (which is as a Iustice with vs) taking him by the throate, and making as though he would haue striken him with his sword, for detaining money he had receiued for vs. Our Broker also told him, it was not Merchant-like to go vp and downe the Towne with a sword and buckler: his carriage and habite resembling those, which here we call Roaring-
 10 boyes, rather then Merchants, notwithstanding, my admonition, which was requited with ill language to my selfe, and accompanied with abuses of his owne selfe and the Companys affaires.

The three and twentieth of September, a Holland ship, which had traded at Mecca, came to this Port, with purpose of settling a Factory, which were by the Gouvernour appointed to go to the King, and promised to carry vs a letter, but went without it. And heere dallying and delaying continued. Whereupon the fourth of Nouember, Master Needham went to the Samorine, and returned the five and twentieth, hauing had a Gold-chaine bestowed on him, a Jewell and a Gold-ring to weare on his arme, with orders also from the King to effect our delignes. But the performance halted.

September 23.
 Hollanders at Calicut.

20 The twentieth of December, a Malabar Captaine had taken prize of the Portugalls, and would haue traded with vs, but we could not get in our monies due long before. We heard also the same day of foure English ships at Surat. But the Gouvernour and people continuing their wonted perfidiousnesse, the one more carefull of taking, the other of giuing, bribes, then paying our debts: we vsed a strange policie to get some of them: for when wee came to demand them at their houses, if they would pay vs none, we would threaten not to depart till they paid vs. And we had heard it reported that their custome is, neither to eat nor wash, whiles we are in their houses. By this meanes we sometimes got fiftie Fanos of one, one hundred of another; by no meanes would they endure vs to lie at their houses, except one, where we waited three daies and nights, with three or foure Nayros: they had for their watch of them, but we could get nothing. The 30 Nayro, whom the King had appointed to get in our debts, came to demand a gratuitie of vs, yet got in nothing: yea, he would go to the debtors houses, and take three or foure Fanos of each, and then depart without the money.

December 20.

Strange policie, strong suspition.

The ninth of Ianuary, Master Needham going to demand a debt, a Nayro, as he said, would not suffer him to passe, and being put by with his hand strake him; whereupon he gaue the Nayro a dangerous wound in the head, which it was thought he would not recouer; other Moores being hurt in taking his part. And word was presently brought to vs, to shut vp our doores, lest the Nayros should assemble to doe vs some mischief (feuds or kindred-quarrels and murders being rife amongst them, without other law to right themselues.) Our Nayro with his kindred did 40 guard him home, to the number of thirty, with pikes, and swords, and bucklers, in his defence, whom he could not but gratifie. Our house was guarded three or foure nights and daies, none of vs daring to go into the Towne for money or other businesse (which before we did very safely) for a weeke: and then our Broker willed vs not to goe without a Nayro, for that they had sworne the death of one of vs, in reuenge of him that was killed.

Ianuary 9.
 A dangerous
 fray.

The twentieth, the Portugall Armada of foure and thirty saile passed by from the South, whereof fourteene ships, the rest Frigats: they put into the Harbour, where three Frigates lay at anchor; a hot fight followed, but the Portugalls went away with disgrace, hauing onely cut one of the Frigats halfe, which droue ashore and broke in pieces, belonging to the Gouvernour, who was well serued, keeping in the countrey, and keeping foure or five great peeces, which were at his disposing, in the Towne, locked vp, all saue one: neither had they powder and shot 50 for about two shot. Before the fight was ended, some foure thousand Nayros were come downe; diuers were slaine on both sides. Nine or ten Portugalls were driuen ashore, and two or three of the chiefe presently hanged by the heeles two dayes, and then being taken downe, the night following were deuoured by wilde beasts.

Fight with the Portugalls and Nayros.

The eight and twentieth, a Pattemar told that the Gouvernour was friend to vs only in shew, wishing the Portugalls in our roome; for we did no good in the Countrey, but brought wares which they were forced to buy, whereas they caused good by trading.

The eight of February, we receiued Letters from Surat. The fourth of March, wee receiued Letters from the King, wishing vs, if our ships came, to come with them to Pancan, and for our moneyes not to trouble our selues, for he would pay vs, though he sold his Rings.

CHAP. II.

Notes taken out of the Iournall of ALEXANDER CHILDE, from England to Surat, and thence to Iasques in Persia, and of the fight by the way with the Portugals, in which Generall I O S E P H was slaine.

June 13, 14, 15, 1616.

He thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth of June 1616. after our arriual at Soldania, we made merry one with another, glad of our meeting there with Captaine Newport, homewards bound. We found heere good watering, but little refreshing else, save fresh-fish for our sicke men: the Blacks brought vs nothing.

August 1.

The first of August, we fell with the maine, the place called Boobam in sixteen degrees, five and thirty minutes South latitude: variation thirteene degrees, twelue minutes.

Fight with the Portugals Carricke.

The sixt, we descried a saile, the Admirall of the Carricks that went this yeere from Lisbone. The Globe sailing better then the rest of the Fleet, first came vp to her, and the Carrick presently gaue her a whole broad side, shot diuers shoots thorow the ship, and hurt a man or two, which caused her to fall asterne, and stand in with the Generall and the rest of the Fleet, shewing vs of the Portugals discourtesie. When our Generall came vp with the Carrick, he sent his Shallop aboard her to know of the Captaine, why hee shot at his friend, and to entreate him to come aboard to make satisfaction for the wrong done. But he sent the Boatswaine aboard the Generall, who told him directly that he would not come aboard, nor giue satisfaction: who thereupon hauing sent his man aboard, began the fight, which continued an houre and halfe. But within lesse then an houre, an vnluckie shot came from the Carrick, and slew our worthy Generall. Then did the Admirall presently fall off, and put abroad a flagge of Councell, where comming aboard, wee found to our grieffe his body mangled with a Culuerine shot, and himselfe suddenly departed.

Captaine Benjamin Ioseph slaine.

Captaine Pepwell succeeds in place and fight.

We kept company with the Carricke till sixe the next morning, and it proued vnder the Island Moyella, calme, that we were forced to anchor by meanes of a pretie strong current setting to the South, and passed the whole day in making our ships ready for fight. I tooke out my long Boat and Pinnasse out of my shippe, and mounted the rest of my Ordnance, and kept the Carricke company all the next night.

The eight, about seuen in the morning, our Generall, Captaine Pepwell, seeing hee could not fetch her vp so soone as he desired, called to me, whose ship went better, and gaue mee leaue to haue the first onset. I came vp and gaue him three or foure broad-sides: and in the meane time the Generall came vp, and I gaue place; the Vice-Admirall also and the Globe one after another; and thus we fought all day. Betweene three and foure in the afternoone, his maine mast fell ouer-board, and presently his Foretop-mast followed: at five we gaue him ouer within lesse then a league of the shoare, being a Lee-shoare, and a great sea. The Islands name is Comora, very steepe to an hundred fathome, within lesse then a Cables length of the Rockes, and no ground: so we stood off and on all that night. The Generall was sorely wounded on the face with splinters from a great shot in his halfe decke, and Richard Hounsell the Master, was hurt in his arme, another had his head shot away, and diuers others were hurt: I lost two men. The Generall in the euening sent Master Connock, Cape Merchant, to the Captaine of the Carricke, that if hee would yeeld, he should haue good quarter, and be sent to Goa in safetie: his answer was, he neither would nor could: but if we could winne him with the sword, hee must be contented, and hoped to find honorable warres with vs, if wee tooke him. At twelue in the night shee was aground betweene two rockes very steepe, and set on fire, whether accidentally or wilfully wee cannot tell.

Comora.

Captaine Pepwell, and others wounded, diuers slaine.

The Carricke fired, reade more hereof in Sir Thomas Roe.

The ninth, in the morning I sent Master Anthony Fugars, my mate, ashore in my long Boat to see if any men were saued, and to take in some of them, to know how shee came on fire: but the Carricke was still burning, and not a Man of hers to bee seene. There were many Blacks of the Island on the land against the Carrick, and they put out a flagge of truce for my men to come ashore, but there was no landing in that place, nor within three leagues to the East or West, the rockes being steepe, and as high as our mayne Top-mast.

Refreshing at Comora.

September 14. Thomas Keridge, he is now this Iune 1623. returned home:

The tenth, we bare about the South-west part of the Island, and anchored in two and twenty fathome water with one, and another I laid out in fourteene, against a Towne called Matrona, the people promising Beeuies and all that the Island did afford; but we were frustrate of our hopes, till at last with much adoe we bought nine Beeuies, some Goats, Hennes, Lemons, Plantans and Coco-nuts: and I perswade my selfe they are very treacherous.

The foure and twentieth of September, wee plyed vp to Swally Road, there anchored, and brought the Merchants aboard the Generall, the principall Factours name was Thomas Keridge.

The

The Voyage to Iasques.

THe fifth of November, I went over the Barre of Swally, bound for Iasques in Persia. The November 5.
tenth, the Island of Diu did beare North from vs three leagues distant. The eleventh, latitude twentie degr. twelue min. I sent my long Boat and Pinnasse, thinking to haue spoken with a Fisher-man, and they found him a man of warre, and seuen or eight in the Pinnasse were hurt with their arrowes, the long Boat not able to succour them.

The two and twentieth, wee were in latitude foure and twenty degrees, ten minutes, varia- Goudel.
tion eightene degrees from North to West. This day wee saw the Land of Goudel North and East, nine or ten leagues distant. When you are within five leagues of the shoare, you shall see the Cliffes whitish, like the Forland in most places.

The five and twentieth, in foure and twentie degrees, seuen and forty minutes, we were off a ragged mouldy Land, called by the Portugals Sete Serbeayes, by vs the seuen Cities, shewing like seuen Castles, standing a league from each other, the highest like a walled City, and lyeth West North-west from Cape Goudel sixe and twentie leagues, you may see it fourteene or fifteene leagues off, like Islands, and may runne within a league of the shoare, in ten or twentie fathome, within a mile soft Ozie ground without danger: Variation eightene degrees, I found no Current out or in.

On the seuen and twentieth, latitude five and twenty degrees, two minutes, variation eightene degrees, thirty minutes land, as before.

The first of December, we stood off with the Persian shoare, hauing been put over on the Coast December 1.
of Arabia, with a North-west and North North-west wind, we had much raine diuers dayes:
and on the second at night, we anchored five or sixe leagues to the West of Iasques, in two and twenty fathome Ozie ground.

The next I rode still, and sent the Pinnasse to see if they could speake with any people, but they could see no mention of any. At three of the clocke I set saile, and stood toward the Cape about a league, and anchored in eleuen fathome Ozie ground. Cape of Ias-ques.

The fourth, I sent my chiefe Mate with the Frigate and Pinnasse, to see if hee could discover the Road of Iasques; but before he came ashore, the Gouverneur of the place, seeing vs lye off and in with the shoare, sent a Fisher-boat to them, and they returned aboard with her. After some conference, wee sent Master Bell ashore to the Gouverneur, with his man and a Guzerrat, to his Castle, a little mile from the waters side, with a Present, to sound what welcome: I kept two of their men for a pawne.

The fift, I weighed and went two leagues neerer the shoare, and anchored within a league of it, in five fathome at low water, tough Ozie ground, and a faire Bay. There runs no streame, but it flowes a fathome in the spring, and three or foure foot otherwise: a South-east and by East Moone makes high water. The Eastermost low point hath a Pagod or Meskite on it, and the Fisher-towne did beare North-east, in latitude five and twentie degrees, five and thirtie mi-40 nutes, and longitude from the Cape of Diu ten degrees, fortie minutes West, and the Variation nineteene degrees, twen y minutes, from North to West, M. Bell returned with two of the Gouvernours Souldiers, commending his entertaynment, and promised welcome to vs.

The eight, M. Conock our Cape Merchant went ashore, with M. Barker, and two other Factors, and returned at night with like newes.

The seuenth, the Purser bought vs foure Beeues and Goates, not fat at that time of the yeere, but such as gaue vs content.

The tenth, our Merchants went ashore with their baggage, for their iourney to Mogustan, Mogustan.
and on the twelfth tooke their way thither.

The thirteenth, I sent the Boat and Pinnasse to fetch water: the country-people that brought it downe, had after foure shillings English-money the tunne: it was raine-water (for they haue 50 no other) it raines but little in December, but in January it will raine sixe or seuen dayes together, that it fills all their Cisternes and places of prouision for the whole yeere following. I take it not wholesome being full of small wormes, that we were faine to straine our beuerage. Raine scarce.

The sixteenth, I sent my Mate about Ballast, wherein they found them vnreasonable. I sent the Pinnasse to the Eastermost low point, for stones for Ballast. It is the worthiest place for fish in all the Indies. They laded eightene or twentie tunne of Ballast. Fish & Ballast.

On the nineteenth, we received a Letter from M. Conock by his way to Mogustan, of their peaceable trauell.

The first of January I receiued a Letter from M. Conock by his way to January 1. vs glad. On the fifth, M. Conock would haue sailed for Ormus, within seuen leagues over against Ormus, where 60 yeere. The next day they talked of Piloring. The merchants reported that they hoped it would be done in India. The Pilot confessed it was dangerous.

CHAP. II.

Notes taken out of the Iournall of ALEXANDER CHILDE, from England to Surat, and thence to Iasques in Persia, and of the fight by the way with the Portugals, in which Generall IOSEPH was slaine.

June 13, 14, 15.

He thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth of June 1616. after our arriual at Soldania, we made merry one with another, glad of our meeting there with Captaine Newport, homewards bound. We found heere good watering, but little refreshing else, saue fresh-fish for our sicke men: the Blackes brought vs nothing.

August 1.

The first of August, we fell with the maine, the place called Boobam in sixteen degrees, five and thirty minutes South latitude: variation thirteene degrees, twelue minutes.

Fight with the Portugals Carricke.

The sixt, we descried a saile, the Admirall of the Carricks that went this yeere from Lisbone. The Globe sailing better then the rest of the Fleet, first came vp to her, and the Carrick presently gaue her a whole broad side, shot diuers shoots thorow the ship, and hurt a man or two, which caused her to fall alterne, and stand in with the Generall and the rest of the Fleet, shewing vs of the Portugals discourtesie. When our Generall came vp with the Carrick, he sent his Shallop aboard her to know of the Captaine, why hee shot at his friend, and to entreate him to come aboard to make satisfaction for the wrong done. But he sent the Boatswaine aboard the Generall, who told him directly that he would not come aboard, nor giue satisfaction: who thereupon hauing sent his man aboard, began the fight, which continued an houre and halfe. But within lesse then an houre, an vnluckie shot came from the Carrick, and slew our worthy Generall. Then did the Admirall presently fall off, and put abroad a flagge of Councell, where comming aboard, wee found to our grieve his body mangled with a Culuerine shot, and himselfe suddenly departed.

Captaine Benjamin Ioseph slaine.

Captaine Pepwell succeeds in place and fight.

We kept company with the Carricke till sixe the next morning, and it proued vnder the Island Moyella, calme, that we were forced to anchor by meanes of a pretie strong current setting to the South, and passed the whole day in making our ships ready for fight. I tooke out my long Boat and Pinnasse out of my shippe, and mounted the rest of my Ordnance, and kept the Carricke company all the next night.

Comora.

The eight, about seuen in the morning, our Generall, Captaine Pepwell, seeing hee could not fetch her vp so soone as he desired, called to me, whose ship went better, and gaue mee leaue to haue the first onfet. I came vp and gaue him three or foure broad-sides: and in the meane time the Generall came vp, and I gaue place; the Vice-Admirall also and the Globe one after another; and thus we fought all day. Betweene three and foure in the afternoone, his maine mast fell ouer-board, and presently his Foretop-mast followed: at five we gaue him ouer within lesse then a league of the shoare, being a Lee-shoare, and a great sea. The Islands name is Comora, very steepe to an hundred fathome, within lesse then a Cables length of the Rockes, and no ground: so we stood off and on all that night. The Generall was sorely wounded on the face with splinters from a great shot in his halfe decke, and Richard Hounsell the Master, was hurt in his arme, another had his head shot away, and diuers others were hurt: I lost two men. The Generall in the euening sent Master Connock, Cape Merchant, to the Captaine of the Carricke, that if hee would yeeld, he should haue good quarter, and be sent to Goa in safetie: his answer was, he neither would nor could: but if we could winne him with the sword, hee must be contented, and hoped to find honorable warres with vs, if wee tooke him. At twelue in the night shee was aground betweene two rockes very steepe, and set on fire, whether accidentally or wilfully wee cannot tell.

Captaine Pepwell, and others wounded, diuers slaine.

The Carricke fired, reade more hereof in Sir Thomas Roe.

The ninth, in the morning I sent Master Anthony Fugars, my mate, ashore in my long Boat to see if any men were saued, and to take in some of them, to know how shee came on fire: but the Carricke was still burning, and not a Man of hers to bee seene. There were many Blackes of the Island on the land against the Carrick, and they put out a flagge of truce for my men to come ashore, but there was no landing in that place, nor within three leagues to the East or West, the rockes being steepe, and as high as our mayne Top-mast.

Refreshing at Comora.

The tenth, we bare about the South-west part of the Island, and anchored in two and twenty fathome water with one, and another I laid out in fourteene, against a Towne called Matrona, the people promising Beeves and all that the Island did afford; but we were frustrate of our hopes, till at last with much adoe we bought nine Beeves, some Goats, Hennes, Lemons, Plantans and Coco-nuts; and I perswade my selfe they are very treacherous.

September 14. Thomas Kerridge, he is now this Iune 1623. returned home:

The foure and twentieth of September, wee plyed vp to Smally Road, there anchored, and brought the Merchants aboard the Generall, the principall Factours name was Thomas Kerridge.

The

The Voyage to Iasques.

THe fifth of November, I went over the Barre of Swally, bound for Iasques in Persia. The November 5.
tenth, the Iland of Diu did beare North from vs three leagues distant. The eleventh, latitude twentie degr. twelue min. I sent my long Boat and Pinnasse, thinking to haue spoken with a Fisher-man, and they found him a man of warre, and seuen or eight in the Pinnasse were hurt
with their arrowes, the long Boat not able to succour them.

The two and twentieth, wee were in latitude foure and twenty degrees, ten minutes, varia- Gondel.
tion eightene degrees from North to West. This day wee saw the Land of Gondel North and East, nine or ten leagues distant. When you are within five leagues of the shoare, you shall see the Cliffes whitish, like the Forland in most places.

The five and twentieth, in foure and twentie degrees, seuen and forty minutes, we were off

The fourth, I sent my chiefe Mate with the Frigat and Pinnasse, to see if hee could discouer
the Road of Iasques; but before he came ashore, the Gouverneur of the place, seeing vs lye off and in with the shoare, sent a Fisher-boat to them, and they returned aboard with her. After some conference, wee sent Master Bell ashore to the Gouverneur, with his man and a *Guzer-

The eight, M. Conock our Cape Merchant went ashore, with M. Barker, and two other Factors, and returned at night with like newes.

The seuenth, the Purser bought vs foure Beeues and Goates, not fat at that time of the yeere,
but such as gaue vs content.

The tenth, our Merchants went ashore with their baggage, for their iourney to Mogustan, Mogustan.
and on the twelfth tooke their way thicher.

The thirteenth, I sent the Boat and Pinnasse to fetch water: the country-people that brought

On the nineteenth, we receiued a Letter from M. Connock, halfe on-ward of his way to Mogustan, of their peaceable trauell.

The first of January I receiued a Letter from Iasques, which came from our Merchants, & made January 1.
vs glad. On the fifth, M. Connock would haue had me gone with the ship to a place called Costake Costake.
60 within seuen leagues ouer against Ormuz, whereto I was loath to yeeld, being out of season of the yeere. The next day they talked of Piloting the ship to Sireck; but I was the same man. The Merchants reported that they hoped it would be a good place of Trade, and in time, as good as any in India. The Pilot confessed it was dangerous then to carry the ship to Sireck, it was so foule, stormie,

stormie, and a lee shoare, the sea high, anchorage vnfore, and Master Connock seeing the storme we there abode, so extreme, altered his mind, and speeded to land the goods at Iasques.

The twentieth, I set saile from the Road of Iasques: and the eight of Februarie, at ten of the clocke, wee anchored in Swally Road.

CHAP. III.

A Letter of Master THOMAS SPURWAY Merchant, touching the wrongs done at Banda to the English by the Hollanders (the former unkind disquits and brabbling quarrels breaking now out into a furious, unexpected, iniurious warre) Written in a Letter to the Companie.

10

Laus Deo in Bantam, the twentieth of Nouember, 1617.

Honourable and right worshipfull, my humble dutie alwayes remembred, And may it please you to understand, &c.

The beginning of this Letter was torne, and therefore as that, so this, a little imperfect: but what is here defective, hereafter you shall find supplied in Master Nathaniel Cortbops relation, with the continuation of these Bandan affairs, and Dutch insolencies, in him Master Hais and others. This I thought good to premise, as in time, so in cause preceding the fights in the ensuing Voyages mentioned.

The King of Moccafior, and all the Kings thereabouts mortall enemies to the Flemmings. Nouemb. 7. two Hollanders land at Moccafior.

The King of Moccafior leuieth two thousand men.

The English procure the life of the Hollanders.

The Hollanders attempted to land againe at Moccafior, whom the Moccafiorians intercepted, slew them all, being sixteene.

HE nineteenth of Nouember, 1616. wee arriued at Moccafior, the Swan and the Defence, where we stayed to take in one hundred quoynes of Rice. In the time 20 of our being there, and the fourth of December, we discried off at sea, a great ship; and comming at an anchor fve leagues off. The fift dicto, they sent their skiffe ashore, making directly to the English house, hauing eight men in her, which, as soone as wee perceiued, wee ran to the sea side, and before we could come to them, two of their men were landed; so wee acquainted them with the danger they were runne into; for that the King of Moccafior, and all the Kings thereabouts, were their mortall enemies, in regard of the many abuses their people the Hollanders had done vnto them, and that lately the Hollanders had carried away a principall Sabander, and others of Moccafior perforce, and therefore would be reuenged; also acquainted them, that if the King were not the more mercifull, they were all dead men: so they would presently haue gone into their skiffe. But the Moccafors flocking about vs, layed hands on them; I presently, the Factor, and other English rode post vnto the King, acquainting him what had happened, wee hauing a Guard of English neere the Hollanders for our better discharge, that the King might not conceiue amisse of vs, and that we were not accessarie to any treacherie that they might pretend. The King gaue vs thanks, and willed vs to take these two men which were come on land, into the English house, and to learne of them their intent in comming thither, which we did. They said they were of the Fleet lately from Holland, hauing lost the rest of their consorts, and fell with the backside of Iana: The one called John Stanch vnder-Merchant, as hee reported; The other an English man a Saylor: who perceiuing the great danger they were in, desired vs most earnestly, that wee would stand their friends, and get them free againe, bewayling their hard 40 happe; we promised to doe our best for their good, and so to be gone. Presently comes the King of Moccafior, the King of Tallow, and diuers others, to the number of two thousand men presently leuiued, and came by the sea side vpon the sands, and sate in counsell vpon these men: the King of Tallow would haue had them all killed, but wee vsed our best meanes for their freedom. At last command was giuen, they should into their boat and be gone, the King saying, they were too small a reuenge, he expecting a greater, so they departed into their ship. They had all beene presently killed, if wee had not beene.

The next day, wee perceiued another boat comming towards land from the same ship; the King hauing notice thereof by his people, presently commanded twentie Prawes and Correcorries to be manned, and to goe forth, which was on an instant effected, and made towards 50 the Hollanders boat, the Hollanders still rowing in for the shoare, and directly to the English house: the Prawes and the Correcorries still edging neere the boat, betweene the shoare and them. The Hollanders perceiuing their intent, turned their boat, and made toward their ship againe, being foure leagues off, but it was too late, for the Moccafors in short time had fecht them vp, and boarded their boat on each side, entred, and instantly killed euery man of the Hollanders, being in number sixteene, and brought away their boat: wee were that time commanded to keepe house. There were about that time neere fve thousand people on the sea side. This Holland-ship called the Indrought, imagining vs bound for the Moluccas, or Banda, stayed off at sea.

Wee set sayle out of Moccafior Road the eighth of December, 1616. The said Holland-ship 60 seeing vs vnder sayle, they also weighed and kept vs companie: wee would gladly haue gone from them, but could not, in regard of the Defence her bad sayling. They sent their boat aboard of vs, desiring two quoynes of Rice, foure tunnes of water and hennes, all which wee spared

them, paying onely fortie Rials of eight for two quoyues of Rice: the rest wee gaue vnto them. Wee demanded of them why they would attempt to come to land at Moccafors, they said that their first boat was not then returned vnto their ship, so they thought their factorie had still beene there: but I verily beleeeue, it was their obstinate boldnesse, and presuming that their first boat was denied onely vpon the instigation of vs the English, wherefore they would make triall againe, purposing to haue flattered the King, and to haue come there againe, and to haue settled a Factorie, and so to haue hindered the English: for it is a manifest token of such a proiect, both of their boats comming by our ships, and within Musket shot, yet would not come aboard to inquire what newes on shoare, as they went on shoareward, which if they had, wee could haue fore-warned them of that danger. So now their obstinacie and rash proceedings purchased them a iust reward, &c. They kept vs companie vntill wee came neere Ambina, and so stood in for that place, wee standing our course. Now, since wee vnderstand that they haue reported, that wee were the occasion that their men were killed at Moccafors, which is most false: for, I protest, wee vsed our best meanes to free them, the first eight men had else also died.

The thirteenth of December, 1616. the Swan and Defence arriued in the Road of Polaroone. The fourteenth dicto, the people of the said Iland came aboard the ships with whom we had conference about the surrendring of their Iland of Polaroone. Also our Nation had many times beene at their Iland to our great charges, and partly vpon their requests, to settle a Factorie, and to haue friendly trade with them, in bringing them commodities, as Rice, Cloth, and other prouisions for their Spices, and that we desired not to vsurpe, and bring them in subiection, or bondage, as the Hollanders, and other Nations haue formerly; and that wee now came to settle a factorie, if they would surrender their Ilands of Polaroone, vnto our Kings Maiestie of England by writing: also by deliuering earth, with a tree and fruits of the said Iland, as true token of their fidelitie, and so euery yeare a nut-tree in remembrance, and in so doing, wee would furnish them with Rice, and Cloth, and other commodities, for present and also yeerly. And being settled on the said Iland of Polaroone, sufficient supplies should come euery yeere in better manner then now at present, and that we would to the vttermost of our powers, with our men and shippes, defend them against any their enemies, if they came to doe vs or them wrong. Wee also demanded of them, whether they had made any contract with the Hollanders, and giuen them any surrender; they all replied, they had not, nor neuer would: but held them as mortall enemies, confessing and auerring vnto vs (both Polaroone men and diuers of the principals, which once liued vpon Polaway and fled to Polaroone vpon the Hollanders comming there, and getting it by force of Armes.) They doe all still auerre, and doe maintaine the Iland of Polaway to belong vnto our Kings Maiestie of England, by a lawfull surrender vnto Richard Hunt, before the Hollanders came into the Road, and caused the English Colours to be set vp in the Castle, which the Hollanders shot downe seuerall times, and vsed many disgracefull words of his Maiestie. This the Bandanefes doe still confirme, and that they did defend it, as long as possibly they could, to his Maiesties vse, vntill perforce they must leaue the said Iland, and so fled to Polaroone, Lantor, and Serran.

This Councell continued all the day, and so concluded: the writings being drawne and confirmed by the principals of Polaroone and Polaway, and so deliuered by their owne hands vnto vs, viz. Nathaniel Corthop, Thomas Spurway, and Sophonie Cozocke, to his Maiesties vse. Also the same instant deliuered vs a Nutmeg-tree with the fruits thereon in the Earth, with other fruits, and a liuing Goat: and further, desired to haue the English Colours set vp vpon the Iland, and to haue Gunnes shot off. All which was presently effected, the Colours set vp, and fixe and thirtie peeces of Ordnance shot off: and so at night they parted in friendly manner, repaying to the shoare.

The five and twentieth of December being Christmas day, we discouered two great Holland ships edging neere Polaroone. They discouering our ships in the Road bore roome for Nero: and the six and twentieth another did the like. The eight and twentieth, another Holland Pinnasse standing right ouer for Polaroone, came brauing within shot of our Fort, hauing the Flemish Colours on the poöpe, and presently tacked about, and taking them downe, sets vp in lieu thereof a bloudie Ancient, and stands ouer for Nero. By this we expected their comming daily, according to their old custome of iniuring vs. On the thirtieth, we landed foure Peeces of Ordnance, besides two other on Christmas day, and went to worke to fortifie for our defence. And with the helpe of the Bandanefes we made two Forts, one called the Swan-Fort, the other the Defence-Fort, and mounted on each three Peeces. The Swans Fort is within Caluer shot of the ships, commands the Road at pleasure to the Easterne side, where the principall Road is for the Westerly Monson.

The third of Ianuarie there came into the Road three Holland ships from Nero, the Horne, of eight hundred tunnes; the Starre, five hundred; the Taugar, one hundred and sixtie: which came to anchor close by our ships; the Horne by the Swan, the Starre by the Defence, the Taugar a head of all to cut off supplie from the shoare; all these ships full of men, &c.

The Hollanders slander vs.

Surrender of Polaroone.

For their sollicitation of the English to this trade, see Milwards Iournall, also Capp. Keelings, Midgdictons, &c.

The men of Polaroone and Polaway protest that they nor had, nor would make contract with the Hollanders.

Polaway was deliuered ouer to the English before the Hollanders came into their road. The Bandanefes did fire to haue the English Colours set vp.

Hollanders inuade Polaroone with brauados and bloudie Ancients.

The English fortifie.

Holland ships approach to our ships at Polaroone.

Now

The English
make knowne to the Hollanders that the Iland was English.

The Hollanders
could make no clayme to Po-laroone.

The English
were the first Christians that euer came into the Road of Polaroone.

The Hollanders
came to beate vs out of the Road.

The Hollanders
send a Pinnasse to sound the depth by Polaroone, and to inuaide vs.

Iohn Daues in the Swan would goe out of the Road to fetch water.

Now our commission directed vs that hauing receiued the Surrender, and settled at Polaroone, we should giue notice vnto the Hollanders thereof by writing, that they should not come there to molest vs, as formerly they were accustomed, pretending ignorance. A Letter to the same effect we had readie written, but could not tell how to conuey it to them, not daring to send English or Bandanefes for feare of detention. These ships therefore comming into the Road wee sent George Muschamp aboard their Admirall the Starre, and hee deliuered the Letter to the Commander, called Dedall, aduising them to depart the Road before fixe Glasses were run, for that the Ilanders would not haue them stay in the Road, nor come neere them; and would haue shot vnto them from the shore, had not we caused them to forbear. Presently their Commander Dedall and their Predicant, came aboard the Swan to know the reason: wee told them that their comming was to doe vs iniurie, as formerly they had done at Polaway, Cambella, and other places; and how they had turned the Glasse for Master Ball, hauing him in their possession, and threatening to hang him presently if hee caused not the English to come from Land forthwith. Also we then shewed them the surrender of Polaroone, and our right and possession there for his Maiestie of England, which we would hold and maintayne to our vtmost power: and wished them to be well aduised what they did, and that they would be shortly called to an account for their disgracefull words and abuses done to the English: demanding also of them the Iland of Polaway, as in right due to his Maiestie by lawfull surrender: further, demanding of them if they had any surrender of the Iland of Polaroone. But they could not say of any they had; and when wee shewed the surrender wee had vnto them, the Predicant hauing the same in his hand aboard the Swan, perusing it, said with these words, This is a true Surrender.

All this time the Glasse running in the great Cabin before their faces, put them in mind of being gone. We also told them, that their comming was onely to betray vs, and to put vs from the Iland by their treacherie, which our Nation hath diuers times had experience of: wherefore we neither could nor would trust them any more; and so put them in mind of being gone, for the Glasse fixe times run, they must expect shot from the shore: and if in case they did reply, and did shoote vnto the Land, or shewed any discourtesie or wrong vnto the people of Polaroone, we would take it as done to vs, and would defend them being now become our Kings subiects. They would haue stayd vntill the next day, but wee would not grant it, doubting that more of their Ships might haue come ouer. They then desired till mid-night, which wee granted if wee might see them about to way their Anchors: and that wee would send vnto the shore and perswade the Bandanefes to forbear. Also I demanded of Dedall the cause of their comming to molest vs, who answered, It had beene formerly a custome in passing by the Iland. I told him that was vntruth, for that the people of the Iland had reported vnto vs, that there was neuer any Christian ship in the Road till wee came, and that wee were the first. So hee was silent and would not mantayne his report. They came into the Road about three of the clocke in the afternoon, and departed thence about eleuen at night. Wee haue beene since informed that they came purposely to betray vs, and to haue beaten vs out of the Road, or to haue taken our ships; and had giuen the attempt, but that they perceiued we were fortified on the Land. If they had then begun, wee doubted not but to haue made our parties good with them. For wee had both Forts readie, and our Gunners readie to giue fire vpon our watchword or signe from the ships.

The tenth of Ianuarie, a Holland Ship and Pinnasse came forth from Nero: the Pinnasse came edging neere the small Iland or high sand adioyning to Polaroone, called Nylacka, belonging vnto Polaroone, and consequently to the English. There are no Inhabitants vpon the said Iland or sand, but it is full of Trees and Bushes, and Polaroone men resort thither daily to fish about the said small Iland. Now the said Pinnasse came neerer the said Iland and did sound the depth as shee went, which we perceiuing made foure shot at her from the Defences Fort, not intending to strike her, but shot wide, giuing them notice to forbear and be gone. The Pinnasse at euery shot replied with a Base, or some such like peece, vnto the small Iland amongst the Trees, where there were some English and some Bandanefes of Polaroone, which were in danger of their shot. And seeing they braued vs in such manner, the Gunner was bid to doe his best, who then made a shot, which fell close ouer them at the Sterne of their Pinnasse or Frigat, which made them crie out and presently get off. They were Hollanders, and seemed men which came to sound the depth and where to land, purposing to come with their forces, and there to fortifie and so to put vs from the great Iland.

Ianuarie the thirteenth, Master Dauey complayning he wanted water, and purposing to goe ouer for Wayre vpon Lantore side and there to water, we acquainted the people of Polaroone herewith, who would by no meanes consent hee should goe out of the Road: neither would wee, doubting some iniurie from the Hollanders. And the people of Polaroone told vs, that they would rather fetch them water ouer vpon Lantore with their Prawes. I went presently aboard and acquainted Master Dauey herewith, but He and the Companie would not yeeld hereunto, but spake all in generall against it, and said, that the Bandanefes would bring them raine water, or such as might bee vnholosome for his men to drinke: saying, it was but fixe or eight dayes time.

The

The same time there came ouer vnto vs from Wayre, a free Towne vpon Lantore, also from the Ile of Rosfing (an Iland of it selfe) the Principalls of both those places, to haue parly with vs, to surrender both the said Wayre and Rosfing vnto his Maiestie, as the people of Polaroone had lately done. Now, the surrender of both those places being drawne, and all concluded vpon at Polaroone, they desired that some English might goe ouer to receiue the same from all their hands, and to see all rights thereunto performed. Now, Master Daneys resolution being to goe ouer to water, we concluded that Master Sophonie Cozock, George Muschamp, Robert Fuller, and Thomas Hodges, should goe ouer for Wayre and Rosfing in the Swan, to performe the said business, or see it done, and the Swan there to water; after which dispatched, it was ordered that Master Sophonie should returne againe in the Swan, and the other three should remayne vpon the Iland of Rosfing for possession, till further order. All business being there ended according to our expectation, diuers men of Wayre and Rosfing desired, to lade Nuts and Mace in the Swan, and passage for Polaroone, there to sell their Spices to vs for Rice and Cloth. All being granted, they shipped twelue of themselves with Nuts and Mace, a great quantitie.

The Swan set saile and went for Geulegola, being but a little way from Wayre, as I vnderstand, and there watered; after which they set saile and eight leagues off land, a Holland ship or two gaue them chase; which they in the Swan perceiuing, asked the Master what he meant to doe, thinking that hee purposed to fight with them. Master Daney answered; they see my Colours and I see theirs, I know him to be a Hollander, they me to be an Englishman; I know no hurt I haue done them, and I stand for my Port of Polaroone. And in short time, the Holland ship the Starre, being come within shot, neuer haled the Swan, nor said word of their intent, but let flie great shot and small in most violent manner; the Swan hauing receiued two or three great shot thorow and thorow, before shee euer replied, and some of the men killed. The fight continued, as Master Daney writes, one houre and halfe, wherein fise men of the Swan were killed, viz. Sophonie Cozock, Merchant, beaten in pieces with a great shot; Robert Morten, quater-master and Drummer; Christopher Droope, Edward Murtkin, and a Bandanese of Wayre, a passenger. Three others were mayned, hauing lost Legs and Armes, and almost all hope of life, if not dead alreadie: More, eight men wounded, most of their wounds deadly. And in this their crueltie, a villaine of the Starre standing vpon the Poop with a drawne Sword, braued with these words, English Villaines and Rogues, we will kill you all (thus he spake in Dutch.) It seemeth that the Swans men were much discouraged, seeing many of their men lye dead, wounded, lamenting; insomuch that none would stand by the sailes to trimme the ship for their best advantage: so that the Holland ship lay still in her quarter powring in small shot and great, and so tooke her, bording her both Souldiers and others; brake vp Cabbins and pillaged them, and the men also in most base manner, both of clothes and all things else, throwing ouer bord what they liked not. The Spaniard neuer vsed more crueltie in their professed Warre. The Starre had in her one hundred and three score men, most Souldiers, taken from Nero and Polaway Castle: the Swan hauing not about thirtie able men to fight, the rest sicke and lame: and the men somewhat wearied out in toilesome labour at Polaroone, in landing the Ordnance and making two Forts.

Ten also of their companie were left in Polaroone to defend the Forts, two of which were Gunners, viz. Harman Hammon, and Iohn Day.

The Swan being taken they carried her presently vnder Nero Castle and all the men, shee being much battered and torne; they much glorying in their victorie, and shewing the Bandanese their exploit, in the great disgrace of the English, what they could, saying, that the King of England might not compare with their great King of Holland, and that one Holland ship would take ten of the English ships, and that Saint George is now turned child, and that they care not for the King of England.

The Swan being brought to Nero, they presently sent our men on shore and keepe them all prisoners, many of them in yrons, neither Man nor Boy hauing libertie. The Swan set saile from Polaroone the sixteenth of Ianuarie, 1616. wee expecting her returne in eight or ten dayes at furthest; but neuer heard of her till the fise and twentieth of Februarie by Robert Fuller, who being at Rosfing and Wayre, heard of an English ship vnder Nero Castle, and came ouer to Polaroone to acquaint vs herewith.

Presently we dispeeded away Robert Hayes, Purser of the Defence, with some principall men of Polaroone, to land vpon Lantore tide being our friends, so to goe as neere as might bee to the Holland ships, and to make signe to them by a white Flagge of Truce. Our Messenger stayd almost two houres. At last they came with their Boat to fetch him, but made him wade to the middle, and so carried him aboard one of the Holland ships. The Principall and Assistants of Nero meeting him aboard, our Messenger demanded, why they had taken the Swan, and what was become of the men, the reason of detayning the Ship, men and goods. They answered, that Time should bring to light. Our Messenger still vrging to know, and therefore he was sent, they vsed many disgracefull words of the English, and that they would come ouer to Polaroone with their forces, and driue vs from the Iland and other places. Hayes replied, they had alreadie done more then they could answere: and returned, without sight of any man of the Swans companie.

The Ile of Rosfing and Town of Wayre desire to surrender themselves, and to haue some goe to take the same surrender. The Swan and four Merchants goe to Rosfing, and take the surrender. The people of Rosfing and Wayre goe with goods to the Swan. The Starre takes the Swan, slaying fise men, vsing cruell violence, and proud insultation.

The surrender of Polaroone was taken in the Swan, so we procured another verbatim from the Polaroone men, which I haue brought with the Surrender of Rosfing, and deliuered both at Bantam, &c.

A Messenger sent to know why they took our ship. Their horish vsage of him.

Now our commission directed vs that hauing receiued the Surrender, and settled at Polaroone, we should giue notice vnto the Hollanders thereof by writing, that they should not come there to molest vs, as formerly they were accustomed, pretending ignorance. A Letter to the same effect we had readie written, but could not tell how to conuey it to them, not daring to send English or Bandanefes for feare of detention. These ships therefore comming into the Road wee sent George Muschamp aboard their Admirall the Starre, and hee deliuered the Letter to the Commander, called Dedall, aduising them to depart the Road before sixe Glasses were run, for that the Ilanders would not haue them stay in the Road, nor come neere them; and would haue shot vnto them from the shore, had not we caused them to forbear. Presently their Commander Dedall and their Predicant, came aboard the Swan to know the reason: wee told them that their comming was to doe vs iniurie, as formerly they had done at Polaway, Cambella, and other places; and how they had turned the Glasse for Matter Ball, hauing him in their possession, and threatening to hang him presently if hee caused not the English to come from Land forthwith. Also we then shewed them the surrender of Polaroone, and our right and possession there for his Maiestie of England, which we would hold and maintayne to our vtmost power: and wished them to be well aduised what they did, and that they would be shortly called to an account for their disgracefull words and abuses done to the English: demanding also of them the Iland of Polaway, as in right due to his Maiestie by lawfull surrender: further, demanding of them if they had any surrender of the Iland of Polaroone. But they could not say of any they had; and when wee shewed the surrender wee had vnto them, the Predicant hauing the same in his hand aboard the Swan, perusing it, said with these words, This is a true Surrender.

They would haue stayd vntill the next day, but wee would not grant it, doubting that more of their Ships might haue come ouer. They then desired till mid-night, which wee granted if wee might see them about to way their Anchors: and that wee would send vnto the shore and perswade the Bandanefes to forbear. E e e e

The poore ship there lay rent and torne in view of the Countrey people. In short time after, they sent ouer vnto vs a Messenger with a Letter, which we answered, as we did others after sent, their Messenger still comming with a Flagge of Truce, all which said Letters and Surrenders I brought with me to Bantam and deliuered to Captayne Ball.

Reports that the Hollanders were preparing ships against Polaroone.

Hollanders practise to fire the ship Defence.

Hollanders threaten that we should haue no Spice from those Ilands:

Our people fortifie Polaroone.

Nine men went away in the Defence vnto the Hollanders: John Christmas Boatsons mate John Owers, William Carter, Richard Taylor, Edward Bridges, John Harris, Will. Rockwell, Hugh Woodlock.

The Hollanders encouraged by the Villaines that run away.

The people of Lantore wil not accord with the Hollanders.

Now we were still threatned by their Letters, as also by word of mouth from their Messenger, that as they had the Swan, so would they also come to fetch the Defence, and driue vs from the Iland. Wee still answered, that wee expected their comming in regard they had so often threatned vs, and that we would defend it as long as life lasted. Many brauado's they made, daily shooting at Nero and Polaway, fortie, fiftie and sixtie peeces of Ordnance, thinking to affright vs therewith. Also the people of Lantore brought vs word that they were fitting their ships, and shipping Planke and Earth, which wee imagined was for Land seruice, hauing then seuen Ships, foure Gallies and Frigats, and many men: and that they pretended to come ouer to fight with vs. And that they had instigated their Blacks (which are Slaues) that if they could by any meanes goe ouer to Polaroone, and there set on fire the Defence, they should be Free-men, as also some other reward they should haue. Also the Hollanders reported, that wee should carry no Spices from the Iland, or any the Ilands of Banda. Hereupon wee considered, that hauing made a contract with the people of Polaroone, Wayre and Rosiging, and had trusted our goods vnto them: Also a good quantitie of Nuts and Mace being readie to dispatch away, lying readie vpon Polaroone: The Hollanders threatning to come ouer and force vs from the said Iland of Polaroone, and to take the Defence: Hereupon we resolved, to maintayne the Honour of our King, and good of the honourable Companie our employers; to land all the gunnes out of the Defence, and all prouisions elie, and to fortifie vpon the small Iland adioyning vnto Polaroone, there being no people on the small Iland, but full of Trees and Bushes. And there the Hollanders purposed to haue landed and to haue fortified, which had they performed they would haue commanded the Road and done vs much iniurie; for that the people also of the Iland Polaroone, could not haue fished as they were accustomed, neither could the English haue come into the Road, but that they on the small Iland would haue beaten them off. And to preuent all dangers, we landed all the Defences Ordnance (onely foure great peeces, and some Bread and two Butts of Syder, also a Terce of wine) and were all fortifying vpon the said small Iland, with the helpe of the Bandanefes.

The Master of the Defence, Master Hynsley, being also on the small Iland, and all men else at worke, and landing things, some men being left aboard the said Defence to keepe the Ship, a conspiracy was plotted, and the same night the twentieth of March, 1616. either they let the Ship driue, or cut the Cables, and so droue off in the night, which we perceiuing from the small Iland, presently sent a Boate after them; aduising them to returne with the said Ship: but those Villaines would not heare them, neither suffer the Boate to come neere them, but bent their peeces against them, and discharged a Musket shot at them. They being not able to ouer-come them, forsooke the said Ship and came backe vnto vs at the small Iland, acquainting vs what had passed. The next day we perceiued they run into Nero Road, vnder saile, and vnder the command of Nero Cattle; some of the men went presently, as we vnderstand, on shoare, and meeting with the Hollanders, reported vnto them of their exploit, and contending amongst themselves who should be the best Pilot in conducting the Ship thither; one reporting it was I; and another, it was I: and as the Hollanders Messenger reported vnto vs, afterwards comming ouer vnto vs, that they brought a kan of Wine alhoare and dranke vnto the Hollanders, as soone as they came on shoare. Presently the Hollanders tooke possession of the said Ship the Defence, and had all the Villaines into their Castle, and examined them of all our proceedings at Polaroone; and they discouered all how we were fortified, and what passed amongst vs. These Villaines tooke the course to cut all our throats vpon Polaroone; for the going away of the Ship bred a ielousie in the Bandanefes, that it was a pretended plot amongst vs to ioyne with the Hollanders, and so to betray them. Also their discouering our weaknesse vpon Polaroone might haue encouraged the Hollanders to haue attempted, that in which else they perchance would haue doubted of victorie. And indeed, many sharpe threats wee had after the running away of these fellowes, and expected daily their comming ouer; which had they come it would haue cost many mans life. For their hauing taken the Swan, and killed our men, abusing them with imprisonment and fetters, and all the disgrace that might bee, hath much hardned the hearts of the English against them.

The three and twentieth of March, 1616. we dispeeded away a Letter vnto the Hollanders at Nero, by Robert Fuller, who being landed vpon Lantore, the people of Lantore being then in parley with the Hollanders, about a Factorie, that the Hollanders desired vpon Lantore, and also would build a Fort there, but the people of Lantore would not graunt it; This time our Messenger could not passe, but desired to stay three or foure dayes with kind words from the Lantore people, so our Messenger returned. The effect, to demand the Defence, Men and Goods.

The five and twentieth dicto, a Messenger came ouer vnto vs from Laurence Ryall, principall Generall, being newly come to Nero from the Moluccas, vnderstanding what had passed, desiring ring to haue parley with vs, and would haue Master Corthop and my selfe to come in a Prow, and two of his principall Merchants should doe the like, and so to meete each other halfe way betwixt Polaway and Polaroone, to parley. But we refused their demand, doubting the treacherie, for they might haue men lye secret, and so carry vs away perforce.

Also the same time, and by the Hollanders Messenger, we receiued a Letter from Master Daney being prisoner at Nero. The effect, disliking of what we had done and still did maintayne, in keeping the said Iland of Polaroone, and that our commission could not warrant what we had done, and aduising vs to haue parley with the Generall, Laurence Ryall, and to come to some agreement that no more blood might be spilt. All which he hath written, I conceiue, was by the instigation of the Hollanders, possessing him with many vntruths; as hereafter it plainly appeareth: the first and principall they had so wrought him in humouring him, and made him beleue that they had our Kings Maiesties Letters to take any English ships, if they found them to the Eastward of the Selebes, which newes made vs much to maruaile: and that if any such things were, we must obey it.

Hereupon we did write a Letter vnto Laurence Ryall Generall, by his Messenger, that if he would send ouer vnto vs two of his principall Merchants, viz. Henrick de Waterfoord, and Peeter Younge, and to land them vpon the small Iland; and hauing receiued them into our charge, Master Corthop and one more to attend vpon him, would presently goe ouer, so their Messenger departed; and two dayes after, viz. the third of Aprill, returned with this answer, The two Merchants, before named, which we desired for pledges could not come: the one gone to Sea in the Horne, the other his businesse such, being principall Booke-keeper, could not be spared. The said Laurence Ryall propounding two others lately come ouer, and principall Merchants, called Cornelius Neep and Hans Rogers. Wee returned the said Messenger, accepting them: And the sixt of Aprill their Galley came ouer vnto vs and brought these two men. Presently receiued them into our charge, and a Tent being set vp neere the place where they landed, there lodged them, because they should not come neere our Forts to take any view how we were fortified, and placed a Guard alwayes about the Tent, twelue English men with small shot, and that they might receiue no wrong of the Bandanefes. Presently Master Corthop went into their Galley and went ouer to Nero, and arriued there neere night and was receiued; no words passed that night but referred vntill next day: so the next day did discourse many Oppositions on both sides, which I leaue to relate because of the Letter of Master Corthop, which I brought from Banda and deliuered vnto Captayne Ball, will certifie your Worships at large. Onely a little I will touch, Many threatening words they vsed, and spake of many abuses they had receiued by the English. Imprimis, that Sir Henric Middleton did weare the Hollands colours in the Red Sea, in the Trade, and gaue out they were Hollanders. Master Corthop replied, that was an vntruth, for that hee came forth in the said Ship, and continued in her as long as shee rigned, and neuer knew her to weare Hollands colours; and replied, That Sir Henric was a Gentleman that much scorned to weare the Hollands colours. Also reported, That they had the King of Englands Letters to take any English to the Eastward of the Selebes. So Master Corthop vrged them that he might see the same, and that if they could shew him that we would obey it and begone, but they could shew no such Letter. Diuers other things they alleaged, but no truth; and many perswasions to leaue the Iland of Polaroone, perswading him the great error we were run into in holding the same. All this while, Master Daney, neither any the English were permitted to come neere Master Corthop. The Generall, Laurence Ryall, seeing hee could not preuaile and to haue his desire, grew much discontented, and threw his Hat on the ground, and pulled his Beard for anger: Master Corthop answering him, that hee could doe nothing of himselfe, but was ioyned to a counsaile being Assistants, and would relate what had passed when he came to Polaroone, and that we would consider of it, and so write our direct answer. Thus I aduised him to say, that he might get the more freely away: Also Master Corthop demanded the Defence, Men and Goods in their possession, but they would deliuer neither Ships nor Men except vpon composition. Thus being Laurence Ryalls demand, that we would permit him to come with his Ships and Gallies vnto the small Iland adioyning to Polaroone, where our Castle is and twelue peeces of Ordnance, and there to land his Men and his Ordnance, and being possessed, would deliuer vnto vs the Swan and Defence, and all our Men; and for the goods, he would make restitution to all to a penny. All this would not doe; then to conclude, Desired Master Corthop to set his hand vnto a Note which hee had drawne, The effect, That the said Laurence Ryall had made these proffers vnto vs; Master Corthop likewise refused and would not put his hand hereunto.

Now, they had so wrought with Master Daney, that they were perswaded that hee would perswade somewhat: he was sent for by the Generall, and admitted into the roome with Master Corthop. So Master Corthop and he had much discourse, speaking of the Letter which they should haue, and was perswaded that it was true, and that we continued in a great error. Then Master Corthop acquainted him what had passed in discourse with Laurence Ryall, and what proffer we had made him, if he would shew vs the said Letters: which Master Daney perceiuing Offers of parly betweene the Hollanders Agents and Factors of Polaroone.

John Danis his iudgement by information of the Hollanders.

Nath. Corthop vpon pledge goeth to parly with the Hollanders at Nero.

The Hollanders accuse our people of vntruths.

The Hollanders report that they haue our Kings Letters for taking of ships, &c. all vntruths.

The Hollanders denie to restore our ships; but vpon conditions to render Polaroone.

Laurence Ryall.

The men of the Swan did complaine of want of food and clothing, in their imprisonment in the Hollanders hands, and that they had fate in Iudgement vpon them, and giuen sentence vpon them. A Prow sent toward Bantam from Polaroone.

uing so reasonable a proffer, which they could not, accordiug as they had verified vnto him, make good: Master Danie presently in great furie railed against them all, saying, they had done him great iniurie, in telling him and possessing him with so many fallhoods: and further said, that they promised him and his men good quarter, but his men complained much of want of food, and clothing, and hard vñage; and that they had fate in Iudgement vpon him and his companie, and had giuen them all condemnation, there to remaine vntill they heard out of Holland; and could be content to remaine, so as we could keepe them from the Iland of Polaroone, &c. So Master Corthop tooke his leaue and was brought ouer againe vnto vs, and being landed, we presently released their hostage, and so departed for Nero. Now the easterly Monson being come, we fitted a Bandan Prow to dispeed away from Bantam, to giue aduise what had passed. It was concluded, my selfe, Mr Hynsley Master of the Defence, and others, to the number of foure English, and fourteene Bandanese of Polaroone should goe. Wee had the greater number of men, doubting of the Hollanders laying wait for vs, whereby we might by rowing free our selues, and indeed the Principals of Polaroone desired it. These which wee brought, five of them are principall men, one is the Sabandors sonne, the principall of the Iland his father is; the other foure are Orencayas, and the rest their seruants: These also came to deliuer the Nutmeg tree and earth of the said Iland, and to manifest their loues vnto the English.

A Holland ship and pinasse gaue chase.

Wee set sayle from Polaroone the seuenteenth of April, 1617. and as wee fell with Bottone, standing our course for Moccafors, we discovered a great ship and pinasse, they seeing vs, gaue vs chase baring a presse saile, so that wee had no way to escape them, onely wee must perforce stand in for Bottone, and did. Halfe a day they gaue vs chase, and had fetcht vs vp had we not rowed hard, so we were neere the Towne of Bottone by night, thinking they would not haue come so farre into the riuer. Next morning wee perceiued this ship and pinasse, almost within Musket shot of vs, presently we landed most of what we had in our Prow, and carried it into the Woods, and went presently vnto the King, and gaue him a Present (such things as we had) to the value of thirtie Rials, desiring his protection, which he promised vs in all kind manner, and sent his seruants to put all our things in house, and put vs into two seuerall houses to lodge, and to keepe in, that we were not seene abroad; so wee tooke our leaue. Wee were no sooner gone but presently comes the Hollanders, and giues a Present three times the value of what wee gaue, enquiring what we were that were landed: but the King replied, that he did not know. The King demanding them how long they meant to stay, they said, sixe dayes: hereupon the King aduised vs to stay so long time, to see if they will goe or not, that wee might goe with the more securitie. The sixe dayes being expired, they would stay sixe dayes longer to mend their Mast, as they reported. So, seeing their intent, and our Prow lying in view of their ship and Pinasse, that we could not goe about to fit our Prow, but they would haue taken notice thereof. Wherefore I bought a Prow, and the King commanded all our things to bee carried by his slaues into the same, lying out of sight of the ship. And all things being fitted, sent his men out of the riuer, passing neere the Holland ship with the prau, and to carrie her about on the backside of the Iland, and sent fiftie men with vs, and conueighed vs ouer land vnto the said Prow, where we went presently aboard, and kept vnder the Iland vntill neere night, and so stood our course for Moccafors, heard no more of them. Wee were enformed that the Hollanders kept watch euery night vpon the water neere our Bandan Prow at Bottone.

We by the help of the King of Bottone, got another prau, and came to Bantam.

Wee arriued at Moccafors the seuenth of May, 1617. and there we found the Attendance pretended for Banda, but could not beat it vp, the Easterly Monson being come. So we shipped in the Attendance, an hundred and eightie suckets of Mace which was bought at Moccafors, and sent the Prow for Beniarmasin and Suckadania for aduice, and that a supplie of goods was not yet come to furnish those parts, as was pretended, for that the Salomon was not arriued yet at Bantam, being long expected.

The surrendrie of the Ile of Banda, brought to Bantam, and deliuered to Master Ball.

The third of Iune wee arriued with the Attendance at Bantam, vnderstanding of the death of Captaine George Barkley. And Master Ball succeeding him Captaine of the house: vnto him I deliuered all things, viz. two Surrenders, the Hollanders Letters, and other Copies of Letters to them written by vs, and all things else of our proceedings in Banda; all which, I doubt not, but your Worships shall receiue by the first conuayance.

Also, may it please your Worships to vnderstand, the Messenger that came ouer first vnto vs from the Hollanders, hauing beene with vs two seuerall times, with Letters from the Principals of the Hollanders at Banda; This Fellow called Christopher van Loare, as he reported, came ouer vnto vs in a Prow, and three Blacks with him, saying, that he was runne from the Hollanders vpon discontent, the Captaine of Nero hauing abused him, and that he loued the English, and would serue vs: also was exceeding earnest with vs, presently vpon his comming ouer, and importuned vs extraordinarily, that we should goe that night vpon the Iland of Polaway with fiftie men, and he would warrant vs the Iland of Polaway, and would bring vs so that we should take the Castle, discovering vnto vs his plots. I could not beleue him, but told him, that hee was sent to betray vs; This fellow hereupon protested, and swore most deeply to the contrarie, and that the Hollanders would presently hang him, if euer they did take him. Wee told him, wee

we would not seeke it by force of Armes, for wee had no commission so to doe: not doubting but they would be made to deliuer the said Iland, by right of Law and Iustice: the English hauing the first possession and surrender of the said Iland, and were by force of Armes put from it. Vpon his protestations, Master Corthop accepted of him, and gaue him libertie, and went with him wheresoeuer he went vpon the Iland, so that he saw all our fortifications and occurrences of businesse (which much grieued me, for I counsailed him many times to lay him fast, at the first place where he was receiued, which was vpon the Defence-fort, and told him often my opinion, that he was a villaine, and was sent to betray vs; also it was the opinion of the Bandanefes;) yet all would not perswade Master Corthop: so I thought good to haue him with mee to Bantam, and that he might bee sent for England, for that hee knew of all wrongs the Hollanders haue done vnto vs. And he hath said vnto mee and others, that the three ships that were with vs at Polaroone, which before I noted, came purposely to fight with vs, and to haue beaten vs from the Iland; and that the Horne had plancke, bricke, and lime, and other prouision to fortifie vpon Polaroone, or the small Iland, but that wee were before hand. Also hee did manifest vnto vs of foure other great ships that were sent from Nero, which ships wee saw come forth, and plied for Polaroone: but they were by the strong currant put to leeward, and so forced for Amboyna. Also he told vs, that their condemned slaues were set to worke to fire the Defence at Polaroone; and if they could performe it, they should haue their libertie, and bee free-men. All this he manifested and auerred to be true. Within three dayes after our arriuall at Mocca-
 20 for, this Fellow published that the Swan was taken by one of their Pinnaßes, and other disgracefull words tending to the disgrace of the English: which as soone as I heard thereof, I presently charged the Master of the Attendance with him, and so sent him aboard: hereupon hee vowed to haue my life. Shortly after we set sayle for Bantam, and comming neere, put him in the Bilboes, and searched him and his Chest for Letters which he might haue of aduice, to conuay vnto the Hollanders, and found a draught, which (hee said) was of Polaway Castle; also a Letter pretended vnto the principall of the Hollanders, or English at Bantam: all which I deliuered vnto Captaine Ball. This fellow reported he was a director in the building of the Forts at Polaway, and that he had experience therein: and when hee came ouer to vs, brought two hundred Rials of eight. So at my arriuall at Bantam, I did acquaint Captaine Ball of busineses, 30 and aduised that the fellow might be carefully looked to, and kept prisoner, that hee ranne not away, to doe vs hurt. He willed to haue him brought ashore; My selfe and others went and fetched him and deliuered him prisoner in the house. Captayne Ball had some discourse with him, who it is likely gaue him good words, as formerly he had done, with many protestations of his loyaltie: and had his libertie in the house (neuer made fast with yrons, nor in any roome.) And many times I spake to Captayne Ball, to make him sure, and told him he would watch his time to run away: whose answere was, he should run if he would, little regarding it, it much greening me to harbour a Traytor in our bosomes. Hee hauing beene two moneths in the house, the second of August, 1617. got out, and ran into the Dutch house, whereas I had aduised to keep him sure, and send him in the first ship for England, so to haue witnessed against the Hollanders, 40 as he must haue acknowledged and spoken truth vpon oath; which would much haue aduantaged your Worships in the prosecution in Law, touching the mayne businesse.

The foure and twentieth of August, 1617. departed from Bantam an Holland ship of aduice directly for Holland: and two dayes after her departure, they reported here, that ten Englishmen were sent in the said ship for Holland. What they are, we cannot learne, but imagine them the men that ranne away in the Defence, the Hollanders thinking to make them say any thing, by their instigation, which may make for them. And it may be, they will say, that the Defence was left as a Wracke, which is not so. The Master and Companie would haue gone away for Bantam, but we held it not good: for that the people of Polaway vnderstanding thereof were discontented, and said, that we had built a Fort for the Hollanders. The Master writing a note, 50 that he would set saile that night, hauing no goods at all in the ship, Master Corthop was going aboard to perswade the Master and Companie to the contrarie: which the Polaroone men vnderstanding, called presently a Councell, and shewed many reasons that it was not fitting the ship should goe away, and would not let Master Corthop goe aboard by any meanes, doubting of his going away. It was propounded, that I might goe aboard to perswade the Master, or to command him and the rest to stay; and to charge them, that if they went, if wee lost liues and goods, it should be laid to their charge. Long it was before the Bandanefes would permit mee, so iealous were they; but at last, through our earnest request granted it, and sent sixe men with me of Polaroone. I acquainted Master Hinsley the Master, and the Companie, of the many inconueniences and dangers, both of losse of goods and liues, and scandall to our Nation, and 60 that if we should haue gone about to haue laden Spices, the Hollanders would presently haue had notice thereof, and laid wait to haue taken the ship, and brought all into their hands: neither had wee men, munition, or victuall, to maintayne the Iland of Polaroone, nor the small Iland Nelaro adioyning. All the ships companie would haue gone away, being vnruely and peruerse, saying, they came not to be souldiers, nor would they stay: so that we were faine to giue way, and intreat them by faire meanes, like children, so little in their resolution regard they what may enlue, caring for nothing so they may get free. The people of Polaroone perceiuing a difference amongst vs, did murmure, taxing vs with our promises before mentioned: and that if the Defence and men went away, wee could not resist the Hollanders our mortall enemies, whom wee expected daily. And if they came and had the victorie, wee that should there remaine, must expect none other but rigour on both sides. The People of Polaroone would haue conceited that we betrayed them, and the Hollanders would haue had no remorse, setting their slaues a worke to murther, wherein themselves would not haue beene seene. And should they haue gayned either the great Iland, or the small (as they might and would haue done, had not the ship stayed) we had lost all, goods, debts, credit of our Nation, without hope euer to bee there respected. All things considered, we resolved the Defence to stay and land all things: and to let her ride it out vntill further opportunities. But in the meane time, these villaines ranne away with the said Defence, endangering all, and therefore worthie of death.

The runawaies in the Defence in many respects worthie of death.

170. suckles of Mace shipped in a lunk with eight English, which was lost by the negligence of one Stacie, who had charge of her.

At my comming from Polaroone, it was concluded by vs, that another Praw should bee sent for Bantam for aduice, twentie dayes after our departure, doubting the Hollanders might haue pursued and taken vs (as they did their best) and so all our proceedings had beene obscure. Accordingly a Praw was sent, and therein laden an hundred and seuentie suckles Mace (contayning three thousand three hundred sixtie sixe Catees, at a Riall the Catee, each Catee sixe English and neere two ounces better) which if it might haue come safe, it would haue yeilded in England five thousand pound. In the said Praw were eight English, and thirtie Bandanefes: the charge committed to one Walter Stacie, once Master Hinsleys Mate in the Defence. But it seemeth his knowledge and care answered not our expectation: for neere the Iland of Bottom, he ranne the Praw vpon the shoies, being rockie ground, and there bilged her, and lost all the Mace; the men got ashore. Stacie is put in fault by the rest of the companie, for that some of them told him they saw land on the lee bowe, but he being peeuish and headstrong, called them all fooles, not regarding it.

Hollanders brags that they can make friends in Court, &c.

Also may it please your Worships to vnderstand, that the Hollanders hauing beene by some of our people, told of their vile abuses done vnto vs, and that it will lie heauie vpon them at home, being knowne; the better sort of them haue replied, that they can make as good friends in the Court of England as you (the Honourable Companie our Employers) can: and that this which they haue done, will cause you, the Honourable Companie, and them to ioyne, and that a chaine of gold will recompence all, and that they haue Rials enough in Holland to pay for a ship or two, so as they may hinder vs from the trade at Banda.

John Dawie had 700. Rials of eight by him when he was taken: and further feare.

All being considered, we hope, you the right Honourable and Worshipfull, our Employers, will so prize the blood of your seruants, by them murthered, maymed, and wounded, the rest all prisoners: also all damages, interests, and hinderances in the returne of ships and goods; also poore mens percutular losses, as also Master Corthop, my selfe, Sophonie Cozocke, and George Muschampe; wee all presuming what we had in the Swan to be as sure as on the shoare, and now haue lost all: that they may better aduise themselves how they attempt the like againe. Likewise Master Dawie told me many times, that if it pleased God to send him well home, he would come forth no more, finding himselfe decayed and weake in bodie, and that hee had fixe or seuen hundred Rials to employ, with which returne, and other his wages, hee should haue a competent liuing: all which money (as farre as I can learne) he had by him when hee was taken: now these crosses, I am perswaded, will kill him; or else, I doubt, they will make him away by poysoning him, that he shall neuer see England againe.

Description of Polaroone, &c.

The profitable trade.

Now, for aduice as touching the trade at Banda, the Iland of Polaroone is reported to be the worst Iland, and is about eight English miles compasse: and the small Iland adioyning called Neluco, about one English mile compasse. There is prettie store of Mace and Nuts growing vpon Polaroone, and more would be if it were well husbanded. Lantore and Rosinging yeeld great store. Rosinging is a fine Iland, and yeeldeth the largest Nuts and Mace. Now, if we hold Polaroone, we cannot want Spice: for the people of Lantore, Rosinging, and other places thereabouts, will come ouer to vs, and bring their Spices, if we bring Rice, Cloth, Salt, Pepper, Mel-lases, and other Necessaries for food, and some Moccasor gold, which will passe at Banda, as currant as Rials of eight, and at the same rate, being worth at Bantam but two shillings foure pence, or two shillings six pence the piece, called Masse. Our Cargason which we had was but small, hauing but one hundred quoyes of Rice, our Cloth at Moccasor much decayed, lying there two or three yeeres. If we had had three times as much Cloth and Spices, we could haue sold it all for Nuts and Mace at Polaroone: and were intreated for Rice and Cloth by Lantore and Rosinging men, and others; but had it not for them: and some returned with part of their Spices home againe. They come ouer to Polaroone with Prawes and Correcorries in the night. The Mace and Nuts were very good, but lying so long must needs decay, by the many molestations of the Hollanders; we hauing no time, nor lime to make wherewith to preserue the Nuts. The Trade will proue profitable, if we may quietly enioy the Iland, and we must buy Rice at a lower rate then at Moccasor, it being by report at Lipin about halfe the price.

May

May it please your Worships to vnderstand, that after my arriuall at Bantam, the Steward of the House being at the Market to buy prouisions, the Hollanders Steward there present quarrelled with him, whereof (whiles they contended) notice was giuen at the Dutch House: and presently Tymon (the second Merchant) ran forth with twentie Japons, and Hollanders, and Blacks, to the Basar or Market, running vpon our Steward with their drawne weapons, he hauing but two English all disarmed, enforcing them to shift and giue way. Meane while Richard Hunt, chanced to come by and drew his sword, whom presently they assaulted and gaue him three wounds, whereof he dyed within fifteene dayes after on the foure and twentieth of Iuly, 1617. Notice hereof being brought to the English house, we with our Japons ran forth and met with them, before they could recouer their House, and wounded two Hollanders, whereof both dyed shortly after; also one of their Blacks then killed out-right, and one or two more of them were hurt; and so draue them home to their House. They gaue after that great words, that they would put vs all to the Sword, and did lye in wait for our people with their Pistolls and Peeces, whereof wee had notice by the Ianans, and stood vpon our Guard night and day to receiue them, if they had giuen any attempt on the House, or abroad.

Now concerning the Ilands of Banda, and especially Polaway, Captaine Castleton might haue made it sure vnto the English, as I haue heard reported by diuers: and the English haue still more right on that Iland, both by Law and Iustice, then the Hollander, although by force of Armes they put the English from it. The easie obtayning, and Captaine Castleton denying the right and possession the English had there (as it is reported) emboldned the Hollanders to vse the violence at Polaroone. And except it bee supplied this yeere, and the possession maintayned, the name of English is vtterly disgraced, and little hope of being receiued there againe: which if we hold vntill your Worships haue resolued what to doe herein, wee shall in short time procure as much Nuts and Mace as they; which may in time prooue an entrance into the Moluccas for Cloues. The Hollanders pretend they haue right vnto the Moluccas and Banda by the King of Ternates * sonne, hauing him prisoner. But the Bandanefes denie any right the King of Ternate hath in their Ilands, euery Iland being free of it selfe, and gouerned by Sabandors and Orencayas, generally appointed. Now it is meet that a supply be sent the Bandanefes and English, for Rice, Victuals and Cloth, and other necessaries, to hold the possession, and bring away the Nuts and Mace there in readinesse, in Godownes. The Hollanders giue out that they will take your ships that shall goe into those parts and cut them off, so to famish both English and Bandanefes. So your Worships may charge them of all damage already done, and may expect to heare of further abuses from them. Wherefore it requireth an earnest and speedie prosecution, that wee may quietly trade without molestation vnto those parts, that haue surrendred and desired Trade with vs: viz. Polaway, a Paradise by report (the Hollanders report it to bee as good vnto them, as Scotland to his Maiestie) Polaroone, Rosinging and Wayre, Wayre being a Towne vpon Lantore. And if in case of necessitie your Worships cannot agree for Polaway, yet if you may enioy the three last, we shall procure Nuts and Mace enough for England, as also to transport both thence and hence for Surat, and other places in the Indies. Now is the time or neuer vpon the vile abuse of bloudshed and murther committed by the Hollanders. And for the Trade there, it will proue very profitable, I make no doubt. What hath passed formerly, I doubt not, but Captaine Jordan hath certified at large; what since, my selfe. It is requisite that I should relate the particulars of all Occurrences, in respect the businesse is of so great importance. Here is bound home for England the Charles and Hope, I pray God send them well at London. I haue sent your Worships a brieue abstrackt of our Cargason for Banda, and sales there made. If I seeme tedious, I humbly craue pardon: with my humble dutie I end, beseeching the Almighty to prosper and giue good successe to all your designes: humbly taking leaue.

Brinion, Brim John or Brim John.
How to know it.

He fift of March, 1616. we set saile from the Downes. The seuen and twentieth 10 1617. we saw the Canaries. Aprill the tenth, we met the Tornadas in sixe degr. From thence to the twentieth, wee obserued a Current setting to the North. The thirtieth, the Tornadas left vs, in latitude thirtie minutes North, longitude three hundred and fiftie degrees fiftene minutes, that night we crossed the Line. Iune the one and twentieth, we came to anchor in Saldania Bay, accompanied with the Gift and the Bull, hauing lost our Admirall and Vice-Admirall the night before, by fogs and hazie weather. They came in the next day. There we found riding the Hound, wherein was Master William Iourdaine. Here we could get no refreshing for our sicke men, wherefore on the first of Iuly, some were sent to march vp into the Countrey to get prouision, which they did (without losse of any, onely two hurt) in great abundance. The thirteenth, wee set saile 20 from the Bay. August the thirteenth, we anchored in the Road of Molala. The seuenteenth, we had both our Cables cut with the Rocks. The eighteenth, we set saile from thence.

The five and twentieth, in latitude at noone foure degrees fortie foure minutes, longitude fiftie three degrees five minutes by iudgement, we found our selues hindred by some Current: at sixe in the euening the water was changed white, and at seuen as white as any Whay, which made the Skie also white and hazie. This night we sounded often and had no ground: thus the water continued all night in the strangest manner that euer I saw, vntill the day light did alter it. It so continued together with the Current: the sixe and seuen and twentieth was but little whitish, and the Current also forsooke vs. The fourth of September, we passed by Socatra, but came not within sight by reason of the Monson, lest it should be done before we came to Swat. Wee 30 found in the foure dayes before that, by helpe of a Current, the ship had passed three score leagues more then otherwise shee could haue run; which now left vs. The seuenth, a leake sprung in the Admirall (which Master Copeland, their Minister, hath with much feeling related how dangerous, either by villanie or negligence of the Shipwrights, as after appeared, when they came to careene her: being a great hole slightly stopped, and much hazarding ship, goods and men: they had none other meane there in deepe water to stop it, but by stitching a Bonet or piece of a saile full of Ockam or calking stuffe, which by force of the water running into the ship, being haled downe to the place, was sucked and forced in, and so stayed the leake till it selfe decayed in time, then the leake renewing, and againe stopped: which in the careening was found and remedied.) On the eleuenth, it was stopped. The twelfth, we tooke a Portugall ship which came from Mosambeek, laden principally with Ele- 40 phants teeth, and bound for Din.

In the sixteenth, we saw two Iunks, one of them chased by two Ships, which were the Francis and the Lion, Ships set forth by ( ) The Iunke they chased was the Grat Molgols Mothers, of the burthen of twelue or fourteene hundred Tunnes, hauing in her aboue a thousand persons, and nine and twentie Tunne of siluer (some report more a great deale) wee chased the Chasers, and in the euening came vp vnto them with the Bee and the Gift, and so saued the Iunke, with whom and her two Chasers, we anchored on the twentieth, betweene the Riuer of Swat and the Barre of Swally.

The thirteenth of March, wee weighed: the fifteenth at night, wee anchored to the South west of Damon. The seuenteenth, the Anne departed from vs to the * Red Sea. The seuen and twentieth, 1618. wee espyed many sailes and fetched them vp with the Bee, being five and 50 twentie saile (fourteene saile of Frigats men of Warre, eleuen of Merchants the Molucca fleet) and two great Gallies of Goa, which exchanged some shot with vs, but alsoone as they could cleare themselves from vs, went away: and being so farre off at Sea, they all escaped vs, not without great trouble, in three Vessels, whence they heaued Chitts and other things ouer-board, to make roome for their Oares, and eight of them got into Cochin, the rest to Goa.

The nine and twentieth, came aboard a Boat with one Woman and foure Men from the King of Calecut. The Woman was interpreter and spake Portuguese. Aprill the first, we came to anchor two miles to the North of the Road of Brim John. About two leagues to the North of Brim John is a red Cliffe, and to the South of it a low sandie shore, and the next high Land or Cliffe is within a mile of the Road of Brim John, where on the second wee anchored. Master Coytmore and I agreed the next day with the Gouvernour for fortie Rials to water there, and seuentie men were landed to guard the watering place for feare of poysoning; for they are treacherous people, which also came armed the next day very strong, and would not permit vs vnder twentie Rials more. The

The twelfth of Aprill, we had much adoe (the Current setting vs right on the Iland of Zelon, halfe a league from Cape de Galia) to double it with tacking off and on that night. The thirteenth, the Generall came aboard the Gift, and established mee Master of her. The fourteenth, the Bee departed from vs for the Coast of Coromandell. The sixe and twentieth, we were neere the Southerly Iland of Nicobar. The nine and twentieth, wee anchored on the Mayne of Sumatra, the high Hill Lambre (by some called Pedire) bearing South South east halfe East from vs, and the East point of Achen Road West by North halfe North, foure leagues and halfe off. The King his Courtiers with his Women were there on hunting, who the next day sent his Chop by the Sabander and William Nicholas, our chiefe Factor there: at whose parting wee gave 10 twentye pieces of Ordnance to honour the Kings presence and his Women, which was well taken, and went the same night neerer to Achen: and anchored the first of May, a little to the West of the Court.

Master Hatch made Master of the Newyeeres Gift.
Nicobar.

The tenth of June, wee weighed to goe for Teco, but with foule weather were put backe againe. The nineteenth, we againe set saile. The fourth of August, we came to an anchor in the Road of Teco. The first of September, we set saile for Bantam, where on the two and twentieth we anchored. On the five and twentieth, arrived there the French Pinnasse from Iambe, on the Coast of Sumatra. On the thirtieth, came in the Vnicorne from Musulpatan. The fourth of October, we set saile for Iaquatra, and then anchored on the sixt; and thence againe on the twentieth to Bantam, with the James, Vnicorne and Bee. The seven and twentieth, the James had her 20 leake brake out againe, which did increase by report two foot water in a glasse, and five foot in hold before they knew of it. The eight and twentieth, they stitched a Bonnet with Ockam, and haled it vnder her, which hauing beene there a quarter of an houre, the leake stopped, so that the water increased not aboue halfe an inch in an houre. They resolved to careene her, and we hasted to get out our Ordnance and Prouisions. The twelfth of Nouember, shee was in like case, and men were sent from euery ship to pump her (and haling the Bonnet againe to her keele, shee was thight as before) at the Iland where shee was to be careened.

Leake againe
in the James.

The fifteenth, the Rose anchored at Palamban point from Teco. The nineteenth, foure Ships out of England, the Moone, the Cloue, the Samson, and the Pepper-corne; Sir Thomas Dale and 30 Captaine Iourdain being both in the Cloue; the Sunne being lost at the Iland of Inganio, and the Globe lost their companie betweene the Cape of Good Hope and Saint Lawrence. They had most of their men sicke at their arriuall. The eight and twentieth, they anchored by vs at the Iland, being in all thirteene saile, the James, Gift, Vnicorne, Cloue, Samson, Moone, Pepper-corne, Thomas, Bee, Aduise, Rose, little Francis, and the Prize. This afternoone the Sunnes Skiffe came aboard the Moone from Inganio with the Master and Cape Merchant, the Minister, and twentye men more, the Ship being split in pieces, and all her sicke men drowned, being eightie or ninetie of them. The Inhabitants of Inganio came downe on them which were gotten on land, and slue 40 seven or eight, hurt the Master and others, with wooden Darts. Then they made them another Boat of boords and broken pieces that came from the ship. So there came sixtie or seuentie men in the Skiffe and this Boat; and nineteene or twentye were left on the Iland sicke and hurt, which were after taken in by Iowa Prawes and brought aboard the ships, being in miserable case, with want of clothes, bruses with the Rocks, and burning with the Sunne and salt Water. The nine and twentieth, the Globe arrived.

The third of December, the Bee set saile for Inganio, to see if they could haue any thing, but was forced backe with crosse windes. The fourth, the Blacke Lion of the Hollanders arrived from 50 the Coast of China, Palatina, and other places; her lading, Pepper, Rice, Sugar, and some China commodities, by report, to the quantitie of sixe hundred tunnes. This night Sir Thomas Dale caused men to goe out of other ships aboard the Moone, the Cloue, the Samson, the Globe, being but weakly manned: which the next day anchored close by the Blacke Lion, which yeilded on composition. Shee was, by report, of eight hundred tunnes, had in her eightie men, and two or foure and twentye peeces of Ordnance. The nineteenth, Sir Thomas Dale in the Moone, Captaine Pring in the Gift, with the Vnicorne, Cloue, Samson, Globe, Pepper-corne, Thomas, Bee, Rose and Blacke Lion, set saile for Iaquatra, where they found riding seven saile of Hollanders, ready to fight. The one and twentieth, came a Holland ship from Iambe, which sent their Boat for Iaquatra with twelue men, two great murtherers and eight small shot, with each man his sword: but we way-layed her and tooke her with the Barge, and the Ship put to Sea againe.

The two and twentieth, we thought to haue fought, and plyed to and againe as occasion offered. The three and twentieth, we began the fight, and the Iambe ship got in amongst them. This fight continued about three houres, in which time wee receiued in the Hull and Masts be-60 tweene fiftie and sixtie great shot, most in the Hull, yet had but one hurt in the fight, and hee died of it. The Hollanders and wee came to an anchor all night close by each other. The next morning wee set saile and plyed to windward: but the Hollanders seeing wee would get vp to them, waighed and fled betweene halfe way Iland and the other Iland to the East, and so bore away to the East, betweene the Ilands and the Mayne. And when they came thwart of their Iland, they saw a little English Pinnasse, which in flight from them had run on a ledge of Rocks, and was there cast away. They sent their Boates, which by our pursuit they were forced to recall; and we stood after them amayne and chased them (being now by addition of another from Iaquatra nine ships) three or foure miles to the East of Iaquatra, and night comming on, anchored. The five and twentieth, came a China Iuncke on fire driuing thwart our halfe, but we perceived it betime, let slip and auoyded it, so that it did no harme at all. We made after them, but they were vnder sayle to the East, and the wind at South South-west. The same day we tooke out the Thomas Ordnance, beeing an old ship, and sunke her neere the Hollanders Iland. The eight and twentieth, they aboard the Blacke Lion, cryed out, fire, and shee was suddenly on a light fire, and nothing saued, but her company, which went into the Boat and Skiffe. This happened by some which had beene at Dice all night, and went and broke vp a Scuttle where there was Rackupce, which so soone as they had broched, tooke fire with the light they had, as it is reported.

The third of Ianuary, Master Jackson, the Land Captaine of the James, dyed of a shot which had taken away his legge at Iaquatra. The seuenth, Shot and Powder were sent to the King of Iaquatra to take the Hollanders Castle. The ninth, we wayed from this place to the Westward. The twentieth, we espyed two sayles to whom we gaue chase in vaine, they sailing better then wee: the next day wee espyed foure, which wee chased as the wind would giue leaue till night. The five and twentieth, the Bee was sent to Marough for prouision; The one and thirtieth, we anchored in the Road of Bantam.

The three and twentieth of February, Sir Thomas Dale weighed to go for Iaquatra, with the Moone, Cloue, Globe, Samson, Pepper-corne, Hound, Bee, Rose. The seuen and twentieth, the Great James, the Gift, the Unicorne, and the little James weighed from Bantam leauing in the Road the Aduice and the Mosambecke or Prize.

The first of March, the Flemmings saw vs and weighed, and we made all the sayle we could to get vp to them, and they keeping the weather of vs, their Admirall let flye two Peeeces at the Great James first: and then we went to it on all hands. As wee fought, one of the Flemmings ranne aboard their Admirall by chance, and bore ouer-boord his owne Botspret and Beak-head, and the Admirals Ancient. The other two Flemmings seeing that, shooting a shot or two, ranne away and the rest after. We tacked and chased them, but they going better; went from vs exceedingly, and wee gaue ouer. The thirteenth, the Bee came to vs in Bantam Road, from Sir Thomas Dales Fleet at Iaquatra.

The seuen and twentieth of Aprill, 1619. there came a Iuncke amongst our Fleet from Patania with Flemmings goods and a Flemming in her, which we tooke. The eight and twentieth, the Dragons Clawe came to an anchor at Palambam from Surat.

The twentieth of May, we set saile in the Road of Marough, to goe for the Coast of Coromandel, being eleuen Sayle in company, the Great James, Moone, Gift, Unicorne, Cloue, Globe, Pepper-corne, Bee, Rose, Aduise, and the Surat Pinnaffe. At five in the afternoone wee anchored betwixt Besse and Cracatawe. The one and twentieth, a Councell was held aboard the Admirall (the Moone) wherein Owen Bodman was condemned for burning the Blacke Lion and other trespasses, who was hanged the next day aboard the Moone at the Yards arme.

The thirtieth of Iune, we came to an anchor nine leagues East from Masulipatan. We stayed in these parts till the tenth of December.

The nine and twentieth of Iuly, the Unicornes Shallop was cast away at Penara, wherein M. Rice and Harris, and foure men more were drowned.

The five and twentieth, we anchored neere Teco, and saw three shippes, which the next day came to vs, being a new Fleet; the Palsgrau Admirall, the Elizabeth Vice-Admirall, the Merchants Hope Rere-Admirall. We all wayed and went into the Road of Teco.

The fourth of March, we all set saile in Teco. The fifth, the James met with a shoald, and they had much to doe to saue her from grounding. This shoald lyeth from the White Iland, South-east, two thirds East, three leagues within two Glasses, the James and Unicorne met with another shoald, and stayed vpon it at five fathome water, and within a Cables length of fiftie fathomes, and then the White Iland bore North-west by West eight miles and an halfe off. The ninth, we bore vp to goe to the South of Nimtan. This Iland is neere twentie leagues long, and lyeth South South-east, and North North-west. On the Wester-side is great shoalding, on the East deepe water hard by the shoare. The twentieth, at night wee had a great storme, and had many Corpo-Santos, viz, at the head of the Main-top-mast, and on the Meson yard, the Fore-top-mast, and the Mezon Top-mast. The next morning, the storme beganne to breake vp, and we saw the high-land of Manning Cabo.

The five and twentieth of March, 1620. we anchored neere the point of Ballambin; where on the sixe and twentieth our Cable was cut a-sunder with a Rocke, which wee recovered the seuen and twentieth.

At the South-west point of Sumatra lyeth the Iland Pola Tellore in five degrees fiftie seuen minutes of South latitude, South South-east from which is Ballambin, where is good refreshing and and watering, thence to the South point called Cape Bublathore, is two leagues South South-east three quarters East, and from thence to the next Easter point is three leagues, and in the second Bay from the said point is a Riuer where we watered, but the water not very good.

The sixth of Aprill, 1620. we weighed to goe for Bantam, with a full resolution to make an end with the Hollanders one way or other, they being eightene Sayle, and wee ten, little and great. The eight, betweene two and three of the clocke in the morning, being short of Sangang we met with the Bull and two Hollanders bound to looke vs to bring newes of the peace betwixt vs and them. The eleuenth, their Fleet being thirteene besides the former two came vnto vs from Iaquatra: and wee saluted each other with many Peeeces of Ordnance. The 10 twelfth we went for Bantam where we found two Hollanders more. The seuen and twentieth, the James and the Unicorne departed from vs for Japan, to careene there. The thirtieth, we anchored in Iaquatra Road.

Peace betwixt vs and Hollanders.

The one and twentieth of May, the Elizabeth, the Bull, and the Hope, set sayle with the Harlem, and the Dutch Hope. The Elizabeth and Harlem were bound for Leque Pequena, there to stay for the Bull and the Dutch Hope which were appointed to goe for Mocow, and the English Hope for Patania, and then to meete with the other foure at Leque Pequena, thence to goe all for Japan, there to meete the rest of the Fleet for the Manilla. The thirtieth, peace was published at Iaquatra on shoare and aboard the ships.

Leque Pequena.

Fleet for Japan and Manilla.

The fourth of Iune, the Moone, the Palsgrau, the Bantam and the Praw, set sayle from Iaquatra for Japan, and the Manilla's. The teuenteenth, wee set saile to goe to Cracato to cut new Mafts and Timber to sheath our ship, and being a league and halfe from the Roade, met with a shoald where we had but two fathomes water (being suddenly on ground) at the shippes head, and fue at her sterne: but praysed be God, got off without hurt. It is Rockes and Corall and lyeth halfe way betwixt Iaquatra Road, and the Sand to the East of Hedors Iland. If you keepe the Flemmish Castle and the top of the highest hill one right ouer the other; you shall goe cleere in or out. If you cannot see the hill keepe the Castle South South-east, but if you keepe it South by East, You will be neere it, or on it. On the neereft part of the next Iland to the East of Pola Lacka is a dangerous shoald two miles off, and seldome sheweth it selfe. The one and twentieth, we anchored and moored our ship a Cables length North-west of the little 30 round Iland, and rode till the one and twentieth of Iuly, in which time wee cut about seuentie pieces of square Timber for our decayed ship, and to pay the Hollanders two and twentie borrowed, for their house at Iaquatra, by our Merchants. This place is so infectious that most of our men were taken with swolne legges, or bodies, some breaking out with Sores and Byles, other taken with dizziness and dimness of sight, almost euery one losing his stomacke, and giuen to vomiting with a strange costiuenesse: fixe dyed, and thirtie seuen were sicke and lame, all weake, vomiting, sacke, racke, beuerage; nothing stayed.

Shoald.

Cracato a very sickly place.

The seuen and twentieth, we anchored in Morough Road neere the shoare, which is no good Road, but we were forced, so to command the Towne with our Ordnance in succour of our Boats, if the people should haue betrayed them, as they had done the Hollanders of whom they 40 slew eight men. We lost an Anchor there (they cut off the Boyes that we could not after finde it) and could get little refreshing, or none.

Morough.

The nineteenth of August, we anchored at Iaquatra, hauing beene from thence two moneths, and in one moneth which we were returning from Cracato, we lost with the former fixe, one and fortie men, besides fortie fue sicke in the ship; nor had we about twentie of our owne Company that could goe vp and downe the ship. The eight and twentieth, the Hollanders surrendered the Starre againe to the English.

Starre rendred.

The first of September came in a Flemming from Holland, which told vs of the Lion arriued at the Cape from Surat; and of fixe English ships with her in Soldania from England, two bound for Bantam, and foure to Surat, which were to stay in Soldania for foure Flemmings to goe to Surat with them. The one and twentieth, the Dragons Claw arriued from Achen with newes that the Charles, the Rubie, and the Diamond, were all at Sea comming for Iaquatra; and that the Bee saw a French-man of Warre on the Coast of Sumatra, which would by no meanes speake with her. They were in all foure ships, but she had lost her consorts.

Newes of English ships.

Warre.

The first of October, the Schedam arriued with newes of three English ships in the Straits of Sunda, the Royall Exchange, the Vnitie, and the Beare, the Bee alio with them, which on the second, and the tenth arriued here. The foure and twentieth, the Dragons Claw departed hence for the Moluccas. The fixe and twentieth, one of our men suspected for stealing Cloues, was drowned. Hee had wished before mee a little afore, if hee knew of the Cloues, that hee were so farre vnder water that he might neuer rise againe; and going cuer the ships side, a step of the ladder broke, and he fell ouer-board, & neuer rose againe. The thirtieth, the Beare and Diamond were sent for Iambe in hope of Pepper. The eleuenth of Nouember, the Globe departed from Iaquatra for Iapara, to fetch sheathing board and cattell: and the fiftenth, the Vnitie set saile for Achen.

New fleet.

Iapara.

The second of December, the Roe-bucke arriued from Teco with Pepper. The third, the Samson arriued from Patania, and brought in her the Purser and three others of the Unicorne, which which was cast on the Coast of China. The fifteenth, the Globe arrived with boards and planks from Iapara. The sixteenth, arrived a Juncke which brought some of the Samsons men, some of the Vnicornes, and those which were left on shoare at Patania, when the Samson and the Hound were taken. The one and twentieth, the Rubie departed for the Moluccas. The sixe and twentieth, the Cloue arrived from Iambe and Patania. The nine and twentieth, the Royall Exchange, the Starre and the Roe-bucke, set sayle for Amboino with a Holland ship in their company.

The second of January, the Bee went to Hectors Iland to careene. The same day the Hollanders had foure ships that went for the Moluccas, the Dragon being one, and the next day the New Holland, and in her John Peterson Coen Generall of all the Indies, for the Hollanders: who carryed a float with eight or ten Demicanons, and fortie great Prawes to land men, and a great company of Souldiers. The eighteenth, the James Royall arrived in Iaquatm Road from Iapan, where she careened both sides to the keele. The one and twentieth, arrived the new Zeland from Masulipatan, and brought in her Captaine Ball, Thomas Jones, and Richard Thomas. The thirtieth, the James began to take in Pepper to goe for England. The one and thirtieth, the Bee returned from Hectors Iland, careened to the keele, and the Globe foure or five strakes on a side. In the James Royall bound for England. The sixe and twentieth of February we set saile.

The nineteenth of May, we anchored in the Bay of Soldania: where we set sayle the second of Iune. We found there riding the Anue, wherein was Captaine Walter Bennet, and the Fortune a Victualler, and three Hollanders bound for Bantam. The one and twentieth of Iune, wee saw the Iland of Saint Helena, bearing West by North sixteene leagues, and on the two and twentieth anchored there. Here we tooke store of fresh fish by the shippes side. The nine and twentieth, wee set sayle, and the eighteenth of September anchored in the Downes:

CHAP. V.

The Voyage of the Anne Royall from Surat to Moha, in the Red Sea, for settling an English Trade in those parts: Anno Dom. 1618. extracted out of Master EDWARD HEYNES his Iournall, written thereof.

Ir Thomas Roe, Lord Embassadour for his Maiestie with the Mogoll, hauing giuen diuers Articles of instructions vnto Captaine Andrew Shilling, Master of the Anne Royall, together with Ioseph Salbanke, Edward Heynes, and Richard Barbar, Merchants; for Trade at Dabul, and after as they saw occasion in the Red Sea: it was thought meet by Captaine Martin Pring Generall, and Thomas Kerridge, and Thomas Rastell (the twelfth of March, aboard the James Royall, the time being too farre spent for Dabul) that the said ship should sayle directly for the Red Sea. Thus they sayled from the Road of Swally.

Aden.

Moha.

The tenth of Aprill, we had sight of Aden. The thirteenth, we past the Strait of the Bab or Babel Mandel (an Iland in the entrance or mouth of the Red Sea, which causeth the Strait) about seuen in the morning: and about five in the euening, wee had sight of Mocha five leagues off. Night comming on, we anchored, and a Canon came aboard vs from the Gouvernour to know what we were and our intent, which we answered, and they hauing begged a few Biskets departed.

The next morning wee anchored a league and halfe from the shoare, and saluted the Towne with nine Peeces. The Water-Bayly brought vs a Present from the Gouvernour, a young Bullocke, two Goates, Mangoes, Limes, Cucumers, and Water Melons, welcommed vs, and desired to send one on shoare to acquaint the Gouvernour with the cause of our comming. We answered, we were English-men, which came to seeke Trade there, but durst not aduenture on shoare without sufficient pledges. About three in the afternoone, came a lew aboard (borne in Lisbone) together with an old Venetian turned Turke (one in good respect with the Gouvernour) which from the Gouvernour assured vs of all content.

They goe on

The Gouvernors house and state.

The fifteenth, Allee Asgee, the Chiefe Scriniano sent a Present of Goates and Fruites to welcome vs, with two old men of good qualitie: sent from the Gouvernour to remayne as pledges for such as went on shoare, with many protestations of good vsage. Hereupon Master Salbanke and I went with our two Linguists and one Attendant, with a Present for the Gouvernour, viz. sixe yards of broad-cloth Stammell, sixe yards of greene, a Fowling Peece, and Looking-glass. At our landing, a thousand people expected, and diuers Officers were readie to receiue and conduct vs to the Gouvernour. His house was faire and large, built of stone and bricke. At the entrance was a faire gate with a Porters lodge, and diuers seruants there attending. Within is a great Court, whence arise winding staires about thirtie steps to a square Tarris; out of which we were brought into a large roome, hauing at one end a great bay window opening to the Sea, in which the Gouvernour sate : on the sides others of like bignesse, looking vnto the Wharfe or landing place. The flore was couered with fine Mats, and neere the Gouvernour, with faire Turke Carpets and Persian Felts. That whereon himselfe sate was a partie coloured Sattin Quilt, with rich Damaske and Veluet Cushions. Hee was clothed in a Violet colour Sattin Vest, his vnder-coats fine India Linnen, hauing on a Sattin Cap wreathed about with a fine white Shash. He was accompanied with the Chiefe Scrivano, the Principall Customers, some Turkes of better fashion, many Indian Merchants, and one hundred seruants. Hee is about fittie yeeres old, and named Mahomet Aga.

When we came neere, he bowed himselfe and wee did reuerence : then bade vs sit downe, and demanded our Nation and businesse. Wee answered, we were Englishmen, of London, Merchants, who by command of the Ambassadour of His Maiestie of England, resident with the Great Mogoll (with whom we hold league and amitie) are comne to this Towne to treat for licence of free Trade: That we were friends to the Grand Signior, and had traffique at Constantinople, Aleppo, and in other places of his Dominion, and hoped the like here: that wee were come to desire his, and the Bashas Firman, for like liberties heere as is granted vs by the Grand Signior, both for present and future times, as intending to visit their Ports yearely with plentie of English and Indian goods: that we had likewise in command from the said Embassador (which had heard of diuers Pirats, English, Dutch, French, Portugals, Malabars, and others which infested the quiet Trades of this Port, and principally the Guzerats, our friends) to take them, and free those Seas of such incombrances, protecting all honest Merchants, ships and lunkes from iniurie: and these were the true causes of our comming. Hee then rose vp and bad vs welcome; applauded our designe, and demanded why wee were so fearefull to come on shoare without pledge. We answered, that about fixe yeers since, some of our Countrymen were here with kind shewes and promises entised alhoare, and by the then Gouvernour betrayed, emprisoned, and many murthered: whose harmes made vs cautelous for our owne safetie. But that we were no otherwise then we professed, they should shortly know by the testimonie of two Guzerat Iuncks, one of which had not come this yeare, but for the passe and promise of the said Embassador that our ship should defend them home-ward bound from Men of Warre in these Seas, hauing escaped rifling last yeere by men of our Nation, through our opportune comming to our rescue; who deliuered her safe at her Port, and sent their chiefe Commanders into England to answer those wrongs to our Kings friends. Hee acknowledged our Nation good and friendly, promised that we should liue on shoare and negotiate as secure as in our owne Countrey, that hee would also procure the Basha to confirme the same, and would giue vs any content. That for the ill vsage formerly, the Gouvernour then was an ill man, long since remoued, and now liuing in disgrace at Stambola: and sware by his Mahomet and by his Beard, that not one haire of vs should be diminished, nor any wrong offered: that he would therefore proclayme our liberties that none might pretend ignorance to discourtesie. Hee wished vs also to looke out a house in Towne fit for our persons and goods, commanded two of his principall Chanses to attend vs, and till wee could fit our selues better, recommended vs to the Jew-Merchant his entertainment, desiring him to assist vs in all things.

Their conference.

They still suspected our ship a man of Warre, by reason of some excesses of some of our Country-men in those Seas.

The visit the Scrivano.

They view the Towne. The description thereof.

Heat at Mocha. Their neatnes.

Thus after our Present deliuered as from our Captaine and many kind thanks, wee went by the Jewes perswasion to visit the Scrivano, who is likewise chiefe Customer, whose seruants (himselfe not being then at home) entertayned vs with much ciuilitie, and brought vs into a faire roome, not much inferiour in building, or furniture to that of the Gouvernour, where we had left him, and whence he soone returned and welcommed vs with much courtesie, assuring vs of whatsoeuer the Gouvernour had promised, and that he himselfe would see all executed, who had power also to right vs. We were informed that this mans authoritie was no lesse in the Towne then the Gouvernours, who was by him directed in matters of weight: hee seemed a heartie old man. After he had made vs Drinke Coho and Sherbet, we tooke our leaue and rested that night with our Jew.

The next morning, wee spent an houre to view the Towne and obserue the countenances of the people toward vs, whom we found gentle and courteous, especially the Banians and Guzerats, of which here liues continually great store, as Merchants, Shop-keepers, and Mechanike Trades, their shops neatly built and cleanly kept. Their Market or Bazar appeared well furnished with all necessities, besides fruits daily brought out of the Countrey. The Towne for the most part built with bricke and stone fairely playstered ouer with Playster of Paris: the building flat-roofed some two stories high, with Tarrises on the top, whereon they build Summer houses of Canes and Mats, in which they rest in the nights and passe the first quarter of the day, hauing at that time a fresh breeze from the Sea; all the rest of the day so hot, that men cannot well endure any clothes, not so much as a shirt. It lyeth leuell alongst the Sea-side, being about two miles from North to South. There are many faire houses and three principall Moschees; the streets kept cleane, each mans doore euery morning and euening watered and swept, seeming liker sandie bowling allies then streets; no filth suffered to be cast abroad, but carryed to a place appointed scowred by the Sea: In fine, I haue not lightly seene, a sweeter, cleaner, better gouerned uerned Towne then this of Mocha. Betwixt the Gouernours and Scrivanoes is the Wharfe, about twelue score square, neere which adioyning to the Gouernours house is a platforme rayfed, built with hewen stones, with Battlements towards the Sea, about fortie paces square, in which are mounted thirteene or fourteene small Peeces of little force. Against the landing-place are two faire Brasse Peeces about fve foot in length; on the other end is the Alfandica, and a Brasse Peece of fixe foot, which carryeth a Bullet as bigge as a Canon. This is their strength for defence of the Towne. Yet at the North end is a stone house in manner of a Fort, and in it some few Peeces, but they put small trust in their Ordnance, relying most on their Souldiers, of which two hundred reside continually in the Towne, the rest (beeing in all to the number of fve hundred) liue within a day or two dayes iourney, and are in readinesse vpon any occasion.

Another Go-uernour expected.

Hoia Nassans sonne, the principall India Merchant of the Towne, professed and promised all kindnesse (for wee went to his house) and after a cup of Coho and Tobacco (which is vsually amongst these people) we went againe to visit the Gouernour before wee went aboard, who rose and met vs, caused vs to sit by him, welcommed vs, promised as free Trade heere, as in any other place of the Grand Signiors Dominion, nor would denie vs any thing reasonable: said that another Gouernour should shortly succeed him, but one as his brother, honeste then himselfe, who should performe all the promises which he had now made; at our request, commanded the Water-Bayliffe to furnish vs with Boats at all times to carrie vs, or water from shoare for the ship aboard. After this we visited the Scrivano; and found him very courteous, promising to come aboard to see our ship, and bid our Captaine welcome, and after a health of Coho dismissed vs to returne to the ship, where our two pledges approued their kind vsages, whose departure was honoured with fve Peeces.

Feast on shipboard.

On the seuenteenth, the Scrivano, our pledges, the Jew, and twentie persons attending came aboard, brought a Bullocke, Bread, Quinces, and other Fruites, and a Cake of great roundnesse and thicknesse like puffed-past, wherein were baked Hennes and Chickens very well dressed, and pleasing enough to a daintie palate; we also with a Quince Pye, Crabs, Sacke and Strong-water, added our best welcome. He would needs bee sworne brother to the Captaine, which was solemnized with a Cup of Sacke, and after much mirth and view of our ship, hee departed with great content.

Storme and heate.

We had water brought by poore people at reasonable rates. We also had giuen good reason to the Gouernour and Scrivano (who approoued it) to make euery Iuncke that should arriue to anchor by vs, and there to ride till they had discharged their goods. The Gouernour was willing, we should examine and compell them hereto, because some Iunkes passed by their Towne to other Ports for Trade, to the losse of this.

New Gouer-nour arriued.

The one and twentieth, fixe at night, we had a storme of wind off the shoare with Thunder and Lightning very vehement, but no raine, which continued halfe an houre, the rest of the night extreame hot. This storme brought sand and dust aboard in abundance, notwithstanding, we roade a good league from shoare. The fve and twentieth, we had a message from the Scrivano, that the Gouernour and himselfe had receiued Letters from the Basha of Sinan, commanding them to receiue and entertaine vs with all kindnesse, to permit vs to liue and Trade amongst them freely and quietly.

Factory intended at Mocha.

Ignorance of a new Gouernour must excuse vs of the charge of a new Present to him. His arriual was on the seuen and twentieth, the Ordnance of the Towne, and Iunkes, and of our ship welcomming him. Hee sent our former Pledges aboard with thanks, and a Present of Plantans, Limes, Mangos, Melons, Bread, and one Bullocke, promising in the Bashas name like trade here, as at Constantinople. The two Pledges remained aboard all night, and went with vs on shoare the next day, where we found the new Gouernour, and the old sitting at the end of a large roome, adorned much what as at our first arriual, or better. He is about foure yeares old, named Raiab Aga, was accompanied with diuers principall Turkes, and all chiefe Merchants now in trade of Surat, Diu, Dabul, Sindu, Calicut, and Cananor. At our approach he onely moued, so did the Turkes: the Merchants rose, and saluted vs. He caused vs to sit downe by him, told vs that the Basha, the Vizier of the Prouince, informed of vs, had commanded to giue vs content: and besides his Lords command, he knew vs to be friends of the Grand Signior, and to haue Trade at Constantinople, Aleppo, and other places of his Dominion, a Nation of friendly and honest disposition, and therefore we should find him our good friend, and readie to doe vs any courtesie, and giue vs as free Trade, as wee any where had vnder the Grand Signior, or Great Mogoll. We told him we were Merchants, and our ship Vice-admirall to a Fleet of fve ships, one of which, was departed from Surat homewards, three from Bantam and other places to the South, and our ship by his Maiesties Embassador employed hither (with such circumstances as before are deliuered) that if our iust requests of free Trade be granted, wee purposed at our next comming to settle a Factorie here, and yeerely to frequent this Port with shipping with English and Indian goods: signified our intents against Routers, and what already we had done in that case against our owne Countrymen: intimating that it was needlesse to presse with the inconueniences which might arise from denying vs Trade, who were able to force it, and hinder hinder others from comming; the feare of which had caused some already to passe by this Towne to Gudda, the Port of Mecca, one hundred and fifty leagues farther vp, a Towne of great Trade, and others to other places. He replied, we should be as welcome as to any place in our owne Countrey, and vowed by GOD, Mahomet his head and beard, we should live as secure from hurt as in our owne Land. We asked what securitie he would giue vs; besides his oath (he answered) his Firman vnder his Chop, and procure the like from the Bajba. With this wee seemed content, and gaue him thanks: nor did euer people seeme more willing to giue content then they: which, I thinke, ariseth not from conscience, or loue, but feare, seeing vs able to interuert their Trade. After some questions of our Embassador, now residing at Constantinople, and touching the Portugals, and Spaniards, (which he said were proud and vnfaihtfull Nations) some speech happened of Sir H. Middleton: we demanded the cause of that treacherie towards him: hee answered, the Vizier at that time was a bloudie, cruell, and ill-minded man of himselfe, and made worse by the instigation of others, Turkes, and Arabs of this Towne, who obseruing the vnciuill behauiour of our people, as pissing at the gates of their Churches; forcing into mens houses to their women; and being daily drunke in the streets, would fight and quarrell with the people; things hatefull in these parts: these things were in part, but the Gouernours couetousnesse (hoping to get their ship and goods) was the maine cause of that ill dealing, for which and many other bad actions, he was not long after sent to Constantinople to answer it, and is either dead, or liues in disgrace to this day. Wee dined with the Scrinano, and hired a house of Hassana Ga, one of our Pledges, at seuentie Rials of eight the Monson, (which is all one with the yeerely Rent.) The Scrinano would needs sweare himselfe our friend on his Alchoran: yet denied this Gouernour to be the man which captiued Sir H. Middleton, which was after found Turkish faith. We agreed for Custome three by the hundred, both inwards and outwards (which hee vowed all others paid due) and for siluer, and gold, and money, to pay none. Wee supped with him also, and gaue him a Present.

The nine and twentieth, wee had thought to haue had our Firman read before all the Merchants, and proclaimed to the people; but the most part of the day was spent in a ceremonie by the Gouernour and Chiefe at their high Church for the death of the Grand Signior, and the establishing his brother in his roome. They came riding afront our house, we sitting in our window open to the street: they seeing vs, bowed themselves, and we did reuerence: their horses were accommodated with rich furniture. At foure of the clocke, wee were sent for, but our Linguist had got to a Iemes house that sold Racke, and was drunken, and wee pretending Master Salbankes present in disposition, promised attendance the next day. On the one and thirtieth, the Gouernour sent for vs, and made knowne to all the Merchants our welcome, causing his Scrinano to draw a Firman as large as we could require, which he would signe with his Chop, and at his principall Scrinanoes, in the afternoone we should haue it. The Copie whereof is as followeth, translated out of the Arabicke.

40 A Faithfull and perfect Firman giuen by the grace of GOD to the worthie Captaine of the English, Andrew Shilling, to the Merchants, and to all such as are come with him at this present; and to all the Nation of the English, which shall come to this Port hereafter: For their good vsage, and friendly entertainment by the grace of GOD, and by the Faith we haue in our holy Prophet Mahomet: with the licence of our Great Lord and King, to whom the Great GOD of the World giue long life: by the fidelitie, truth, and authoritie of the great Vizier of Sinan, Mahomet Balha; whom the Great GOD giue strength, and power in his Kingdome: and by the faithfulnessse, and true meaning, and command of me Raiab Aga, now Gouernour of the Towne of Mocha; to be giuen to the Great Nation of the English, with all faithfulnessse.

Raiab Aga.

50 I The Gouernour Raiab Aga, doe giue libertie and licence to the English Nation, to come hither to this Port, to receiue friendly entertainment, to bring aboard their goods, to buy and sell with all freedom; to carrie such goods as they buy aboard, without let or hinderance: and haue made contract with them, that for all goods they land, they shall pay three by the hundred, not in ready money, but in goods; and for what they carrie away aboard, so it be Merchandise, and not prouision for their ship, as Victuals, or such like, that they shall pay ready money at three by the hundred likewise, neither more nor lesse, but as it is contracted by our agreement. That no Inhabitants of this Towne, nor People of the Countrey, neither Turke nor Arab, shall iniure them; but they shall haue their libertie to their contents. And that this my Firman and Contract is giuen them with a good heart, and true meaning to see it performed, I witnesse the truth before the most high GOD, and our holy Prophet. Signed with my Chop, the fourteenth day of May, in the yeare of our Prophet Mahomet 1027.

* Either the difference is from their different computation, or that the Seale was deferred to this day.

I haue thought good to adde the Basha of Sinan his Firman, translated as before.

IN the name of God. This Letter written with the word of trueth of the most high GOD: To all Nations, Gouvernours and Officers ouer the people under my gouernment: GOD keepe you all. Know yee, that we haue giuen our faithfull Firman vnto the hands of Signior Andrew Shilling Captaine of the English, Ioseph Salbanke his Companion, and to their friend Edward Heynes Merchant, which are come to the Port of Mocha, for them to goe and come with their ships to the said Port, and there to buy and sell all manner of Merchandise freely, and with all content. And wee doe further giue them by vertue of this our Firman in the Faith of the Great GOD, and our holy Prophet Mahomet; in the Faith of our Great Lord, whom GOD preserue; and in the Faith of Our selfe, Gouvernour of the Prouince and Citie of Sinan; free licence for to sell and buy there, heere, and in all other of our Ports, and Townes of Trade within our Gouvernment, as freely and quietly, without iniurie, let, or molestation, as any of the Traders and Merchants which come to that Port of Mocha, or any other, of what Nation soeuer. And doe consent and agree with them, to pay for Custome of such goods as they bring, three by the hundred, and for what they buy and carrie forth, three by the hundred likewise. And doe promise and sweare, in the true way of an Oath, to keepe our word with them in this Agreement; and giue you all hereby to know that they shall pay neither more nor lesse. And further, that they shall receiue neither iniurie, hurt nor danger, nor any discontent giuen them, eiber to their persons or goods, but they and their Nation shall haue, as from their first ship that came to this Kingdome, now this, so euer to the last ship that shall arriue hereafter, the like friendly entertainment, and good vsage, as we haue commanded to be giuen them at this present. And that this is my faithfull meaning, This our Firman which comes to your hands shall be a witnesse of the trueth. Written and signed with my Royall Chop, from our Court of Sinan this eighteenth day of Iulie, in the yeere of our Prophet Mahomet 1027.

The Copie of the Gouvernour of Moha his Firman, giuen to Master Salbank for good vsage in his way to Sinan, is this.

IN the Name of the great GOD. This Letter of commandment in the name of our great Lord (whom GOD keep) to all people, Gouvernours of Townes and Cities. Know yee that it is our will and commandment, that when the Bearer hereof Ioseph Salbank, or any of his people, or any of the Nation of the English, come to your places of Gouvernment, you vse them, him, and all whomsoeuer, friendly and with all courtesies: that you make them pay for victuall, or other necessaries, no more then ordinarie; but rather make provision for them, and assist them. And for what goods they shall carrie away, or bring up into the Citie of Sinan, you shall take no duties of them, as is the custome to other men, but let them passe free, doing them neither wrong nor iniurie. Wherefore, all you to whom this Letter or Commandment shall come, which I haue giuen into his hand, I command you all, in the name of the Basha, (whom GOD blesse) to see this performed with all diligence. Given at Mocha, the twentieth of Iune, A. 1027. of our Prophet Mahomet.

Racke is a wine or strong drink made of Rice.

Entertainment of the Surat Captaine.

It was agreed betwixt vs, that Master Salbanke and I should follow the businesse on land, and Mr Barber should remaine aboard to prepare such things as should be sent for. The fift of May, wee went to the Scrivano to get leaue for Racke to be made for our sicke men: for by reason that our Linguist, and others of our companie had beene drunke in a Iewes house, we complained and desired the Iew might be prohibited to sell them any: whereupon the Gouvernour forbade the Iewes and Turkes the selling of Wine or Racke in the Towne. The Gouvernour, at our and the Scrivano's request, gaue leaue onely that a Iew by his appointment, should brew it in our house; but to preuent disorders, would permit none elsewhere. On the eight in the afternoon, vnderstanding the Gouvernour and principall men were set in the Custome house, expecting the Surat Captaine then comming alhoare, he went also to see the manner of his entertainment. At our comming, we found the Gouvernour sitting at the vpper end of a long roome vpon a Bench of stone, on a Carpet: by him in a row, on the same Bench couered with fine mattes diuers Merchants, and men of qualitie about twentie; on the other side against him, were about as many set in Chaires: betweene them was made a lane reaching downe to a square place, three steps high from the floore railed in and matted, in which the Scrivano and Officers of the Custome house sate on Carpets. The Gouvernour bade vs welcome, told vs hee had giuen the chiefe Broker order to come see our goods, and procure their sale; caused vs to sit downe, two Merchants offering vs their places, and called for Cohoh and Tobacco. After halfe an houre thus spent, the Captaine came alhoare, in his owne boat curiously painted, rowed by twentie of his own seruants, all in white linnen, with a Tilt of red silke, many silk Streamers, his Saile of fine Callico, with diuers Drummes, Waits, and ill Trumpets, his owne Iunke, and the Towne-Chambers adding their reports to make vp the musicke (if such confused sounds may be so called) Attended by a few slaues trimmed vp with Silkes, and course Sattins, hee entred the

the place where we sate, where the Gouvernour rose and saluted him, and placed him next him : and many complements of welcome passed from him, and from the rest of the Merchants : only he in the height of his pride, neglected vs, and wee accordingly him, though wee thought, the Captaines courtesie to him, lending his long-boat and men to free his Iunke (being foure or five hundred tunnes, and aground) with his kind entertainment aboard our ship, had deserued better respect. After a little time in complements, Cohoh was againe brought to all the company, and after it fix Velts, two giuen to the Captaine, and foure to his foure Merchants, which being put on, and Salams giuen, they againe tooke their seats, sitting like so many painted Images, their Coats being of course Gold and Siluer Veluet. One thing wee obserued as the vsuall custome of this Towne, at the arriual of any Iunke, and the landing of the Captaine, there is free libertie to all the Mariners and Passengers of the same Iunke, to bring ashore as much of their goods as each man can carrie on his backe, free from paying any Custome : in which manner passed by at this present, three hundred persons of that Iunke, with their luggage, to their habitation without molestation. On the ninth, our Landlord and the Scrivano told vs of three Iunkes of Diu, and foure Malabars that stayed at Aden, hearing of our ship, and would not come without our Passe, which they intreated vs to grant. The forme of our Passe subscribed by the Captaine and three Merchants, was this.

V Hereas the Gouvernour of the Towne of Mocha, understanding that there are diuers Iunkes now riding before Aden, fearing to come to this Port, as doubting good vsage from vs the English; hath intreated vs to giue unto him, our Certificate or Passe, for the said Iunkes, or for any other that vsuallly trade to this Port, to come in freely, without any iniurie done vnto them, either in bodie or goods by vs, and to haue good and friendly quarter, as louing friends and Merchants amongst vs : Wee finding good vsage by the Gouvernour himselfe, and forwardnesse by all men to giue vs free Trade and commerce, and as well out of our good disposition, and inclination to peace, as for the satisfaction of the Gouvernour, in his request; Wee, by these presents, doe promise and giue them all freedome to passe quietly, and assure them friendly vsage, to their content : so as they be not enemies to our dread Soueraigne, the Kings Maiestie of England, or his Subiects. In witnesse whereof, wee haue put to our Firmes, &c.

30 A larger Passe at the Gouvernours request, and more generall, for the quiet departure of all Iunkes, &c. was after made, which I forbore to transcribe.

The tenth, the Captaine of the Dabul Iunke invited vs to his house to a Banquet, where we found the Gouvernour with fiftie principall persons, besides Attendants; All rose and bade vs welcome : wee sate not long but Coho and Sherbet were brought, Tobacco, and diuersitie of Fruits, as Plummes, Apricockes and Mangos, we thinking these to bee our Feast, and readie soone after to depart. But the Gouvernour and Captaine desired vs to stay, and eat Bread and Salt with them, which we did; at last, though late, our greatest cheere comming, being about fixtie Dishes of sundry sorts of meats, baked, roasted, boyled, stewed, and sodde, but all mingled with Rice, with diuers sorts of Sallets, in manner as in India.

40 Our Cargason was of bad wares for the most part, which had lien in India, till they were neere spoyled, and so hang on our hands; wee therefore importuned the Gouvernour, and hee charged the Broker to procure our sale with great earnestnesse: we obtayned leaue also, contrary to the common custome, to come and goe aboard and ashore at our pleasure without demanding any leaue, and charged the Water-Bayliffe not to molest vs. On the twentieth, it was obserued in generall that the Monson changed.

The foure and twentieth, The Scrivano told me that he vnderstood that our men of the Ship, at their comming ashore, sold in the Bazar, Bastas and Sword blades : he said, the Gouvernour had promised for the poore mens goods to demand no custome, and therefore they should not feare to bring it ashore, but to sell it at the house; for at the Bazar, was a disgrace to vs and our Nation. On the one and thirtieth, the ship was in danger to haue beene burnt, one taking Tobacco in the sprit-saile yard arme, and the cole falling in a fold of the saile, which there burned two or three breadths, and was long smelt before it could be found : and Tobacco taking was prohibited, except in the Cook-roome or Captaines Cabin. In regard of recouering our sicke men, discovering the coast, and procuring ballast in stead of Lead, taken out of the ship, it was concluded, that the ship should goe ouer to Assab on the Coast of Africa : and Master Baffen Masters Mate, was sent to sound and discover before.

60 The tenth of Iune, we had speech with the Gouvernour, and in other discourse learned of him, that hee was Gouvernour of Aden when the Ascension came thither, where hee imprisoned the Captaine and Ios. Salbanke two dayes; as he said, doubting they were not Merchants, but a man of Warre : that he was Gouvernour here at Sir *H. Middleton*s apprehension, which he excused by the ill rule of our people, and bad disposition of the Basha; that he was blamed for the fact; but the Basha, whose seruant he then was, commanded that and a great deale more, God knew his vnwillingnesse to it, and sorrow for it; but these things are past, feare you nothing. Here wee saw how farre he and the Scrivano were to be trusted.

And doe consent and agree with them, to pay for Custome of such goods as they bring, three by the hundred, and for what they buy and carrie forth, three by the hundred likewise. And doe promise and swear, in the true way of an Oath, to keepe our word with them in this Agreement; and giue you all hereby to know that they shall pay neither more nor lesse. And further, that they shall receiue neither iniurie, hurt nor danger, nor any discontent giuen them, either to their persons or goods, but they and their Nation shall haue, as from their first ship that came to this Kingdome, now this, so euer to the last ship that shall arriue hereafter, the like friendly entertainment, and good vsage, as we haue commanded to be giuen them at this present. And that this is my faithfull meaning, This our Firman which comes to your hands shall be a witnesse of the truth. Written and signed with my Royall Chop, from our Court of Sinan this eighteenth day of Iulie, in the yeere of our Prophet Mahomet 1027. 10

The Copie of the Gouvernour of Moha his Firman, giuen to Master Salbank for good vsage in his way to Sinan, is this.

IN the Name of the great GOD. This Letter of commandment in the name of our great Lord (whom GOD keep) to all people, Gouvernours of Townes and Cities. Know yee that it is our will and commandment, that when the Bearer hereof Ioseph Salbank, or any of his people, or any of the Nation of the English, come to your places of Gouernment, you vse them, him, and all whomsoeuer, friendly and with all courtesies: that you make them pay for victuall, or other necessaries, no more then ordinarie; but rather make provision for them, and assist them. And for what goods they shall carrie away, or bring vp into the Citie of Sinan, you shall take no duties of them, as is the custome to other men, but let them passe free, doing them neither wrong nor iniurie. Wherefore, all you to whom this Letter or Command shall come, which I haue giuen into his hand, I command you all, in the name of the Basha, (whom GOD blesse) to see this performed with all diligence. Giuen at Mocha, the twentieth of Iune, A. 1027. of our Prophet Mahomet. 40

Racke is a wine or strong drink made of Rice.

Entertainment of the Surat Captaine.

It was agreed betwixt vs, that Master Salbanke and I should follow the businesse on land, and Mr Barber should remaine aboard to prepare such things as should be sent for. The fift of May, wee went to the Scrivano to get leaue for Racke to be made for our sicke men: for by reason that our Linguist, and others of our companie had beene drunke in a Jewes house, we complained and desired the Jew might be prohibited to sell them any: whereupon the Gouvernour forbade the Jewes and Turkes the selling of Wine or Racke in the Towne. The Gouvernour, at our and the Scrivano's request, gaue leaue onely that a Jew by his appointment, should brew it in our house; but to preuent disorders, would permit none elsewhere. On the eight in the afternoon, vnderstanding the Gouvernour and principall men were set in the Custome house, expecting the Surat Captaine then comming ashore, he went also to see the manner of his entertainment. At our comming, we found the Gouvernour sitting at the vpper end of a long roome vpon a Bench of stone, on a Carpet: by him in a row, on the same Bench couered with fine mattes diuers Merchants, and men of qualitie about twentie; on the other side against him, were about as many set in Chaires: betweene them was made a lane reaching downe to a square place, three steps high from the floore railed in and matted, in which the Scrivano and Officers of the Custome house sate on Carpets. The Gouvernour bade vs welcome, told vs hee had giuen the chiefe Broker order to come see our goods, and procure their sale; caused vs to sit downe, two Merchants offering vs their places, and called for Cohoh and Tobacco. After halfe an houre thus spent, the Captaine came ashore, in his owne boat curiously painted, rowed by twentie of his own seruants, all in white linnen, with a Tilt of red silke, many silk Streamers, his Saile of fine Callico, with diuers Drummes, Waits, and ill Trumpets, his owne Iunke, and the Towne-Chambers adding their reports to make vp the musicke (if such confused sounds may be so called) Attended by a few slaues trimmed vp with Silkes, and course Sattins, hee entred the 60

the place where we sate, where the Gouvernour rose and saluted him, and placed him next him : and many complements of welcome passed from him, and from the rest of the Merchants : only he in the height of his pride, neglected vs, and wee accordingly him, though wee thought, the Captaines courtesie to him, sending his long-boat and men to free his Iunke (being foure or five hundred tunnes, and aground) with his kind entertainment aboard our ship, had deserued better respect. After a little time in complements, Cohoh was againe brought to all the company, and after it six Velts, two giuen to the Captaine, and foure to his foure Merchants, which being put on, and Salams giuen, they againe tooke their seats, sitting like so many painted Images, their Coats being of course Gold and Siluer Veluet. One thing wee obserued as the vsuall custome of this Towne, at the arriual of any Iunke, and the landing of the Captaine, there is free libertie to all the Mariners and Passengers of the same Iunke, to bring ashore as much of their goods as each man can carrie on his backe, free from paying any Custome : in which manner passed by at this present, three hundred persons of that Iunke, with their luggage, to their habitation without molestation. On the ninth, our Landlord and the Scrivano told vs of three Iunkes of Diu, and foure Malabars that stayed at Aden, hearing of our ship, and would not come without our Passe, which they intreated vs to grant. The forme of our Passe subscribed by the Captaine and three Merchants, was this.

V Hereas the Gouvernour of the Towne of Mocha, understanding that there are diuers Iunkes now riding before Aden, fearing to come to this Port, as doubting good vsage from vs the English; hath intreated vs to giue vnto him, our Certificate or Passe, for the said Iunkes, or for any other that vsuall trade to this Port, to come in freely, without any iniurie done vnto them, either in bodie or goods by vs, and to haue good and friendly quarter, as louing friends and Merchants amongst vs: Wee finding good vsage by the Gouvernour himselfe, and forwardnesse by all men to giue vs free Trade and commerce, and as well out of our good disposition, and inclination to peace, as for the satisfaction of the Gouvernour, in his request; Wee, by these presents, doe promise and giue them all freedome to passe quietly, and assure them friendly vsage, to their content: so as they be not enemies to our dread Soueraigne, the Kings Maiestie of England, or his Subiects. In witnesse whereof, wee haue put to our Firmes, &c.

A larger Passe at the Gouvernours request, and more generall, for the quiet departure of all Iunkes, &c. was after made, which I forbore to transcribe.

The tenth, the Captaine of the Dabul Iunke inuited vs to his house to a Banquet, where we found the Gouvernour with fiftie principall persons, besides Attendants; All rose and bade vs welcome: wee sate not long but Coho and Sherbet were brought, Tobacco, and diuersitie of Fruits, as Plummes, Apricokes and Mangos, we thinking these to bee our Feast, and readie soone after to depart. But the Gouvernour and Captaine desired vs to stay, and eate Bread and Salt with them, which we did; at last, though late, our greatest cheere comming, being about fixtie Dishes of sundry sorts of meats, baked, roasted, boyled, stewed, and sodde, but all mingled with Rice, with diuers sorts of Sallers, in manner as in India.

Our Cargason was of bad wares for the most part, which had lien in India, till they were neere spoyled, and so hang on our hands; wee therefore importuned the Gouvernour, and hee charged the Broker to procure our sale with great earnestnesse: we obtayned leaue also, contrary to the common custome, to come and goe aboard and ashore at our pleasure without demanding any leaue, and charged the Water-Bayliffe not to molest vs. On the twentieth, it was obserued in generall that the Monson changed.

The foure and twentieth, The Scrivano told me that he vnderstood that our men of the Ship, at their comming ashore, sold in the Bazar, Baftas and Sword blades: he said, the Gouvernour had promised for the poore mens goods to demand no custome, and therefore they should not feare to bring it ashore, but to sell it at the house; for at the Bazar, was a disgrace to vs and our Nation. On the one and thirtieth, the ship was in danger to haue beene burnt, one taking Tobacco in the spirit-saile yard arme, and the cole falling in a fold of the saile, which there burned two or three breadths, and was long smelt before it could be found: and Tobacco taking was prohibited, except in the Cook-roome or Captaines Cabin. In regard of recouering our sicke men, discovering the coast, and procuring ballast in stead of Lead, taken out of the ship, it was concluded, that the ship should goe ouer to Affab on the Coast of Africa: and Master Bassen Masters Mate, was sent to sound and discover before.

The tenth of Iune, we had speech with the Gouvernour, and in other discourse learned of him, that hee was Gouvernour of Aden when the Ascension came thither, where hee imprisoned the Captaine and Ios. Salbanke two dayes; as he said, doubting they were not Merchants, but a man of Warre: that he was Gouvernour here at Sir H. Muddletons apprehension, which he excused by the ill rule of our people, and bad disposition of the Basha; that he was blamed for the fact; but the Basha, whose seruant he then was, commanded that and a great deale more, God knew his vnwillingnesse to it, and sorrow for it: but these things are past, feare you nothing. Here wee saw how farre he and the Scrivano were to be trusted.

On the thirteenth, the Gouvernour sent for vs, told vs that he had acquainted the Basha with our purpose, to send vp one to him for his Firman, who had promised his welcome whether wee came or sent; he thought it our best course that one should goe, and we should haue Horfe, Camels and Seruants of his to attend vs; and he would write in our behalfe.

Monson, how dangerous.

M. Salbank's journey to Sinan.

The nineteenth, arriued a Iunke expected from Gudda, which brought Chamlets, bad Corall, Amber beads, much Siluer to invest in Spices and Indian Linnen, many passengers from Mecca. Shee brought newes of a Ship laden hence the last yeere for Grand Cairo, by losse of her Monson through contrarie windes, forced to stay a little about Gudda till next yeere. By this Iunke the Gouvernour receiued letters, that the Gran Signior had sent diuers ornaments of State to the Basha of Sinan, and had confirmed to him his gouernment for seuen yeeres longer, and himsele in this Towne of Mocha vnder him for the like time, whereof hee seemed not a little proud. In regard of my continuall indisposition, it was thought fit Master Salbank should goe, and a Present for the Basha to be prepared, with some merchandise also to carry with him. The Scriuano offered Master Salbank his Mule to ride vpon, which he accepted with thanks. He was furnished with two Camels, one Cooke, one Horle-keeper, three Seruants of the Gouvernours, whose wages he had compounded to pay, with Alberto a Linguist, and taking leaue and letters of the Gouvernour. On the three and twentieth, he departed about sixe in the euening, the nights being the accustomed time of trauell. That morning wee receiued a Letter from our Captaine of his safe arriual at Affab; of their good health, and finding ballast and other prouisions. 10

The Gouver-
nours feast.

Cards, chesses, iugglers.

On the sixe and twentieth, the Gouvernour sent me a Horfe by one of his Seruants, desiring mee to ride with him in companie of other Merchants to his banquetting house, some halfe mile out of Towne, there to spend the day in mirth. About halfe an houre after came the chiefe Scriuano to call me, with whom I rid and met the Gouvernour in the way, whom we accompanied to the place. It was in the midst of a groue of Date Trees, in which was a faire house, and within it a large Tanke, and other roomes of pleasure to sit in. After a little while, He with diuers others went into the Tanke, and sported therein halfe an houre. Then was Cohoh brought and giuen the companie; after that, Grapes, Peaches, Muske, and water Melons, Almonds blanched with others, Raisins in great abundance (for he had at least fiftie or sixtie Ghefts, besides attendants) and alwayes betweene whiles Coho and Tobacco. Thus with Musicke, indifferent good, he spent the forenoone. After prayers he went againe into the Tanke with others, where in hee spent an houre in sport with his companie: after which, the rest of the time was spent, some at Cards, some at Chesses, himsele beholding juggling tricks vntill foure at euening. Then were brought in at least a hundred dishes of diuers sorts, good meat, but cold and ill dressed. E- uery dish might well haue serued foure men with good stomacks. Hee vsed me well, and was earnest to haue me into the Tanke, which I excused by my late sicknesse. He answered, if at any time I had a desire to wash, he would haue me come hither and take my pleasure, and the Keeper should permit me and vse me well. 30

worke, figures.

The twelfth of Iuly, at euening was a great shew made by the Surat Captaine before the Gouvernour, being the time of the New Moone: Many figures artificially made in fire-works, rare and excellent. The Gouvernour sent for me to see them, placed me in a Chaire by him, told mee of Letters that day receiued from Sinan of the Basha's Firman, granted before Master Salbank came, who hearing of his comming staid it and made another, as he gaue instructions, and deliuered it him with his owne hand. 40

his voyage and

On the thirteenth, passed by the Road of Gudda a Iunke of foure or fise hundred tunnes, bound for Kutchine, a dayes saile within the entrance of the Red Sea; I suppose it not farre from Cape Guardesun on the Coast of Afrike. Shee is reported to be rich in gold, Royalls of plate, and many sorts of Merchandise: yeerly comes to Mocha, brings Myrrhe, Trunkes for Coho seeds, at the first beginning of the westerly Monson, and dispatching here, goes vp to Gudda or Aliambo, and there sells her Coho and Indian goods which shee taketh in at Kutchine, brought thither by Portugall Frigats from Diu, and other places. Her lading outward is Indico's, all manner of Indian Linnen, Gumme, Lac and Myrrhe; shee is freighted by the Portugalls, and the Gouvernour wished we might meet with her, which it is likely we had done, had not our ship beene absent, which returned into the Road on the one and twentieth. I went aboard, and was told, that the King of Affab with his brother and brothers sonne, had beene aboard and receiued good entertainment, in requitall whereof, the King promised to send for store of Beeces and Goats: but in the euening, by signe of a light giuen, fled with all his people vp into the Mountaynes, pretending a pursuit of his enemies, and neuer returned so much as thanks. 50

The seuen and twentieth, before day, Master Salbank returned in perfect health and content with his Firmans. He related to me of his hard iourney, good respect giuen him by the way in all places; being alway met before he entred any Towne of note, with Horfe and Foot, to guard him to the Gouvernours, and of them receiued with good welcome; his prouisions provided by their Officers (but at his owne charge) the Gouvernour of Mocha seruant in the name of the Basha, procuring his good vsage. Before he came into Sinan he was met a mile without the Citie by 60 by fortie or fiftie braue Turks well horsed, sent by the Basha to bring him in; which conueyed him to a house readie and richly furnished against his comming. He receiued friendly entertainment of the principall Xeriffe and the Basha's chiefe Treasurer, which were both appointed to welcome him. And two dayes after, the Basha himselfe gaue him hearing, of whom he receiued courteous entertainment and two Firmans, both of one Tenor, but one written in a fairer Character then the other, to shew to the Grand Signior, if occasion required.

I find, by his report, that the Citie of Sinan with the Countrey adioyning, will vent yearly some quantitie of English cloth, those parts for three quarters of the yeere being cold; yea, in this Summer time a man might well haue endured a turred Gowne. Besides, there is a Court kept, to which belong fortie or fiftie thousand gallant Turks, most of which wore garments of Venetian cloth of great prices. Also not farre from thence lyeth a Leskar of Souldiers, to the number of thirtie thousand, that continually are in the field against an Arab King not yet conquered, which liueth in the Mountaynes adioyning, all which, he saith, are reported to weare Coats quilted of Cotton made of India Pintado's, which is deare and litle seruiceable, for want of cloth to keepe them from cold, which there is extreme. To this I may adde the Citie of Tjeis, and the Leskar of thirtie or fortie thousand Souldiers, gouerned by an Almaine turned Moore, subiect to the Basha of Sinan, where is much cloth worne, not aboue five dayes iourney from Mocha, yet very cold.

Sale of English cloth likely.

Arabia, not wholly subiect to the Turke.

The second of August, the Gouvernour sent our Captaine a vest, a rich one, by his chiefe Shambander with Drummes and Trumpets, his Boat bedecked with Flags and Streamers in great brauerie, which was deliuered with great reuerence, and receiued accordingly.

The Captaine vested.

The eleuenth, the Captaine of Dabul Melic Marnet, and Nakada Roofwan the Chaul Captaine, sent vs their Letters of recommendations to their Kings, according to our desire, certifying of our friendly vsage here, and promise to defend them homewards bound from Pyrates, and therefore beseeching, in our behalte, freedome of Trade and friendly vsage in their Kingdomes. The fourteenth, we gaue our Passes (as at other times to others) vnto two Captaines of the Malabarres, Amet Ben Mahomet of Cannanor vnder Sultan Ala Raja, and to Abu Buker of Calicut vnder the Samorine.

This day came into the Road a small Galley from Cairo, with many passengers, Turks and Jewes, rich in Royals, Chekines, Corall, Damaskes, Sattins, Chamlet, Opium, Veluets and Taffata's. Shee had bene in her voyage but thirtie dayes. I had conference with the Jewes, one of which had bene of my acquaintance in Barbarie. They report, that the Grand Signiors brother, being made Emperor, had imprisoned his two Nephewes, done to death some Grandes, and otherwise discontented the great Ones, and that he was deposed, imprisoned, and the eldest of his Nephewes created. That there were two hundred thousand Souldiers sent against the Persian, for the conquest of Gurgistan, with other things; whereof some proued true, others false, according to the fate of Merchants newes. Some Jewes and Turks desired passage for them and their goods in our ship to Surat; and it is likely when they know vs better, much profit may be made this way, their Iunkes being so pestered vsually with vnciuill people.

Many passengers both for Merchandize and Pilgrimage to Meca.

Thus hauing sold and bartered our goods as well as we might, hope of such a Cargason, and dispatched our businesse, wee visited the Gouvernour and desired his Letter testimoniall to the Lord Embassador, which he gaue vs; we tooke our leaue the nineteenth of him, the Scriuano and principall men of the Towne, from whom wee receiued protestations of much kindnesse alwayes, came aboard, intending the next day to set saile for India, in companie of the Surat Iunke, according to our instructions.

CHAP. VI.

Briefe Notes of two Voyages of Master MARTIN PRING into the East Indies; the first with Captaine NICHOLAS DOWNTON, Generall of foure ships, in which he went Master in the New-yeeres Gift Admirall.

From England to the Canaries, we vsed our Chanell Compasses, and from thence our Meridionall. Whiles we vsed our Chanell Compasses, we gaue not any allowance for the variation; which afterwards we did in all our Courses. Wednesday, the fifteenth of Iune, 1614. we anchored in the Road of Soldania, the latitude whereof is foure and thirtie degrees, the longitude from the Lizard eight and twentie degrees, of a great circle East, the variation one degree, thirtie minutes, North westing.

Compasses.

Soldania.

The fourth of Iuly, we had the Cape of Good Hope East seuen leagues off. On Saturday, the sixt of August, we escried the Land of Saint Laurence. The Riuer of Saint Augustine hath in latitude latitude twentie three degrees, thirtie eight minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope twentie three degrees, of a great Circle. We left it on the twelfth : and the thirteenth wee had Westminster Hall (which is a flat Hill, lying North-east by North from the Road of Saint Augustine) South-east by South nine leagues off, being in latitude three and twentie degrees, variation seenteene degrees and twentie minutes, North westing. On the fourteenth and fifteenth, we found that the Current had set vs to the North, of our account, fixe leagues.

Ioanna.

On the eighteenth, by obseruation of the Sunne at noone, wee found the eleuation of the South Pole to be seenteene degrees and twentie fixe minutes. The three and twentieth, wee descried the land of Ioanna.

The second of September, we passed the Line : the ninth, wee anchored in Delisba Road on the North side of Socotora, in twelue degrees and thirtie five minutes, variation eightene degrees and thirtie minutes, longitude eleuen degrees and twentie minutes, of a great Circle to the East of Saint Augustine.

Whirlewinds.

Their anchoring, and what passed at Swally, yee had before in Captaine Downton. The second of March, we left the Road of Swally. On the fourth, we were as low as Damon, and saw the Vice-roy with his Paderosa Armada, which chased vs till the sixt at noone, and then left vs. The night before wee came in sight of Damon, wee had many Whirlewinds, the weather being cleere, as if the two Monsons had bene struing for victorie. The sixteenth, Cochin bare three leagues off East halfe North. It stands in ten degrees close by the waters side; the Land so low that we could see nothing but Trees : but vp in the Countrey are Mountaynes : variation fifteen degrees North North-easting, this euening.

Eclipse.

The nineteenth, at noone being Sunday, there was an Eclipse of the Sunne, the end whereof by my obseruation, continued till one in the afternoone and fortie five minutes. The distance of the Sunne from the Zenith, was twentie seven degrees and thirtie minutes, iust as the Eclipse was ended. Munday, by obseruation of the Crosiers we were in fixe degrees, and by the Starres of the great Beare also. Tuesday, at five in the morning, we descried the Coast of Seyloan five leagues off, which neere the water side riseth full of small Hummocks, and vp in the Countrey are Mountaynes, whereof one like a Friers Cowle. Friday, Punta de Galia North-east halfe North eight leagues off, wee perceiued that the Current set westward. By obseruation of the Starre in the great Beares backe, we were in five degrees and thirtie minutes.

Currents.

The fourth and fift of April, we perceiued the Current had set vs five leagues and two third parts to the North, being in one degree and fittie minutes, when by our way wee should haue been in one degree thirtie three minutes. We found a like Current on the ninth. The two and twentieth, wee found that the Current had carried vs in foure dayes thirteene leagues to the South of our computation. The third of May, at noone, wee were in foure degrees and thirtie minutes, and found that since the former noone the Current had carried vs foure leagues South of our computation. We had sight of Sumatra. The like we found at noone the next day. Wee saw the Ile of Enganio, the North point bearing South-west eight leagues off. The sixt, at noon, we were in five degrees and thirtie seven minutes, carried to the South of our accounts five leagues by the Current. We saw the South point of Sumatra East South-east low by the water.

On the seuenth, we were at noone in fixe degrees and ten minutes, the Current hauing set vs sixe degrees and an halfe to the South of our accounts.

This morning we saw the Salt Ile, which is in the entrance of the Straights of Sunda, bearing East, two third parts North. The tenth of May, the South-east winds began to blow fresh, onely now and then a gust which would sometimes alter it, and that about the change or full of the Moone, or else we had it alway betweene the South South-east, and the East South-east : but most commonly at South-east. On the tenth, the Generall (wee being able to doe no good the other way) thought best to beare vp to the North of the Salt Iles, where vnder the North end of the Northermost, wee anchored in twentie fadoms oaze, within three quarters of a mile of the shoare, finding the like depth all alongst the North end of this Iland in that distance. Betweene the high Salt-Ile and this, is Pumicestone-Ile, which alwaies burneth, and casts forth Pumicestones like to Fuego. The Northermost we called Coco, of the fruit found there. These Pumicestones we cast into the water, which swam like Corke. The twelfth, the Pinnasse was sent to Pulo-Beced for water : it was brackish. On the sixteenth, our men found a Pond of fresh water, on the North end of the Salt Ile, in the flat ground by the waters side, and filled water there. We set saile thinking to haue gotten to the South of the Salt Ile, the winde being at North-east, but could not preuaile against the Current. The nineteenth, we were in fixe degrees, five minutes of South latitude.

The twentieth, the Current North North-west and North-west, whereas before for ten degrees it had set directly West betweene those Ilands.

After much contending with the weather and Current, hauing had very good water from Palmeto Ile, halfe a mile within the East point in a sandy Coue.

The first of Iune, we set saile and stood to the South, making a South-west way by meanes of the Current that sets West South-west, alongst the shoare. On the three and twentieth of Iune, Master Master Jordan came aboard: and the next our Generall sent a Present to the King of Bantam. Note, that while we rid in the Straits mouth, we found the Current from twelue at noone, till foure in the morning to runne very swift, and from thence till noone very easie. Sunday the sixth of August, our Generall departed this life.

The tenth of October, Captaine Jordan came in the Iuncke from Iacatra, and related his kind entertainment, the King being wholly deuoted to vs, and hating the Dutch.

The seuen and twentieth of Nouember, the Flemmings set vpon Kewee his house (he was our Merchant to buy Pepper for vs) with intent to keepe him Prisoner in their owne house: But 10 Captaine Jordan hauing notice thereof presently went and rescued him in despight of the Flemmings, and brought him to the English house. The two and twentieth of December, hauing receiued our lading, we left the Road of Bantam.

Their returne:

The seuenth of Ianuary, we were in seuen degrees five minutes of South latitude, wee found that the Current had set vs South South-east nine leagues in twentie houres, the variation this euening was three degrees fortie minutes North-westing. The two and twentieth, our Generall Master Thomas Elkington departed this life.

The first of March, we anchored in the Bay of Soldania, our Company most part in good health. The next day we set vp our Tents ashore, landed our sicke men and our water caske. On Sunday the third, Cory came downe vnto vs, who told vs of one Captaine Crosse, which liued vpon Penguin Iland with eight men and a Boy: to whom Master Dodsworth had giuen a Boat. I 20 sent the Pinnasse which brought three, and left there other three. These reported, that on Saturday last, Captaine Crosse with two others, their Boat being split in pieces, made a Gingada of Timber, and had gotten halfe way betwixt the Iland and the ship, when two Whales rose vp by them, one of them so neere, that they strooke him on the backe with a wooden spit; after which they sunke downe and left them. Captaine Crosse thus terrified with the Whales, and benumbed with the water, returned to the Iland, and hauing shifted a shirt and refreshed himselfe, aduentured the second time, giuing charge to one of the Company, to haue an eye on him so long as he could see him. This fellow saith, he saw him a great way from the Iland, and on the sudden lost sight of him; which is the last newes of him.

Crosse with other condemned persons left to inhabit there.

The eight of March, (all things ready) we departed, hauing gotten good store of sheepe and 30 some Bullockes. From the Tropike till we were in one degree eighteene minutes of South latitude, we met alway with a Southerly Current, which set vs to the South about seuen or eight miles in foure and twentie houres. The reason I guesse to be, because we were alway to the Eastwards of that Current, which sets towards the North-west from Saint Helena, so that wee went in the edge of the Eddy of the North-west Current. The five and twentieth of Iune, 1616. we arriued in the Downes.

Or a Relation of the fifth Voyage for the Ioynt Stocke, set forth by the Honorable and Worshipfull of the East-Indie Societie: consisting of five Ships, viz. the James Royall, of burthen a thousand tunnes, ROWLAND COYT-MORE Master: the Anne Royall, nine hundred tunnes; ANDREW SHILLING Master: the Gift, eight hundred tunnes; NATHANIEL SALMON Master: the Bull, foure hundred tunnes; ROBERT ADAMS Master: the Bee, one hundred and 50 fiftie tunnes; IONH HATCH Master. All vnder the Gouvernment of MARTIN PRING.*

§. I.

60  No 1616. The fourth of February, our Fleet departed from Grauesend. Thursday the sixth, Master Maurice Abbot, Deputie with diuers of the Commissioners were aboard the ships, and mustered all our men and payd their Harborough wages. The next day they departed, and all our men were entred into whole pay. After much foule weather. The fift of March, wee departed from the Downes. March the seuenth, we had the Lizard North foure leagues off, which lyeth lyeth in fiftie degrees ten minutes. From the Lizard we steered away by a Meridionall Compasse, giuing allowance in all our courses for the Variation. The seuen and twentieth, 1617. at noone we had in latitude twentie eight degrees ten minutes, the North-east point of the Gran Canaries West North-west fise leagues off.

The two and twentieth of Iune, we had sight of Soldania point, and the same afternoone anchored in the Bay, whence we departed on the thirteenth of Iuly. On the three and twentieth, we descryed Terra de Natal.

* An Eclipse.

The third of August, we descryed the land of Saint Laurence, in twentie two degrees fortie fixe minutes of latitude. On the eleuenth, we saw the Ile of Molalia. The Kings name is Fernando Mary O Fannadill: Pamon the name of the Port where we road: Commoro by the Inhabitants is called Angaziya. The next Iland to the East is Joanna: and the next to the East-ward of that is Mawotta.

The sixe of August, at night the Moone was totally eclipsed, when the foot of the Crossiers was nine above the Horizon: it began at eight, and continued til it was past eleuen, and was totally eclipsed for the space of an houre and halfe. The five and twentieth of August, at night betweene seuen and eight a clocke in South latitude foure degrees twentie minutes. The water of the Sea seemed almost as white as Milke, and so continued till the next morning: and then as the day came on the water began to alter againe. The next night wee were in the same water againe, but not altogether so white. The thirtieth, before day we saw the fore-said white water againe: and likewise the next night, but could find no ground.

The eight of September, we mounted the rest of our Ordnance; this night at twelue of the clocke we had six foote and an halfe water in hold, which in foure houres with both Pumps was freed, and after that the Pumps did sucke so much in the space of halfe an houre, that it would rise twelue inches water.

A great and dangerous Leake,

The ninth, in the morning, I caused the Chiefe Commanders of the Fleete to come aboard, where after that I had giuen them notice of the Accident, I willed them to send for their carpenters to haue their aduice in searching for the Leake, and some of their Companies besides to helpe our men to pumpe; others to rummage in hold, and the rest to stich our sprit-sayle with Ocom, wherewith we made tryall diuers times vnder the bidge of the shippe, but could not find the Leake, yet by diuers experiments within boord, we found that the Leake was before the Mast, and therefore the next morning being the tenth, wee fitted our sprit-sayle againe, as before, and let it downe before the sterne of the ship, and so brought it afterwards on by degrees, vntill by our iudgement it was vnder the starfe of the keele, and the sterne, and there (God bee prayed) our Leake was partly stopped, for it rose not aboue fixe inches in a Glasse, where before it rose twelue inches. After this comfortable newes, we steered away our course, and within three Glasses after the Ocom was washed out, so that we came to our old stint againe; this night we sent for one of the Bulls Pumpes to free our water from before, where there was alwayes till then a foot and an halfe water more then was in the Well.

The eleuenth. we fitted our sprit-sayle with Ocom, and let it downe againe, in which action it pleased God so to fauour vs, that within an houre after, our shippe was thighter then at any time before, which I pray God long to continue.

This ship did belong to Don Pedro de Almeida, and also most of the goods, Mozambique. Captain Nence and Jones.

At our arrivall at Swally, wee heard of two Dutch ships, and it away at Goudewer, viz. the Rotterdam of a thou and runnes, and a small Pinnasse; the one forced ashore. The 18. the other: The 19. of Iuly 1617. one in sight of another.

Portugall spies.

The twelfth, in the morning we descryed a sayle which the Gift did fetch vp in the afternoone: this was a Portugall which came from Mozambique, hauing about fife Kintals of Elephants teeth. In the morning, the Bee came to vs from Swally Road, and gaue vs intelligence of the rest of the Fleet, that they were all in safetie in the Road of Swally, which was no small ioy vnto vs. Likewise, we vnderstood that they had brought the Iuncke and the two shippes, which they chased the sixteenth of this moneth, into the Road with them; the Iuncke being a great ship of Surat, belonging to the Mother Queene, the other two English shippes which had her in chase, the one of the ships was called the Francis, a ship of one hundred and sixtie tunnes, belonging to (the other the Lion of one hundred and twentie tuns, set forth by Philip Bernardy, an Italian Merchant in London. The Captaine in the Francis was Nence, and of the Lion Thomas Iones, who in former time had bene Boat-swaine of the Hector.

This euening (God be prayed) we arriued in Swally Road without the Sands, where wee found the rest of the Fleet; the fore-said Iuncke, and the two English-men of Warre; the Bull and the Lion being got in on the barre. The five and twentieth, I gaue order that the Francis should goe in also, that we might be more secure of her and her Confort; the same euening, the Bee and the Prize went in also.

The ninth of October, at night, I sent vp one and twentie chests of Corall to Surat, which was landed from the Anne two dayes before; at night I sent eight tunne, foure hundred of Elephants teeth to Surat from the Prize. In the morning, wee had a consultation aboard the James, where it was determined that the Anne or Gift, should by Gods grace bee laden for England.

This afternone, twentie sayle of Frigats from Goa, arriued at the barre of Surat, the Captaine Maior, Don Pedro de Asadado, from one of those Frigats, fise of the Countrey people came ashore.

ashoare amongst our men, which being discovered, three of them fled and two were taken by our guard, who confessed that they came from Goa a moneth before, being commanded by the Vice-Regent to range the Coast, to discover the English; which found, they were to returne againe, if not descryed, to proceed on for Cambaya to waste the Cassallo.

The fourteenth * in the morning, I sent fourteene tunne of Elephants teeth to Surat, from the Prize, which were guarded vp with thirtie sixe men that went for the Conuoy of our mony to Amadaur. The seuenteenth, wee sent vp twelue tunne, and foure hundred teeth.

The seuenteenth Frigats aforesaid returned againe faire by vs, and stood to the South-ward, we sent the rest of our teeth to Surat. On the two and twentieth, and this afternoone we landed sixteene chests of Corall, and two of Mors teeth from the Bull.

The fourteenth of Nouember, being Friday, we dispeeded the Bee for Iasques, a monethes pay was giuen to all the Company in the Fleet, (the chiefe Commanders and the Merchants excepted) which amounted to three thousand three hundred and two Rials of eight. And after that, this afternoone we landed Cloth, Tinne, Cafes of Wine, and strong Waters, with the rest of the Presents that were in the Cabbin.

The seuenteenth of Ianuary, being Saturday, the Bee returned from Persia: this day seuen Mallah bar Iunckes Road in the offing, to whom I sent out the Francis, who brought in two of them, and the Bee other two.

Thursday, the twelfth of March, we departed from Swally Road, the same euening we anchored neere the Barre of Surat. The seuenteenth, in the morning, the wind veered vp Northerly, and in the afternoone the Anne departed from vs, bound for the Red Sea. Tuesday, the eighteenth, I dispeeded the Bull. At noone wee had gone South-east by South twelue leagues, latitude, eleuen degrees twentie five minutes, the winds (as foure or five dayes before) at night a little breath off the shoare, by day in the afternoone a fresh gale from the Sea; this day in the fore-noone we saw eight sayle of ships to the South-wards of vs, and three betwene vs and the shoare; moreouer, two Gallies and ten Frigats, these were chased to the North-wards, by the Bee and the Francis, which I had sent the night before, to keepe faire the shoare. The eight and twentieth, in the afternoone the Francis and the Bee being neere the shoare, and thwart of Callicut; the King sent off a Boat pretending to bee very desirous to speake with me, but I was too farre shot to the South-wards before that I heard the newes.

The second of Aprill, 1618. in the morning, we got into the Bay of Brin Ian, where we anchored in fourteene fathome water, within halfe a league of the Towne, a high picked hill like vnto a Sugar-loafe, bearing North-east by East by the Compasse, which is the best marke if it be cleane, to know the place; here is good refreshing to bee had, Hennes and Coco Nuts in abundance, Goates and great store of fish, also good fresh water springing from a Rocke; but wee were faine to pay seuentie Rials of eight, a Vest of Cloth, a small Peece, a Looking-glasse, and a Sword, and all too little to giue her content. For after the Gouvernour had receiued the Present with the mony, and granted vs leaue, he came againe with seuen or eight hundred men, and demanded more money, and had we not kept a strong guard at the spring, hee would haue put vs by it after our money was paid. Sunday, the fifth, at one of the clocke at night, the wind coming off the shoare, we weighed anchor and departed. This euening we were thwart of a headland, which lyeth South-east by East from Brin Ian eight leagues, from whence vnto the Cape East, two thirds South are seuen leagues. Neere vnto the first head-land lyeth two Rockes a good heighth aboue water, and a mile without them, there is a most dangerous Rocke, which is euer with the surface of the water, but if you come not within twentie sixe fathome, you shall goe cleere enough.

On the seuenth, in the euening at sixe we had Cape Commorin North North-east one third, North five leagues off, being in thirtie fathome. The nineteenth of Iune, Captaine Ball and Master Pickham came aboard. This afternoone (God bee praysed) wee arrived in the Roade of Bantam.

The foure and twentieth, I went to the Pangram, to compose the matter betweene Captaine Ball and the Chineses, whose Iuncke Captaine Ball had arrested for certaine debts due by the Chineses; where (according to Captaine Balls desire) I made proffer of the re-delivery of the Iuncke, conditionally, that the Pangram would doe vs Iustice; which he passed his word to performe. Munday, the sixth of Iuly, in the afternoone, I went againe to the Pangram, Master George Ball, Master Rich, Master Pickham, and diuers other Merchants in company. His malice was so great against Master Ball, that he would not grant him access, whereupon I sent him word that Master Ball had brought the bills of debt, and was onely able to giue a reason of all passages betwixt the English and the Chineses, whereof I was vtterly ignorant, his Messenger returned the second time, and told me that Master Ball might not be admitted, and so wee left the Court.

The first of September in the morning, the wind being off the shoare, we weighed, and stood towards Point Ayre, keeping along in seuen fathome vpon the maine, vntill wee were within three miles of the said Point, where we had seuen fathom wanting a quarter the one cast, and the the next but three fathom; some supposing that our ship did touch, but I could not perceiue it. Off this Point there lieth a flat shoald almost with the frame of the water, but you haue seuen fathom within two Cables length of it. This afternoone, as we stood in with the Dutch ships, which rode in the faire way betwixt the two Ilands, euen as wee came within a mile of the ships, our ship came aground, but (God be prayesd) we got her off againe without any hurt at all, and so stood in the Bay, where againe wee came within two Cables length of another shoald, which lieth South-east by South from the Flemmish Iles, one league and an halfe off.

Wednesday, the second of September in the afternoone, it pleased God to bring vs into the Road of Iacatra in safety, hauing deliuered vs from three imminent dangers the day before, God grant we may alwaies remember it with praise and thankesgiuing to his holy Name.

The sixe and twentieth of September, being Saturday, early in the morning, I went to visite the King the second time, remayning in his Parke; and finding him in a pleasant vaine, I moued him concerning of former businesse; and before I left him, we came to a finall conclusion, which was this: First, in consideration of our free importation and exportation of all manner of Commodities, to giue him seuen hundred Rials of eight per annum, and fiftene hundred Rials of eight, for a plat of ground to build on.

¶ II.

Dutch wrongs, and the Fights betwixt Sir THOMAS DALE and them.

Dutch iniuries to the English.

Sunday, the seuen and twentieth in the euening, Master Bishop arriued in this Road, in a Praw, which came from Iapparra, wherein was a Cogee which brought the Matran his Letter to Captaine Ball, wherefore I dispeeded him for Bantam the same night: he left two English behind him at Iapparra, one of them being fled from the Dutch, and had Letters from diuers of our People that are prisoners in the Moluccas, and amongst the rest, one was directed vnto me from Master Richard Tatten, wherein he complaineth very much of the boarish vsage of the Dutch, that will hardly allow them Rice to put in their bellies, and that vpon euery idle newes of the comming of any ships, they are still put in Irons.

French ship taken by Dutch.

Sir Thomas Dale Admirall of sixe ships. Alack againe.

The thirteenth of October in the euening, Cornelius Marthon, Commander of the French ship taken by the Dutch, came into the Road, and the same night came aboard of me, and after some discourse told me, that we had sixe ships comming for this place out of England, Sir Thomas Dale Admirall, for some speciall businesse at the Moluccas, and that hee was bound thither with the French ship, the Souldhailer, and the Neptune, to attend the comming of good friends. The seuen and twentieth in the euening, wee had foure foot and an halfe water in the James Royall, which wee freed in two houres with both our Pumpes, and afterward kept our Pumpe going vntill the next morning about ten of the clocke, at which time by letting downe of a sayle batted with Ocum, it pleased God to stop the leake againe. The one and thirtieth, I discovered a place for the careening of the James Royall, vpon the little Iland, that lieth next within Taniam point in the Bay of Bantam, we made all things readie to repaire vnto the foresaid Iland.

Taniam point.

Viun point. Polo Paniang.

The fiftenth of Nouember, the Rose arriued from Teco, bringing newes that the Hollanders had a Factorie there established soone after that ours was dissolved. The nineteenth, the Moone, the Cloue, the Samson, and the Pepper-corne, arriued from England, and anchored betweene Viun point, and Polo-Paniang. This day I went aboard of them, taking with me such fresh victuals as our ship did afford to congratulate their comming. Comming neere, I perceiued the Cloue to be Admirall, and therefore went first aboard of her, where I found Sir Thomas Dale the chiefe Commander, and Captaine Iordaine the President; I vnderstood by them, that they lost companie of the Globe to the Westward of the Cape, and (which was farre worfe) that they left the Sunne (Admirall of the Fleet) in great danger of casting away, vpon the Ile of Engano: they themselues hauing much adoe to double the Iland. Two dayes they rode still in this place expecting her comming, which was long before bildged vpon the Rockes, as afterwards we vnderstood to our great grieve. The two and twentieth in the morning, the foresaid ships stood in for Bantam Road, and as they passed by the Iland where our ship lay, wee saluted them with fiftene Peeces of Ordnance, which we had formerly planted on the shoare, and withall, tooke in our Flag, to shew our respect to Sir Thomas Dale, the Admirall of that Fleet.

Sunne lost at Engano.

Leake againe.

The eight and twentieth of Nouember, came two boats from Engano, with sixtie eight of the Sunnes men, who brought lamentable newes of the losse of the said ship with many of the companie, vpon the foresaid Iland. The nine and twentieth in the morning, the Globe arriued; this day our leake brake out againe, but was quickly stopped (God bee prayesd) by remoouing of the Bonnet. The thirtieth, our ship being cleared from stemie to sterne, the Carpenter went downe to search for the leake, and as they passed forward, thill taking vp the feeling as they went, in the formost roome sauing one, they found the leake being an augur hole left left open in the middle of the keele; which was foure inches and three quarters about, which leake, if it had sprung vpon vs alone in the Sea, would haue tired all our companie in foure and twentie houres, herein the great mercie of GOD did manifestly appeare, in that it neuer brake out but when we had a Fleet about vs for our aide, GOD giue vs grace alwaies to remember it with praise and thanksgiuing to his holy Name.

Their leake found, being an agur hole left open.

The second of December being Saturday, Sir Thomas Dale and Captaine Ball came aboard, because we had proclaimed a Fast through both the Fleets, and the Exercise to bee aboard the James the next day, which was the Sabbath: on which morning, the President and diuers Merchants came aboard, bringing Master Wrenne in companie: the Preacher of the Sunne, who exercised in the fore-noone, and Master Copeland our Minister, in the after-noone. This day the Bee set saile for Engano, being formerly ordained to goe thither, in hope to recouer some monies and goods they hold of the Sunne. The fourth in the after-noone, the Swart Leo arriued from Potania, and rode to the Westward of Poolo Paniang; Master Denton in regard of his acquaintance amongst the Dutch, was sent aboard of her in the barge, to enquire from whence shee came: who when he came aboard, found one Hendricke Ianson his old acquaintance, a man that had bene chiefe Factor for the Dutch in Potania a long time. This man with another inferiour Factor came aboard the Moone with Master Denton, where they were well entertained, till Sir Thomas Dale came aboard, and soone after were set on shoare at Bantam the same night, before day we resolved to goe forth with foure ships, the Moone, the Cloue, the Globe, and the Samson, that we might the better incompasse her. At breake of day wee were faire by her, and after a few exchange of Parles, they yeelled vp their ship, vpon condition that they might depart with all such goods, as did properly belong vnto them. On the sixt, we brought her in neere the Iland where we had left the rest of our Fleet.

A Fast in both Fleets.

Master Wrenne, and Copland.

The Blacke Lion a Dutch ship taken.

The fourteenth, the Bee returned againe beaten back with foule weather, that she was not able to get out of the Straights. On the sixteenth in the after-noone, there came twentie Portuguezes aboard the James Royall, fled from the Dutch at Iacatra, which were freely receiued, and kindly entertained. This euening, we were readie to set saile with eleuen ships great and small for Iacatra, in hope to beat away the Dutch ships from thence; The names of the ships were the Moone, in which Sir Thomas Dale went, the Gift, wherein I went my selfe, the Unicorne, the Cloue, the Globe, the Samson, the Pepper-corne, the Thomas, the Bee, the Rose, and the Swart Leo; leaving behind vs the James Royall, there to take in her prouisions, alio the Prize, and the Aduice, because they had most of her prouision in them. The nineteenth in the morning, wee set saile with our Fleet aforesaid, and the same day wee anchored betweene Poolo Paniang, and Poolo Tunda. The twentieth in the euening, we anchored with all our Fleet about a league to the Northwards of Hector-Iland. This night we sent the barge to the Flemmish Ilands, where they found no people at all vpon the Souther Iland, there lay a Dutch Galley which they set on fire, and so returned aboard the same night. This euening, wee descried seuen roders in the Bay of Iacatra. The one and twentieth early in the morning, these seuen ships stood off with vs vntill they were somewhat neere the Ilands, and there they came to an anchor altogether. This afternoone we stood in towards them, and anchored a mile to windward of their Fleet. This euening, we had a consultation aboard the Moone, where it was resolved, That the next morning we should assault the Holland Fleet in manner following: The Globe, and the Samson, for the Sunne; and the Thomas to passe in betweene them, fitted with combustible matter to set her on fire; the Moone, and the Cloue, for the Golden Lion; the Gift, and the Bee, for to attempt the Angell; the Unicorne, and the Rose, for the Deuill of Delfe; the Pepper-corne was sent forth to surprize the burget boat come from Iambee; riding about three leagues off; whose boat with thirteene men, our barge had taken as shee was standing in with the Holland Fleet, about seuen of the clocke at night: this our determination being written downe, we departed aboard euery man to his charge, but after we were gone, Sir Thomas Dale sent his boat aboard the Thomas, for three Sakers, which held them in worke till eight the next morning, so that the Hollanders were all away before these Ordnance were aboard the Moone, which made vs all in a hurlyburly to weigh, and get to seawards, that we might haue sea-roome, and the aduantage of the feature; the which at length wee attained, getting without the Iles of Point Aire: the Holland Fleet passing betweene them and the maine of Iana. So that the same night they anchored faire about the Coast of Iana; and our Fleet in the offing without the Ilands.

The English ships.

Consultation for the Fight betwixt the English and Dutch Fleets.

On the three and twentieth, in the morning, the Holland Fleet stood off to the Westward close vnder Anti-Lackie. The Deuill of Delft borrowing so neere that shee came aground, and sate fast for a quarter of an houre; which was no sooner perceiued by vs, but forthwith we made towards them with all our Fleet; yet before we drew any thing neere, she was slipt off againe; and shee with all the rest of the Fleet standing off to the Northwards: our Fleet hauing the weather gadage, wee paid roome vpon them, till wee came within shot, and then the Moone, (wherein was Sir Thomas Dale the Admirall) beganne the fight with the headmost ship of the Dutch, named the Sunne; our fight continued the space of three houres, during which time wee spent some twelue hundred great shot amongst them, and so left them for that night; they standing off so farre to the Northwards, that they got the Burger boat into their companie, and then anchored to the westwards of vs, about halfe a league: there they rode all night.

The foure and twentieth, both Fleets weighed anchor, ours plying to the westward to gaine the wind; and the Hollanders ranne in to the shoare, towards Point Aire: in the meane time wee descried three Saile comming from the westward afore the wind, which comming neere, we perceiued to be the little James, the Hound, and the Francois; and after they were come neere vs, we ioyned all together, and chased the Holland Fleet, through the Bay of Iacatra vnto the Easterne point of the same; where wee all came to an anchor in the euening. This night there was a lunke sent from the Flemmings at Iacatra, filled with combustible matter, and set on a light fire, which came so neere vnto our Fleet, that we were faine to weigh our anchors and be gone. The five and twentieth, being Christmas day, wee saw the Flemmish Fleet againe, standing to the Eastwards, and the same day, wee sent out our barge to follow them all night, and see what course they tooke, because we had left the James Royall in the Bay of Bantam, with the Aduice, and the Prize, which ships they might haue surprised, if they should get Bantam before vs; for there was no ship of defence, but the James, and shee vnprepared, by taking in of her goods. 10

The seuen and twentieth after midnight, the Blacke Lion was set on fire by the wretched carelesnesse of three wicked fellowes, and burnt downe to the water. The thirtieth in the morning, the President went ashore to the King of Iacatra, with Master John Iackson in companie, to view their fortifications, where an vnfortunate shot tooke away his leg, and so consequently his life. 20

Aide to the King of Iacatra.

The first of Ianuarie, the James Royall, the Aduice, and the Prize, arriued from Bantam. The second, Sir Thomas Dale went ashore to visite the King of Iacatra, and to vnderstand his resolution concerning the Dutch Fort: The King gaue both the President and him great content in words, promising to grant any reasonable request, if the English would assist him in surprising of the Dutch Castle. This morning before day, the Francois departed for Polaroone, with diuers prouisions for reliefe of that worshipfull Gentleman, Master Nathaniel Corthop, and his companie, God send her thither in safetie. The sixt day, we held a consultation aboard the Moone, where it was resolved, That out of our greater ships we should land six Peeeces, three Culuerings, and three Demi-culuerings, with powder and shot, conuenient to assist the King of Iacatra against the Dutch, also that Sir Thomas Dale should remaine in the Road with eight Saile, to countenance the businesse, and my selfe with sixe ships to plie for the Straits of Sunda, to lie in wait for the Holland Fleet. The five and twentieth, being Munday, wee got into the Road of Becee, and anchored in fiftene fathoms oze, about two miles from the shoare, the South point of Becee, bearing South-west one quarter West, and the North point of Sabaioa: (the Wester Ile of Poolo Tiga, being shut in vpon it) did beare North by West three leagues off. The twentie seuen and twencie eight, we watered our ships, and cut wood; and my selfe with Master Coitmore, and other Masters went ashore twice, to view the Harbour; which wee found to bee an excellent place for refuge of a small Fleet against a greater force. The one and thirtieth, by order from the President, we put into Bantam Road with our Fleet. 30

This agreement was crof-

who gaue vs leauie to beat the bush, and thought himselfe to haue caught the birds, but in fine was deceiued.

The first of Februarie, Captaine John Iourdan the President came aboard; who acquainted me with all the passages betwixt them and the Dutch, in the Castle of Iacatra, during the time of my absence; which was that the Dutch had condescended to deliuer ouer their Fort vnto the English, vpon condition they might depart with bag and baggage, and a ship for two thousand Riials of eight, to carrie them for Coromandell. On the fourth, Sir Thomas Dale with sixe ships, viz. the Moone, the Cloue, the James, the Peppercorne, the Hound, and the Aduice, arriued in Bantam Road. This afternoone, the rest of the ships came in. Here, after our arriual vnderstanding that the Pomgram of Bantam had dealt vnder-hand with the Dutch, to haue the Castle of Iacatra deliuered into his hands (who before had vniustly disappointed vs of it) we thought it fitting, that the President, and the rest of the Principals should repaire aboard, and forthwith to get all their goods and prouision from the shoare. The tenth, eleuenth, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth, we were employed in getting the Honourable Companies moneys and goods aboard the ships: during this time, the Pangram sent diuers slight messengers vnto the President, to demand (as from themselves) the reason of his departure, he (as he said) giuing them no other iust occasion, so to leaue his Countrey: whereupon the President drew certaine Articles of the seuerall wrongs and grieuances, that the English had receiued from time to time at his hands, which were to bee translated into the Iana language, and sent vnto him. 40

The seuenteenth, Master Vfflet aduised from Iacatra, that the Flemmings were fortifying daily. And also, that when the Messengers of the Pangram demanded the surrender of their Fort, with part of their Moneyes, Goods and Ordnances; They answered, That it was their Masters goods, and therefore not fit for them to giue them away. About noone, wee heard of the arriual of two Dutch ships, in the Road of Iacatra. The same night, Sir Thomas Dale with eight ships, went for Iacatra, in quest of the said ships, and I remayned here with foure to attend vpon the President. 60

dent. The sixe and twentieth, we had certaine intelligence that foure Holland ships were at anchor in the mouth of the streights of Sunda: this euening we went out with the James Royall, the Gift, the Unicorne, and the little James; and the next morning anchored neere Poolo-Pen-lang, to pridy vp our ships, and to take in water and planks that lay by our side.

The first of March in the morning, we weighed againe, and plyed towards the mouth of the Streights, where we descried the foure Dutch ships aforesaid at anchor, neere vnto the Island called Tamporon, which lyeth about three leagues to the Westward of Vium or Pakambam point. So soone as we descried them we made towards them with all speed: and they in a carelesse fashion plyed it to and againe with their top sailes halfe mast downe, and at length as wee drew neere vnto them, the Admirall and the rest bore vp with our ship, being the winder most of our Fleet; and gaue vs two shot, one through the ships side vnder the halfe decke; and the other in the steeridge side. Dutch brauery.

This I declare, because men may the better vnderstand the insolencie, or rather vinuvalencie of this arrogant Nation, to come on with such a Spanish brauado, and so soone to run away. vinuvalencie of the Dutch. They had no sooner begun, but they were as quickly answered from our ship, in such a measure, that within the space of two houres (by the gracious assistance of Almighty God) wee made them as quiet as Lambs; the Admirall, that first gaue the on-set, being the first that ran away, and after him all his Fleet; whom we chased vntill night, and then finding them too light of foote, gaue ouer the chase. The night wee stood ouer towards Poolo Tunda. The second in the afternoone, we anchored againe in the Road of Bantam; this day we had newes from Iacatra, that one of the two Dutch ships aforesaid, was fast on ground hard by their Castle, and that they themselues at sight of Sir Thomas Dales fleet, had set her on fire. The other ship which tooke in some rich goods out of the Castle, was likewise cast away vpon certaine Rocks, ten leagues to the Eastwards off Iacatra. The fourth dicto, we receiued the Letter from Io. Powell, residing in Iacatra, that Sir Tho. Dale departed from thence the first of March with the Moone, the Hound, the Rose, and the Bee, to search out the Flemming that was cast away. The fourteenth in the forenoone, we had newes from Sir Thomas Dale, that hee had gotten almost in shot of these foure ships; and then they were taken with a calme the space of twelue houres, and after this calme there did arise a tempest in the night, which scattered them so farre asunder, that the next morning they were out of hope of their chase, and so returned to point Ayre againe, determining forthwith to come vnto vs with the Moone, and to leaue the rest of his Fleet to take in some prouisions from Iacatra. Dutch ship burnt, and another cast away.

The of March, we consulted aboard the Unicorne, of our best course to bee taken with the Fleet, where it was resolved, that we should goe for the Coast of Coromandell, which (as we were informed) is a good Countrey for the health of men, and abounding with Rice, Wheat, Butter, Grauances, &c. which could not here be had for any money. A Tempest.

§. III.

40 Their departure for Coromandell: Occurrents there: Sir THOMAS DALES death. English ships taken by the Dutch. Consultation and prouisions at Teco, and departure thence.

 Prill 19. 1619. being Munday, all our ships being together that were in this place, and the three Iunks at anchor amongst vs, wee resolved in counsell to put the honorable Companies Commission in execution, which was to appropriate the Chineses goods vnto them for former debts. On Tuesday, Kewee came aboard to the President, accompanied with the three Nochadas or Captaines of the Iunks, to know his intent; who answered them, That if the young King of Bantam would displace the Pangran, he would then come and Bichur with him, and deliuer ouer the Iunks againe. The eight and twentieth in the morning, all our Fleet being readie to set saile, intending to goe for Morrogh, there to take in water, and to discharge the Iunks; we descried a saile comming in from the Westward about Pallambam point, which we found to be a Portugall Frigat, taken at Iasques, and hauing twentie English men aboard of her, and was sent from Captaine Bonner, as an aduise to the President in Bantam. These men gaue vs to vnderstand, that Sir Thomas Roe the Lord Embassador, was gone for England in the Anne Royall, hauing quitted the Countrey with great honour and reputation, both for himselfe and the honorable Companie our Employers. Bodman, who was the cause of setting the Black Lion on fire, was hanged. On the two and twentieth of May, this night wee set saile from hence. Morrogh.

The thirtieth, we parted with Sir Thomas Dale, who haled in with his Fleet, vnder the Island: and we held on our course for Messulapatan, hauing in companie the Gift, the Unicorne, and the Bee. The thirtieth of Iune in the morning, wee anchored in nine fathome about two leagues of the shoare on the Coast of Coromandell, here we roade for the space of foure dayes, during

The cause that put vs to leeward of Messulapatan, was the violence of the Westerly winds, and the Current setting so strong to the Eastward.

From the place where we first anchored vnto the foresaid point, which we supposed to be nine leagues we had seven fathom water, all along two leagues or two leagues and a half off lost Ozic.
Cape Comfort.

ring which time, we were hardly able to visit one another, by reason of the West South-west windes, and the continuall Currents setting to the East North-east. The breach also was so loftie on the shoare, that we durst not aduenture to put to shoare with any of our boats. At length when we met together, Master Roberts, Master of the Vuicorne, gaue me notice of a Bay, lying in seuentene degrees vpon this Coast, about fve leagues to the Eastwards of Nassapora, where there was good riding for a Westerly Monson, which was the onely thing I now desired, seeing there was no hope against Winde and Tyde to recouer Messulapatan. The fourth in the morning, we set saile and stood to the Eastward, the Coast lying West South-west, and East North-east, and hauing run about nine leagues by iudgement with the Wind and Current, wee found the Land to lye away North, and North and by West, which gaue mee some hope of a good Road: by this point of Land there commeth out a great Riuer, the fireame whereof hath raised a great Rife or Shoald of the sharpe of the Point, extending it selfe halfe a mile into the Sea, which maketh the smother Road about the point, for you may bring the said sand South South-west, and ride in sixe degrees and an halfe fathome Oze, two miles off the neereft Land. Two leagues from the Northwards of this point (which for distinctions sake I call Cape Comfort) issueth out another branch of the former Riuer, which maketh the head-land it selfe an Island, of the mouth of this Riuer lyeth likewise a long ridge of sand which is drie at low water; the Northermost point of this ridge beareth North-west halfe a degree West from vs, where we ride in sixe fathome and an halfe, three miles off; and the shoald of Cape Comfort beareth South South-west three miles from you, and the neereft land between them both about two miles off: The next point to the Northwards of Cape Comfort is three leagues & a third part distant from it, and did beare from vs (whence we road) North North-west, halfe a degree West, two leagues and a third part off; to the Eastward of this point lyeth another sandie Shoald, the Eastermost part of it bearing North from vs about foure miles off: in the setting of all these Points and Shoalds, I haue allowed the variation, which in this place is twelue degrees neereft.

Mullet Sound.

The fourth of Iuly, in the afternoone, we sent the Vuicorne Shallop into the second branch of the Riuer (which we call Mullet Sound) to see if they could discouer any Towne, where they might procure a Guide to conduct Robert Pickering and William Clarke vnto Messulapatan, by whom we had sent our Letter to Master Methwold. Tuesday the sixt in the morning, the Shallop returned aboard, reporting that they had gotten a Guide to direct our Messengers at a little Village three leagues vp the Riuer; they brought aboard twentie Hennes which cost two shillings. Friday in the afternoone, the Barge returned aboard from Captaine Ball with one and seuentie Goates and Sheepe, and nine and thirtie Hennes, leauing Captaine Ball and the rest at a Towne called Nassapela, which is sixe leagues vp in the Countrey. The twelfth in the morning, Master Methwold came from Messulapatan in one of the Countrey Boats, and brought with him twentie Hogs, two great Iarres of Racke, sixe Goats, and two baskets of Bread; hee brought vs newes of a Dutch ship richly laden, in the Port of Messulapatan, and readie to depart for Holland.

Prouisions.

Vingeron.
Coranga.

The sixe and twentieth in the euening, I went in the Barge to seeke out some Barge which might lead vs vnto Vingeron, the chiefeft Towne that is neereft the Sea side: The same night I passed in ouer the Barre of Coranga, and about two miles vp in the Riuer, I lodged in the town of Coranga, where I found the chiefeft of the town very readie to entertayne vs in the best manner they could, and gaue the Gouvernour of Vingeron notice of my comming the same night. The next morning, hauing rowed vp about three miles in the mayne Riuer, and two miles in a little Creeke we had sight of Vingeron about twelue miles off. Here I landed and went towards the Towne; but before I came to the Townes end, the Gouvernour sent his Horse for mee with all the musique that the place afforded; amongst other instruments there were two huge brasle Hornes in stead of Trumpets: The Gouvernour received mee very kindly, but more kindly my Present, which was two pieces China Veluets, and sixe pieces China Taffataes; our congratulations ended, I tooke my leaue of him, who had then caused his Pallankeen to be made readie to conueigh me vnto my lodging, which was an house neere at hand, that he himselfe had allotted for mee.

Mendrowned
neere to Ponara.

The first of August, I returned aboard the James, where to my griefe I vnderstood, that the Vuicorne shallop was cast away three dayes before, neere vnto Ponara. Master Harris being drowned with two of the Coxsons gang, and one Blacke; Captaine Spaulding, Master Yard, and the rest, very hardly escaping the danger. Saturday in the morning, the Gouvernour of Vingeron came aboard to see our ship, in expectation of some great Present; on whom I bestowed a piece of China Damaske, and foure pieces of China Taffataes, which gaue him more content then the sight of a thousand ships, and so hee departed, when he saw that begging could no further preuaile. On Munday the three and twentieth, I caused our men to repaire aboard, intending to ply vp towards Messulapatan: This euening wee got aboard two hundred and fittie Goats for our prouisions at Sea.

Prouisions.

Tuesday in the afternoone, here arriued a Ballegat from Nassapora, bringing in her twentie sixe Candees of Granances, a Candee of Butter, and one hundred Gallons of Racke; this day I received ceiued letters from Messulapatan, importing the dolefull newes of the death of Sir Tho. Dale, he departed out of this life the ninth of August, 1619. in Messulapatan.

The death of Sir Tho. Dale.

Munday, the sixt of September, in the morning, hauing road most part of the former night about three leagues South South-east from the Barre of Nassapore in nineteene fathome, finding the wind at North-west, we set saile againe and plyed it vp towards Messulapatan. This night we anchored foure leagues to the Eastwards of Messulapatan.

Of the Riuer of Nassapore, we found the Current by day to set South South-east by night North North-east, after halfe a league an houre. They arriue at Messulapatan.

The seventh in the morning, wee saw the English ships in the Road of Messulapatan foure leagues off. This afternoone, the Bee being farre southerly, wee stretcht it alongst the shoare, and in the euening arriued in the Road of Messulapatan; where we found the Moone, the Cloue, the Globe, and the Adnice, which being found vnseruiceable was here cast off, and her prouisions put aboard the Moone and the Cloue. Wednesday, in the morning, Master Spaulding, Master Ball, and Master Methwoud, came aboard the Iames, giuing mee notice of all matters that had passed in my absence, also of the state of the honorable Companies businesse at present. This afternoone I accompanied them ashoare, that we might the better consult and determine how to proceed in these weightie affaires; the first thing proposed, was the vnion of both Fleets, which was thought most necessarie, and therefore soone concluded, which businesse ended, they made choise of me to be Admirall and chiefe Commander of all these Ships and Men thus vnited, according to the honorable Companies direction. The eighteenth of October, being Munday, here arriued a ship from Mocha belonging to the Towne, who brought vs newes of the Lion being at Mocha, and a small Frigat in her companie. The Bee arriued from Nassaporpete, with prouisions from the Fleet.

Both fleets vnited. Capt. Pring Admirall of both. The Lion at Mocha in the Red Sea. Nouemb. 6. Nassaporpete.

The nineteenth, the Dragons Claw came from Nassaporpete, almost laden with Rice and Pad-die. Thursday, the ninth of December, in the afternoone, Master Ball, Master Methwoud, and the rest of the Merchants, that were to remayne in this Countrey, went ashoare.

Friday, the tenth, in the morning, we left the Road of Messulapatan, and in the afternoone anchored of the head-land to stay for the Pepper-corne, which came out to vs in the euening, betweene the Ile Engano and Messulapatan, I made nineteene degrees and thirtie minutes of great Circle in longitude, which although it giue not the true longitude in these parts neere the Equinoctiall, custome hath called it so, and so doe I, because I would not sauour of innoation.

The longitude betweene Engano and Messulapatan.

The next morning very early, we descried the Land of Sumatra, the Hill of Passaman, bearing East North-east halfe North twelue leagues, and the high Land of Priaman East halfe South fourteen leagues off. Here we met with two Shoalds; the one within a mile to the Eastward of the other; the Gist came ouer the Eastermost, and had no lesse then foure fathom and a halfe: ouer the Wester Shoald I sent the Claw, who found foure fathom: in the first place shee crossed it, and had but two fathom as shee returned, which was a little more to the Northward. This morning before day, the wind began to duller againe, which was the onely meanes that pleased God to vse for our preseruation, his holy Name bee praised for the same. This morning about nine, the wind came vp South-east, and so continued vntill three in the afternoone, which brought vs to the Southward of all these Shoalds againe, and so with little wind we spent all the next night betweene the foresaid Shoalds and the Ile of Battoo. A sagging Current setting to the Northwards, brought vs so neere vnto these Shoalds; for had the Current, as in former time set away to the South-east, our course would haue lead vs neere vnto Tecoo, but contrarie to our expectation, wee found that it had carried vs to the Northward, and this deceived our iudgement.

Passaman in Sumatra. Two Shoalds, and their escape.

Ile Battoo.

Tecoo.

The foure and twentieth of Ianuarie in the morning, the Hill of Passaman did beare East North-east one third part Northerly, and the high Land of Priaman East one third part South twelue leagues: here we saw a drie Shoald in forme of the Hull of a great Boat, lying South-west by West of the Hill of Passaman, about ten leagues from the shoare, and West North-west from this Shoald foure leagues, wee saw the breach of another Shoald, which by Gods gracious prouidence we happily escaped. This euening at sixe of the clocke, we had sight of the Iles of Tecoo, and halfe an houre before eight, we anchored in fortie foure fathom streamie ground, the said Iles of Tecoo bearing East by North seuen leagues off. Tuesday, the five and twentieth in the afternoone, with the first of the Sea-turne, we weighed againe and steered in towards Tecoo. As we drew neere we descried three saile, standing to the Northwards of the Ile of Tecoo; which ships came to anchor faire by the shoare the same night; and we with all our fleet about a league without them. Thursday in the morning, they weighed anchor and came vp with vs, which were found to bee the Palgrave, the Elizabeth, and the Hope; by these wee heard the dolefull newes of the taking of the Dragon, the Beare, the Expedition and Rose, by sixe Holland ships, as they were at anchor within the Iles of Tecoo; also of the losse of the Starre in the Streights of Sunda, taken by the Dutch. Moreouer, how they had sent foure great ships, double manned, in quest of the Samson and Hound, of the safetie of which ships wee are very doubtfull; so that the English ships which they haue taken, doe almost equall the number of our three Fleets, now ioyned in one.

Three saile of English.

The Dragon, Beare, Expedition and Rose, taken by the Dutch. The Starre, Samson and Hound taken.

Munday, the one and thirtieth of Ianuarie, we held a consultation aboard the Iames Royall, Consultation. concerning our future proceeding, where it was with one consent agreed and concluded to goe to Achin, in hope to meet with our ships from Surat, that we might keepe our Forces together, according to the honorable Companies directions: The reasons mouing vs hereunto, were the want of Rice and other prouisions, which could not at this time bee procured at Bantam. Secondly, the consideration of the Hollanders forces, holding it no wisdome for vs to aduenture the whole estate, that the honorable Companie hath now in India, vpon such desperate termes; they hauing at this time foure ships for one of ours. And lastly (Causa sine qua non) the necessitie of careening of three of our ships, which may no longer be differred without imminent danger of all three, viz. the Iames Royall, the Gift, and the Vnicorne. And therefore we haue resolved, by the grace of God, to goe for Iapan, where we are giuen to vnderstand, that there are all 10 things necessarie for the careening of ships, and store of prouisions for the reliefe of our men.

The eleuenth, at night, Master Mills arriued in the Bee with three hundred sacks of very good Rice, and eleuen Hogheads of Oile, giuing vs great encouragement to send thither againe. Saturday, the twelfth, at night, the Claw was dispeeded againe for Pedang and Cuttatinga, to procure Rice, &c.

Tuesday, in the night, we returned the Bee to Priaman to prouide more Rice and Oile. Saturday, in the afternoone, the Claw returned with foure and thirtie bags of Rice, sixteene thousand Coquer-nuts, ten Goats. This night, the Bee arriued from Priaman with nine hundred and eightie sacks of Rice, procured by the great labour and industrie of Master Mills, Merchant of the Elizabeth. 20

Friday, the third of March, in the morning, we departed from the Road of Tecoo; intending by the grace of God, first to touch at Nimtam, for the dispatch of the Bee for England; and from thence, God willing, to goe for Achin, in hope to meete the Charles and the Ruby from Surat. This day afternoone, wee anchored in five and twentie fathom Ozie, the middle Ile of Tecoo bearing East South-east, about two leagues off. Saturday, in the morning, wee set saile againe and stood off West and West by South: This afternoone, we anchored againe in three and fortie fathom ground, the Iles of Tecoo being East from vs about eight leagues off, and the White Rocke West by North halfe North foure leagues off. This White Rocke lyeth West one third part North from the Iles of Tecoo, distant eleuen leagues. Sunday, in the morning, the wind at North, wee weighed anchor and steered away South-west, for that the Current (did then) set to the Northwards: we had not gone about one league this Course, but the wind veered vp at South-west by West, so that we could lye but South by East, and before we had run three miles South South-east, our men from the sprit saile top descried Rocks vnder the ship, at sight whereof wee brought our ship astayes, and shot off a peece of Ordnance for a warning to the Fleet. Before our ship was come about, we had but three fathom and a halfe; yet, I thanke God, we neuer toucht. Our ships being tackt, we stood to the Northwards, thinking the safest course to returne the same way we came: but we had not made about two miles North and by West, before we saw other Rocks againe vnder our ships head, vpon which we had but seuen fathom. The depth that we found all this day, when wee were free from these dangers, was fortie and two and fortie fathom: and therefore, seeing it had pleased our gracious God to free vs from both these dangers, we edged in againe a mile or little more within them, and there anchored againe vntill the next morning. 30

Vpon the highest of this Shoald our Boat found but three foot water.

From this Shoald the White Rocke did beare West North-west foure leagues: and the Hay Rocke, which is the flittiest of the three ham-mocks to the Northwards of Teco, did beare East North-east halfe East, nine leagues off.

Escape of danger from Rocks. Samanca. Ballambeen. Anniar. Crackatow and Bece.

The thirtieth of March, 1620. we all anchored in the Bay of Samanca, about a mile off the shoare, where we tooke in water and wood, and other necessaries. The last of March, our shallop was sent vnto the Bee at Ballambeen to call her away. The first of Aprill, wee sent the Vnicorne shallop for Anniar, to enquire of the Dutch forces, and how the Pangram stood affected towards vs. At eleuen, at night, two and twentie of our men run away with the Barge: In the morning, the shallop returned from Anniar, and brought newes of fifteene sailes of Hollanders at Bantam and Iacatra, whereupon we resolved to goe for Bantam, to treat with the Pangram, hoping that the Hollanders would not venture vpon vs. This afternoone also, the Bee arriued with our shallop from Ballambeen. The sixt, we set saile for Bantam: The seuenth, wee came in betweene Crackatow and Bece, where we met with a Prow, with some of our people, come from Anniar. 40

¶ IIII.

Newes of the peace betwixt English and Dutch: the mutuall congratulation: Voyage to Iapan, returne thence and home.

Aturday the eight in the morning, at foure of the clocke, we met with the Bull come from England, with the ioyfull tydings of peace betweene the Dutch and vs; which God in his mercie long continue, shee had a small ship in her Company called the Flying Hart, which was sent out with her, hauing Letters from their Generall; 50 to aduise vs or any of their ships of the agreement and uniting of both the Honourable Companies.

This afternoone we anchored all together neere the point of Pallambam. On the eleuenth of Aprill, in the morning wee descryed the Dutch Fleete, who came from Iacatra to meete vs, and to congratulate our arrivall: Generall Coen being there himselfe in person. So soone as the Hollanders Generall was come to anchor, we began to salute each other with our great Ordnances, to signifie vnto the Countrey people our great ioy, that we conceiue in this happy tydings.

Generall Coen.

The twelfth, we came into Bantam Road with both our Fleets; ours consisting of twelve 10 sailes, theirs of fiftene; besides, two of their ships, which wee found in that Road. This day Master Johnson, Commander of the Dutch Fleet, came to visit mee with the Fiscall and diuers others: Master Brockendon, Master Spalding and my selfe were inuited aboard the Admirall shippe, where wee conferred with the Generall concerning our future businesse; and after we had compared the Articles and Letters, he was content that wee should proceed ioyntly according to the Honourable Companies instructions; but would not publish the same, vntill the arrivall of some ship from the Low Countries. Friday the fourteenth, in the morning, by a 20 generall consent, we sent M. Beaumont, and Philip Baduge, with one Dutch Merchant ashore, to the Pangram, to make him partaker of our good newes; and that we being now vnited, desired onely a good composition and reasonable agreement that wee might remayne in his Countrey in peace, and enioy free Trade as we had in other parts of India. But the Pangram was so impatient at the newes, that he would afford no answer: but oftentimes demanded of them, why we would be friends with the Dutch, and so they were faine to returne without any answer. Saturday, the fiftenth, we sent the same message againe vnto him, but then they were not suffered to come on land.

Pangrams hate to the Dutch.

Wednesday, at foure in the morning, I departed from Bantam Road in the Iames Royall, hauing the Vnicorne in Company intending by the grace of God, to goe for Iapon; there to careene and trimme our ships: Master Brockendon the same time departing with six ships for Iacatra, hauing 30 resolued about one moneth after our departure, to send fve good English ships, and fve good ships of the Dutch after vs to Iapon, * that from thence wee might take the fittest time of the yeere to goe for the Manillas.

Voyage to Iapan.

* The Voyage I haue set in a Paragraph or Section by it selfe: that the studious of Marine knowledge might make vse of that, which would perhaps to others seem to interrupt his more easie and delicate Muses, with a Sea-sicknesse. Here we found the Swan, and Expedition sent hither, as I suppose, to the disgrace of our Nation in those remote parts of the World.

They arrive at Firando, Sasima, Nangasaque, Charles Cleauengar.

A Tuffone or Tempest.

We arrived into a Port of Ferando, called Cochee, which is about foure English myles and an halfe to South-wards of the Hauen Ferando. Tuesday, the fve and twentieth of Iuly, Capitaine Cox sent good store of Funnies or toe Boates aboard of our ship to helpe vs. This day in the afternoone (God bee praysed) we arrived in the Port of Firando. This day, before wee got into Firando, the Elizabeth brought in a Frigat with her, wherein there were found certaine Silkes, Hides, and some Sugar; the Mariners were Iaponeses with certaine Portugals, whereof some were Fryers: the Elizabeth came into Cochee also, Capitaine Adams, Admirall of the Vnited Fleet, arrived in the same place about three houres after me in the Moone; likewise William Johnson in the Trow.

The fixe and twentieth, in the morning, a generall Councell of English and Dutch were assembled in the English house at Firando, where it was resolued that the shippes which lay neere the Coasts of Sasima, should be called in, because wee were certainly informed, that the Frigats of Macao were newly arrived in Nangasaque. Sunday, the thirtieth, the King of Crats came aboard the Iames Royall, and seemed much to reioyce to see such an English ship, demanding of the Iurabassa, if this were one of the English Frigats; whereby we supposed that the Dutch had giuen out, that we had none but small ships like vnto Frigats.

Tuesday, the first of August, a generall Councell was holden at the English house, concerning the choice of two men, the one English, the other Dutch, to carrie the Present to the Emperour, where (after it was considered, that I could not so long bee spared from the Royall Iames, nor Capitaine Adams from his Fleet) at length we made choice of Master Charles Cleauengar Com-50 mander of the Palsgrau, and Ioseph Cockram Cape Merchant of the Fleet, to goe in the behalfe of the English, and Iasques le Febre of the Harlam, with Marthia de Brooke, for the Dutch. On the sixth, the Palsgrau arrived in the Road of Cochee. The seuenth, the Bu' came into the Road of Cochee, hauing cut off all her Masts by the boord (as they say) to saue ship and goods; Capitaine Adams and I did visit the King of Firando, carrying with vs a small Present which was very well esteemed, and wee of our selues very courteously entertayned. Wednesday, the ninth, the King inuited the English and the Dutch to Dinner, where to shew his respect vnto our Nation, he caused vs to sit downe on the right hand, and the Dutch on the left; and the first Dish of euery course, was presented vnto vs.

Munday, the fourth of September, we had a great Tuffone with the wind Northerly, which 60 forced the Moone on shore, and ouer-set the Expedition, so that she sunke downe suddenly. The Trow had likewise beene ouer-set, had not the Master of her soone preuented it, by veering of her sterne ashore. Tuesday, the fift, I caused many of our men to come aboard the Moone, to helpe hale her off, where we all strived along time to no purpose. The thirteenth, the Moone was got off againe, to the great ioy of vs all, hauing receiued no hurt at all by her lying so long on shoare. The nineteenth, the James Royall hauing all things taken out, but onely certaine bars of Lead, to helpe trimme her ouer was heaued downe almost halfe way to the keele. Thursday, the one and twentieth in the morning, the James Royall was brought downe so low, that wee saw part of her keele, and so began presently to sheath her. In foure dayes the Carpenters sheathed one side of the James, from the keele vp to the lower bend. Wednesday, the seuen and twentieth, I sent a Cooper, two quarter Masters, and a Butcher to Nangasque; to kill and sale such meate as was prouided for vs.

burnt.

Thursday, the twelfth of October, we had the James downe to keele againe on the other-side, on this side we found foure dangerous places, where the maine planke was eaten thorow by the Wormes; in each of those places wee graued in a piece of planke, and in one of them we droue a trunnell, where there was neuer any before: also wee nailed a piece of Lead vpon the end of the bolt, which was formerly driuen through the keele to stop our great leake; our ship was righted againe both sides, being finished vp to the lower Bends. Saturday, the one and twentieth, the Moone was finished on both sides. Tuesday, the foure and twentieth, we had newes that Nangasque was burnt, that a fire beginning in the Portugall street, consumed foure or fife of the richest streets in the Citie.

Their departure from Firando.

The seuenth of Dec. being Thursday, we departed from Firando: and the same euening wee anchored in the Bay of Coches. Saturday, the sixteenth, Captain Cleauengar, and Captaine Le Febre arriued in Firando, from the Emperors Court, with the ioyfull tidings of good successe in their businesse. Sunday, the seuenteenth in the morning, I tooke my leaue of them, and about noone, the wind being faire, and the weather cleere, we left the Road of Coches.

Comming to Bantam.

Thursday, the sixteenth of January in the morning, seeing foure ships in Bantam Road, we weighed and stood in, a little within Pan-Iang, at length there came the Pepper-cornes boate aboard our ship with the Master, one Morton, he told me that there were two Dutch shippes in the Road, and one French ship; to whom the Pangram had granted Trade, and that the English and Dutch had consoorted with him to share the Pepper in thirds amongst them. I also vnderstood by him, that the most part of our lading was readie for vs at Iacatra.

Arriue at Iacatra.
Vnicorne lost on the Coast of
China.

Wednesday, in the morning, I set saile for Iacatra, and the same euening anchored neere vnto Antilaky. Thursday, the eighteenth, at night, we arriued in the Bay of Iacatra, where we found the Charles, the Gift, and the Cloue, and two Dutch ships, viz. the Leyden, and the Sun, and at He-Elor Iland, the Globe, and the Bee. Here I met with the Master of the Vnicorne, and diuers of his Company, who came hither in a Iuncke: their ship being lost vpon the Coast of China. The James hauing discharged her lading, was readie to relade for England. Heere was at this time in the Charles, the Cloue, and the Gift, about six hundred tunns of Pepper, & the Beare daily expected from Iambe with two hundred tunnes more, which gaue vs good hope that wee should very neere make vp our ships lading with Pepper, Beniamin, Cloues, and Silke.

Returne for England.

Munday, the sixe and twentieth of February, in the morning, I departed from the Road of Iacatra in the James Royall, hauing taken in our whole lading of Pepper, sauing fiftie fife Peculs; also, certaine Sapetas of Silke and some Cloues. This businesse ended about ten of the clock this fore-noone, we set saile for England. I pray God in his wonted mercie to conduct vs vnto our Natiue Countrie in safetie, in his good time appointed.

Soldania.

Sunday, the twentieth of May, 1621. in the afternoone, wee arriued in the Road of Soldania, where we found the Anne Royall, and the Fortune, ships belonging to the Honourable Company of London, and three Dutch ships, viz. the Gawda, the blacke Beare and the Herring, all bound for Bantam and Iacatra. The one and twentieth, we romaged our ship. Tuesday the two & twentieth, we sent some Water-caskes on shoare, and set vp a Tent for our sicke men and Coopers, and sent fife and twentie men on land to guard them. This night, I ordained sixtie men to goe in company with sixtie Dutch in quest of Cattle, who returned the same night in vaine.

Saint Helena.

The second of Iune, in the morning, we left the Road of Soldania, with the wind at South South-east, South-east from the twentieth at noone, vntill the one and twentieth at six in the morning, West fifteen leagues at this instant (God be prayd) we descryed the Iland of S. Helena; the bodie of it (to our iudgement) bearing West, two third parts North, about fiftene leagues off. This euening, we got within fife leagues of the Iland, and there plyed it off, and on vntill fife the next morning, and then we did beare in about the North point of the Iland, and the same forenoone, about ten of the clocke we anchored thwart of the Chappell Bay, halfe a mile from the shoare in sixe and twentie fathomes. The North point of the Iland bearing North-east two third parts East, one league off, and the other point South-west by South one league and an halfe off: betweene which two points there are seuen Vallies, and the Southermost of the seuen, leadeth vp right to the Limon Trees. Munday, the fife and twentieth, wee weighed anchor againe, and road off the Valley, about halfe a mile from the shoare, in twentie seuen fathomes, blacke sand and small Corall, the Northermost picked point bearing North-east halfe East from vs two leagues off, and the Southermost point in sight South-west halfe South, two miles off, this is the best Valley for refreshing that I know in all the Iland.

Chappell Bay.

At this Iland we remayned seuen dayes, during which time we filled our water, and got at least least fiftie Hogges and Goats, and aboue foure thousand Limons. Friday, the nine and twentieth of Iune, in the morning, at nine of the clocke, hauing very well refreshed our selues, (through the good prouidence of Almighty God) we departed from hence, and the same Evening at fixe, we had the bodie of the Iland South-east by South eight leagues off, the wind at South-east, the weather ouer-cast.

The sixteenth of August, at noone we saw the high-land of Pico East North-east about fifteene leagues off. The seuenteenth, at noone we had the top of Pico North sixe leagues off, being in the latitude of thirtie eight degrees, twelue minutes. Whereby I perceiue that the South-side of Pico lyeth in thirtie eight degrees thirtie minutes neereft.

10 The fifteenth of September, wee had the Lands end of England eight leagues off. Tuesday, the eighteenth, we arriued in the Downes.

The greatest variation on the Westerne side of S. Helena, which wee found was fifty deg. fifty six min. Easterly.

The Voyage from Bantam to Patania, and thence to Iapan, with his returne to Iacatra; set by it selfe for the vse of Mariners.

20 The seuen and twentieth of Aprill, being Thursday, we tooke leaue of this Fleet, and steered away to the North-wards, borrowing within halfe a league of the Easter point of Poolo Tunda, and in the euening, came to an anchor about a league off the North-east point of it in twentie three fathomes water ozie, where we roade vntill the Westerne streame beganne to returne to the East-ward againe, which was about tenne at night.

The eight and twentieth at night, we anchored in twentie eight fathoms ozie, Poolo Antekero bearing North-east three leagues off. Poolo Antekero lyeth from Poolo Tunda, North North-east halfe East about eight leagues off. The depth betweene them from sixteene fathomes to six and twentie, and so to twentie two, twentie, eightene, sixteene, fourteene, and twelue fathomes ozie. Poolo Antekero is the West-most of all the row of Ilands, which extend themselves from the mouth of the Bay of Iacatra, to the West-ward.

30 Saturday, the nine and twentieth, to the euening, we were in fifteene fathome. Poolo Kero bearing North by East halfe East of vs, two leagues and an halfe off. Poolo Kero lyeth from Poolo Antekero North North-east neereft, distant fixe leagues from the time that wee had Antekero, North-east three leagues off, we had twentie, eightene, sixteene, fourteene, twelue fathomes ozie.

Sunday at noon, we had the Poolo Kero, South halfe East six leagues off. Our depth continuing thirteene, twelue, and eleuen fathomes the same ground.

40 The first of May, at noone, we had Poolo Kero South halfe west, nine leagues off, beeing as much as we could see it at our top-mast-head, the depth twelue fathomes. Here by obseruation of the Sunne we were in South latitude foure degrees forty five minutes from noone, vntill five, North North-east foure leagues. Here we anchored againe in twelue fathomes ozie, hauing Poolo Kero, by estimation South by West from vs, thirteene leagues off. This night at nine, as we were at anchor in the same place, by obseruation of the Croliers, I made the ship to bee in foure degrees, fortie minutes South latitude, allowing twentie nine, for the complement of the declination. Tuesday, the second in the morning, betweene foure and five of the clocke wee set sayle againe, and the same day at noone we had runne about six leagues North North-east. The depth continuing as before, thirteene, twelue, eleuen fathomes. From the second to the third, at noone we made an East by South way, five leagues, finding such depths as the day before. The ground from Bantam Road hitherto all ozie. From Bantam for the space of two dayes wee had Sea-turnes and Land-turnes. From thence, vntill the second of May in the afternoone, the winds betweene the East and the South-east, and then the wind came vp Northerly, and so continued vntill the third at noone. From Poolo Peniang vnto Poolo Antekero the Current did set vs to the West-ward, for the most part some-what strong, but from thence vntill wee drew neere vnto the Streights of we found but an easie Current, which did runne almost vpon all points of the Compasse, euery twentie foure houres. From the third at noone, vntill the fourth at noone North North-east eleuen leagues, the depth from twelue to ten, halfe a fathome ozie. From noone, this day till seuen at night, North five leagues and a halfe, where we anchored in ten fathomes and an halfe lesse.

60 Friday, the fift in the morning, we weighed againe, hauing little wind and variable, vntill halfe an houre after fixe, and then the wind came vp at South-west and blew fresh. From foure to nine we made North-east halfe Easterly three leagues: and from nine vntil noon North-west by North halfe a league, the depth ten fathom neereft. This day at noone, wee were in three degrees and thirtie minutes South latitude, where wee descried a little Iland North North-east halfe East foure leagues off, which appeared at first sight like a great Tree rising out of the Sea, from from noone to fixe North-west five leagues : here wee saw two or three Hummocks like Ilands North by West from seven leagues off. From hence vntill three after mid-night, West six leagues: at fixe we had nineteene fathom, which as wee stood to the Westward in the night increased to ten, eleuen, and twelue fathom; and afterward it decreased vnto eight fathom, where wee came to an anchor, the streame by night set South-east, by day North-west.

Cheribon.

Saturday in the morning, we weighed at fixe againe, and steered away West North-west one league and a third part: here we had sight of many Hummocks rising like Ilands, which at length we perceiued to be all one Land, as we drew neere to it: after wee had gone one league and a third part West North-west, as aforesaid, wee came into seven fathom a halfe lesse, and therefore tackt about to the North-eastwards, making a North North-east way vntill noone, about two leagues and a halfe; at which time by obseruation of the Sunne, wee were in three degrees and twentie minutes neereft South latitude, being gotten into eight fathom water againe; where we found the Current to set away North-west by West: here also about noone this day, a Iunck of Iore came vp with vs, which had beene at Cheribon vpon Iana, and was now returning to Iore. This afternoone wee steered in with the Easterne part of this Hammockie Land, and making our way as the Easterne Point did beare from vs, which was North North-east halfe North, in this our course we came againe to seven fathom, and so increasing to foure and twentie fathom, and from thence decreasing to seven fathom a quarter lesse, where we anchored againe the said Point of Land, bearing North North-east, one third part North foure leagues off.

Many Ilands.

Sea full of I-lands twist Banco & Burneo.

Sunday, the seuenth in the morning, we weighed and stood in neerer vnto the Point, in hope to haue passed through betweene this Point and an Iland, which lyeth three leagues to the Eastward of it, but as we stood in, we found the depth of the water first to increase from seven fathom vnto seuentene fathom; and from thence againe vnto fixe and foure fathom a quarter lesse. And about two miles of the Point in the faire way, we had but fixe foote water, which our shallop found as shee was founding of the Chanell. To the Eastwards of this place there appeared many small Ilands, and by the report of the people in the Iuncke, the Sea is full of Ilands betweene the South-east end of Banco, and the Ile of Burneo. Now this was the South-east end of Banco, which did beare North North-east, halfe North about two leagues off; and the Land from this Point vnto the entrance of the Streights of Banco, did lye West by South neereft about thirteene leagues: there as wee were at anchor, the foresaid Point bearing North by East halfe East two leagues and a halfe, we found (by obseruation of the Sunne) the ship to be in three degrees and eight minutes South latitude.

Munday in the morning, (hauing little hope to find a passage betweene the South-east end of Banco and the foresaid Ilands, by reason of the fearefull shoaldings which wee had alreadie found) we resolved by the helpe of God to goe through the Streights of Banco, and there with all presently came to saile, steering off as neere as we could iudge, the same course that we came in: in which course we found more dangerous shoalding in our standing off, then wee had done in our comming in before. After we had gotten about eight leagues off South South-west from the South-east point of Banco, we steered away South-west by West, the Current setting North west, which made a West by South way neereft; this course wee run five leagues, and anchored in eight fathom Ozie, about nine at night.

The ninth in the morning, we descried Lucepara North North-west seven leagues off, and steered in neere with it vntill we had it North two leagues. In this course we came ouer a spit where wee had but foure fathom and a halfe and five fathom a quarter lesse, but drawing neerer vnto Lucepara, we had five fathom and a quarter, and when it was North two leagues off al Ozie ground. And so all the way before, now, and after that we had brought it North two leagues off, as I haue said, we steered North-west by North, vntill Lucepara was North-east of vs, and had five fathom the same ground: and then we went West North-west, hauing alwayes Ozie ground till we were within two leagues of Sumatra shoare in fixe fathom. Here we had our Ile of Lucepara East South-east three leagues and a halfe off. And a Hill vpon Banco with a deepe swampe North by West neereft, being a sailes breadth open of the Point of Sumatra, which was then North by West halfe West from vs, about three leagues off: wee steered from hence away with the foresaid Point North by West, and had fixe and a halfe and seven fathom, soft ground, vntill we came within a league of the Point, where edging too neere the same, we had but five fathom and a halfe, and foure and a halfe in the Boat hard by vs: but had we kept a little further off that Point, wee might haue gone away in seven, eight, nine, and ten fathom, and so all the Streights alongst, borrowing carefully with our Lead vpon the Sumatra shoare; but hee that keepeth any thing neerer vnto Banco then vnto Sumatra, shall haue very vncertaine shoalding, sometimes deepe and otherwhiles shoald, and commonly foule ground, whereas on Sumatra side if you should come into shoald water, yet the ground for the most part is soft, ozie, and the founding farre more certaine; all which will more plainly appeare by my description of this place.

Friday, the twelfth in the euening, hauing brought the North-west Point of Banco North-east, east, we opened two smooth Hills with a little Hummock betweene them, the Northermost of them being the Northermost Land of Banco, and bearing from the North-west Point aforesaid, North-east nine leagues off. This night we steered North North-east, to goe through the Channell betweene Linga and the North end of Banco, finding twentie three, twentie two, twentie, Linga, eightene, and sixteene fathoms ozie, vntill we came neere the entrance, and afterwards fifteen, fourteene, thirteene fathoms, going through the passage. Linga riseth at first in three Ilands, the Northermost being bigger then both the other, rising full of Hummocks, being neere two leagues in length. The Iles of Linga haue certaine fragments of Iles intermixt amongst them, shewing like Hay-cocks, which is a good marke to know them. From the smooth Hill, which 10 is the South end of Banco, vntill the South Westermost Ile of Linga, North by West ten leagues, East North-east halfe North. From the middle of the greatest Ile of Linga (which is the North Eastermost of them) lyeth another smooth Iland nine leagues off, and about two leagues to the East North-east halfe North. From that there is another flat Iland, and off the North Point of the round smooth Iland, lyeth also a little fragment like a Rocke. In the way betweene this smooth Iland and Linga you haue fourteene and thirteene fathom water, also being in the mid-way betweene them, your course is North, to passe alongst by the Easter-side of Bintam. This day at noone wee were in one degree South latitude, the greatest Ile of Linga South-west five leagues, whereby we gathered that the great Ile of Linga stood in one degree and ten minutes

A little Iland.
neereft. This afternoone we saw a little Iland to the Westward of vs, about eight leagues off, 20 which lyeth North North-west neereft from Linga.

Sunday, the fourteenth at noone, hauing made a North way foure and twentie leagues, by helpe of the Wind and Current, which did set North, we had sight of the high land of Bintam,
Bintam, rising with two Hills and a deepe swamp betwixt, being to our iudgement twelue leagues from vs. At this time also we had sight of three or foure Hummocks, rising like Ilands, South-west by West eight leagues: here we founded and had ground in twentie fathom. From Linga vnto this place we had fourteene, fifteene, sixteene, seuentene, eightene, and twentie fathom, as wee supposed, streamy ground; for wee had not meanes at all times to trie it. From mid-day the fourteenth vnto the fifteenth at noone, North a third part West, seuen and twentie leagues. This foure and twentie houres, twentie one, twentie two, twentie three, and twentie foure fathom.
30 This day from twelue to three, three leagues and a halfe. Here wee saw Poolo Loar, bearing
Poolo Loar, North-west halfe North from vs, by our iudgement about twelue leagues off, at this instant we had seuen and twentie fathom, the ground like vnto Fullers earth; this night Poolo Loar being North-west by West eight leagues off, we had nine and thirtie fathom ozie. From the fifteenth at noone, vnto eight the next morning, we made a North North-west halfe West way fifteene leagues. The sixteenth at eight, Poolo Loar did beare South-west by South off vs fixe leagues, distant the very body of the Iland Hermano de Lajo, West South-west halfe West seuen leagues
Hermano de Lajo, off: and Poolo Tymon the South end West halfe North ten leagues; and the North-east end West
Poolo Tymon, North-west halfe west ten leagues off. This euening wee anchored within foure miles off the North Point of Tymon in foure and twentie fathom, streamy ground, the Point it selfe bearing 40 West by South halfe South. This euening, I sent our shallop about the Point, where they descried a Towne and a Iunke, riding close by the shoare, and diuers Praws a fishing, whereof one came to them to enquire what Nation they were, and told them, that at the Towne there was good fresh water, and Buffels, Goats, and Hennes.

Wednesday in the morning, about foure of the clocke, wee sent the Vnicornes long Boat with ours to the said Towne, who returned in the afternoone with foure Butts of water a piece, not willing to fill more because it was brackish. At the watering place they found a Iuncke of Ior,
A Iuncke of Ior, which was set out for a man of Warre, and hauing twentie small shot besides Lances and Iauelins; he reported to our people that he had taken a China Iuncke, and sold her on the Coast of Ior. And sent me word, that he would take my part against the Portugall, as long as his life did last. In the next Bay to the Southwards of the North Point of Poolo Temon, wee found very 50 good fresh water, but we could not conueniently take it in with our long Boat, for shee drew five foot water being loden. Thus hauing spent our day in this place to little purpose: I set saile the first of the night, directing our course for Patania, steering away due North with little wind
Patania, all night.

Thursday at noone, we were in three degrees and fortie minutes South latitude, hauing made a North halfe West way, by meanes of the Current, which did set a way North by West about a mile an houre. This afternoone at foure, hauing made a North halfe West way about eight leagues, we descried the Ile of Tingoran North North-west fifteene leagues off: This night wee
Poolo Tingoran, passed along by Poolo Tingoran, about fixe leagues to the Easterward of it hauing twentie eight, thirtie and thirtie two fathoms soft ground.

Friday, at fixe in the morning, we had Poolo Tingoran West South-west seuen leagues off: here we had fixe and thirtie fathom the same ground. This day at noone wee were in five degrees and thirtie minutes. Tingoran bearing South one third part East fourteene leagues off, whereby we conceiued that the Ile of Tingoran standeth in foure degrees and fiftie minutes. This day at noon.

noone we had likewise the South-Ile of Poolo Rowdon, North-west by West seuen leagues off: and in the same night at eight of the clocke, I obserued the Crofiers, and made the ship to be in five degrees fortie eight minutes, the Eastermost (which is the greatest of the Iles of Poolo Rowdon, bearing West foure leagues off. From eight at night vntill noone the next day, our way was neereft North-west by West nine leagues; in this course the depth we had from twentie eight to seuentene fathoms: then the Northermost Iland of Poolo Rowdon was South, one third part East, foure leagues off; being a round Hummocke much like to Pomo in the Gulph of Venice, but somewhat higher, and more compleat: these Iles of Rowdon are good high land, and a faire depth from the one end to the other, on all the Easter side, and as I am informed a faire Channell betweene them and the Maine, there are in all, thirteene or fourteene Ilands great and small. Saturday from noone, vntill Sunday, eight in the morning, our way was West North-west nine leagues: here wee saw two hills by the water side, bearing West of vs five leagues off, rising like two Tortugas. From Poolo Tingoran vnto Potania, is very high land alongst vp in the Countrey, and low land by the waters side, with a sandie Strand at least twentie leagues to the Southward of the Point of Potania, and how much farther I know not; but so farre I haue seene. This Saturday in the afternoone, as we stood in West North-west to the two hills aforesaid, wee came from seuentene vnto fourteene and thirteene fathomes, hard ground; and as wee drew neerer the hills, the depth encreased againe to nineteene fathomes ozie, and thence to eightene and seuentene fathoms, the same ground.

Sunday the one and twentieth, from eight in the morning vnto seuen at night, our course was North-west three quarters West thirteene leagues, keeping for the most part, within foure leagues of the low sandie shoare, the depth all the way fiftene, fourteene, and thirteene fathoms: here at seuen wee anchored in thirteene fathoms and a quarter streamie ground, the Northermost point in sight (falling downe from a reasonable high land at the end of all the low land) did beare West North-west halfe North, neere three leagues and an halfe off. Sixe leagues South-east by South from this Point lieth a Rocke, as high aboue the water as the Hull of a small ship: we passed along about a league and an halfe to the Eastward of it, finding no alteration of our former depth: this point aforesaid I call, the Gurnets Head. From this Point, the land trendeth away West North-west, and West by North, vnto the entrance of Potania Road, being all low land from the Gurnets Head vnto the very Point of the Road, and lowest of all at the same Point. From Gurnets Head vnto the said low Point, the distance is sixe leagues; and all the way of faire depth, vntill you draw neere the low Point of the Road: but there you must giue a good birth, because there lieth a shoald from it halfe way ouer vnto the Wester shoare: therefore you must not bōfrow too neere it, before you haue the shoalding of the Wester shoare: and there you shall find the softest ground. From the low Point, as you range ouer the Bay vnto the Wester shoare, you shall not haue aboue five fathomes, and foure fathoms and an halfe, when you are in the Road; where you shall haue the low Point East North-east one third part East, and the highest mountaine on the Wester side of the Bay will then beare South South-west one third part West.

Racke, and Rack-apee.

Thursday, we anchored in the Road of Potania, where we found the Samson, and a Dutch Pinasse. The day before we came into the Road, I went alhoare to the English Factorie. Where I found Master Adam Denton, and Master Richard Welding, lately come from Iambe in a Praw with diuers English of the Samsons companie, who were all glad men to see such English ships in that Port. At my comming to the English house, I acquainted Master Denton with the cause of my comming, which was, for Racke and fresh Victuals, whereof wee stood in great need; whereupon he presently gaue order, to lay out for all things necessarie; that within six dayes we were furnished with sixteene Buts of Rack and Rack-apee, whereof three Buts of Rack-apee, we had from the Dutch; which curtesie they did vs, to hasten our dispatch: Beeues, Goats, and Hennes, we had here in plentifull manner. Here also we bought Dammar and Oyle for the trimming of our ships, because I vnderstood it was very deere in Iapan. Heere also I found a small Frigate, bought by the English, which being of no great vse in this place, by generall consent it was thought fitting, that shee with most of the English Sailors should goe along to attend vpon the James Royall.

Camboia.

The last of May, we departed from Potania.

The first of Iune, at seuen in the morning, wee descried a small Rocke, which appeared but little aboue water, lying very dangerous for ships that goe from Potania for the Head of Camboia: when this Rocke did beare North North-east halfe East, a league off, then the high-land ouer Gurnets Head was South South-west halfe West, thirteene leagues off, and by computation, the low point of Potania Road was eightene leagues off, West South-west halfe South from vs. After we were out of the Road of Potania, in seuen fathoms, the depth increased orderly to eight, ten, twelue, fourteene, sixteene, eightene, twentie, twentie two, and twentie foure fathoms, vntill we had sight of the Rocke; and about two leagues from the Rocke, five and twentie fathoms ozie: and such was all the ground from Potania to this place. This day at noone, this Rocke being West from vs about foure leagues off, we found the ship to be in seuen degrees twentie minutes.

From hence vntill the third at noone, East halfe North fortie five leagues, here we saw Poolo Hube East North-east halfe North, eight leagues off, hauing fourteene fathoms ozie: all this eight and fortie houres we had ozie ground, the depth from twentie seuen to thirtie sixe fathoms, and from thence decreasing againe to fourteene fathoms, which was the depth wee had when we saw this Iland. This Poolo Hube riseth first with one round hill, then as you come neerer, you shall see a shoulder of somewhat high land rising in hummockes: but not aboue two third parts as high as the round hill, being all one land with it, and then shall you see another lesser round Iland rise, which is neere about the highth of the hummockie land, and lieth close aboard the greater Iland. At the East end of this lesser round Iland, there are two little Ilands very neere it, and a mile to the Eastward of them lieth a long Rocke like the Hull of a Galley. This night wee anchored in thirteene fathomes and an halfe ozie, about three leagues off the greatest Iland, which was also the highest. The next morning wee weighed againe, and stood away East by South, and East by East, hauing but little wind. This euening at sixe, wee had the bodie of Hube West by North, foure leagues off. From hence wee steered away East by South, and East, vntill sixe the next morning, but the Current checked vs to the Northward, by which meanes we made our way to the Northward of the East.

The fift, from sixe at night vntill sixe in the morning, we ranne fifteene leagues, the course afore-said, and here we had sight of a very little round Iland, bearing foure leagues off; and to the Southward of it about a mile distant, a long flat Rocke a good highth aboue water. From Poolo Hube vntill we came three leagues off this little round Iland, we had thirteene, fourteene, fifteene fathoms, and fifteene, fourteene, and thirteene againe, all ozie ground. When we were within two leagues of this small Iland, we had thirteene fathoms sandie ground. Here we descried Poolo Candor, the Norther end of it bearing East by North, from this Iland about seuen leagues off. This day at noone wee found the ship to bee in eight degrees fortie two minutes North latitude, the highest land on Poolo Candor being East from vs sixe leagues off: from Potania vntill wee were in sight of Poolo Candor, the winds for the most part were at South South-west. This day at noone wee steered away North-east, North-east by North, and in the night North North-east; so that wee made North-east by North in all vntill the next day at noone, about foure and twentie leagues: In this course wee found thirteene and fourteene fathoms ozie.

Tuesday, the sixt at noone, we had sight of two Hummockes vpon the Coast of Camboia, bearing North by East, and to the Westward of that low Land. From Poolo Candor vntill wee came in sight of this Coast, we found the Current setting East by North: here also when wee saw those Hummockes bearing North by East nine leagues off, wee had twelue fathoms streamie ground. Wednesday the seuenth at noone, wee found the ship to bee in ten degrees fortie two minutes, hauing runne from the former noone vntill this present, North-east a quarter North five and twentie leagues: heereby wee found, that the Current setting East by North, had carried vs ten miles to the Northwards of our computation, our depths from twelue to sixteene, twentie, and twentie foure fathoms; and so to twentie, eighteene, sixteene, fourteene, againe, sandie ground. From the afore-said two Hummocks, as wee did coast it along within eight leagues off the shoare, and sometimes more, sometimes lesse, wee saw high Land all along vp in the Countrie, and in many places by the waters side, a smooth Land about the highth of the Lizard, with many plots of white sand vpon it, as well as by the waters side. The first white spots that we saw vpon the smooth Land, was vpon the very Point that is ten leagues to the Westward of the Cape Cessier, which at first seemed to bee a Towne with faire houses and white walls: this Cape did beare West North-west halfe West from vs, about sixe leagues off, this present day at noone, when we were in ten degrees fortie two minutes. Thursday at noone, we were in eleuen degrees thirtie minutes, hauing gone twentie leagues North-east halfe North, from the former noone. The night before, at eight of the clocke, we came to an anchor in twentie two fathome streamie ground, where the Current did set East halfe North, vntill twelue; and then finding that it had recourse to the Westward, wee weighed anchor againe, and steered away North-east, and North-east by North, all the night; and so vntill the eight at noone afore-said: in which course we had from twentie two to twentie eight, thirtie two, thirtie sixe, fortie, fortie foure fathoms; and a little before noone, fortie seuen, and after that wee had no ground. The cause why wee anchored that night was, that wee found very vncertaine shoalding, hauing had eighteene, twentie, twentie two, and twentie foure fathomes: and after noone on the sodaine we came into sixteene, fourteene, twelue, and the Unicorne being faire by vs had but nine fathoms and an halfe.

From the eight vntill the ninth at noone, wee steered alongst the shoare North North-east sixteene leagues, North by East six leagues, North six leagues, and North by West nine leagues; which made in all a North by East one third part Easterly way, thirtie six leagues: here we had Cape Varrella West South-west eight leagues off, being in the latitude of thirteene degrees thirteene minutes: this Cape is called by the Chineses (Ientam) which in their language doth signifie a Chimney, becaule it hath a sharpe Hummocke on the top of the hill, much like vnto a Chimney on the top of a house. From the ninth vntill the tenth at noone, North two third parts West twentie sixe leagues, the latitude fourteene degrees thirtie minutes: here we were about ten leagues off the land; and the day before, wee came not aboue fixe leagues off Cape Varrella, by which I gather, that the land trendeth away North by West from Cape Varrella. Sunday at noone, we were in sixteene degrees ten minutes, hauing runne from the former noone thirtie three leagues and one third part, due North. Munday at noone, twentie sixe leagues North North-east halfe North, latitude seuentene degrees fortie minutes, the Current hauing set vs fixe miles to the Northwards. This euening at fixe, we descried the Ile of Aynan, the high land bearing North-west by North twelue leagues, wee hauing gone from noone seuen leagues North-east. From hence vntill noone the next day, North-east by East twentie two leagues: here we were in eightene degrees and an halfe. This morning, we chased a Portugall Frigat, but shee was of so light burthen that we could not come neere her. 10

The fourteenth day at noone, we were in ninteene degrees thirtie five minutes, our way from the former noone North-east twentie sixe leagues; whereby wee found that the Current had carried vs foure leagues to the Northwards of our account: and yet this day at noone, with our boats in seuentie three fathoms ozie, and found no Current at all. Here we saw many Ripplings like ouer-falls, as though there had gone some great Tide, but found none as yet. This afternoone at fixe, we anchored againe, with our boat in sixtie eight fathoms ozie sand, and found a small Current to the Southward. The fifteenth at noone, wee had runne seuentene leagues North-east by North: here we were in twentie degrees thirtie minutes, the Current hauing carried vs seuen leagues to the Northward, here we had fortie five fathoms sandie ozie. The sixteenth at noone in twentie one degrees and twentie minutes, we had sight of three Islands; the Eastermost bearing North North-east, the Westermost North-west, the neereft land nine leagues off: here we had twentie two fathomes ozie sand; we met with the wind here at East South-east, which blew very fresh: but from Cape Varrella vnto this place, wee had the wind alwayes, from the South South-east to the South-west. The next morning at eight of the clocke, we had twentie eight fathomes ozie, hauing runne from the former noone South-west eleuen leagues: where perceiuing the wind and weather to encrease, wee thought it better to anchor, then to runne backe the way that we came.

Current.
Ripplings.

Sunday the eighteenth in the morning, the weather somewhat faire, we endeauored to weigh our anchor; but euen as our anchor was apeeke, the cable brake in the halfe, being new, and neuer wet before; by which accident we lost a good anchor. The Unicorne, as wee were almost apeeke, shot off a Peece, whereupon I sent the Shallop speedily aboard her, to know what was amisse; who brought me word, that shee had sprung agreat leake, which had almost tired all their men with baling: which as soone as I heard, I sent thirtie men aboard of her, to ease their men by spells, vntill it should please God to discouer the leake: this day the wind at South-east, which stood to the Eastward, making of a North-east way, vntill fixe at night, at which time we saw the former high Island againe, North North-east one third part East, ten leagues off, hauing twentie three fathoms. This euening, our men returned from the Unicorne, and brought vs newes, that the great leake was firmly stopt, whereat wee all reioyced. From fixe to twelue at night, we made a North-east way fourteene leagues, where we had twentie fathoms ozie. From twelue to five in the morning, wee stood to the Southwards, making a South-west way three leagues and an halfe; here wee had twentie sixe fathoms againe, ozie ground. 40

The nineteenth, from five this morning, we cast about to the land, the wind at South-east, wherewith we made a North-east way: and at fixe of the clocke were within eight leagues of the aforesaid high Island, bearing North by East from vs: and at eight this morning, Master Roberts, Master of the Unicorne, came aboard of vs, and told mee that they had another great leake broke out, and that they must needs seeke out some smooth place to ride in, the better to search their leakes, and to fit their fore-mast better in the step: hereupon I resolved to beare vp vnder the great Island, which was now North by East from vs, in hope to find a smooth Road, the more speedily to effect their businesse. There were many more llands in sight, both to the Westward, and to the Eastward of vs; but this being the neereft to vs, and the likeliest, we steered with it; being within three leagues of it, the wind began to duller, and the night was at hand, therefore we plied it to and againe, vntill the twentieth in the morning, and then the wind was so farre Northerly, that wee could not cease the place. This day I went aboard againe of the Unicorne, to know what they intended to doe; where I found them all very willing to stand it alongst, because the wind was faire; not doubting but that they should bee able to ouercome it. When I heard their resolution, I caused all my Laskayres to remaine aboard the Unicorne, to assist them as occasion should require, and so we stood away all that afternoone vntill midnight, with a faire wind, and faire weather; but then it began to blow so much wind, that wee were inforced to lie here a trie with her maine course all night. 50

leakes.

The one and twentieth in the morning, we saw the Unicorne a league and an halfe afterne off vs; hauing a fore-saile and a sprit-saile out; which, as afterward I perceiued, was to flat her about about for the shoare againe : I presently caused our fore-courfe to be made readie to flat our ship after her , although wee had little hope to assist her in any thing , because the sea was so farre growne, as our men were a losing of their fore-courfe, there came such a violent gust that they were faine to furl it againe : if not, our saile would haue beene blowne away. After the gust was ouer, we set our fore-saile , and to make her weare the rounder , wee braled vp our maine course, part of it being blowne out of the bould-rope before they could furl it, after that the maine-saile was vp, we put the helme hard aweather, thinking that the ship would haue come round, but all in vaine ; for shee would not weare aboue two or three points, and then come to againe. Now the sea was so growne, that we durst not let fall our sprit-saile ; and the wind so violent, that we could not loose our fore-top-saile : and this while the Vnicorne was out of sight, when we saw that our ship would not weare, we steered away, as neere as wee could lie South by East, vntill noone ; hauing made our way South by East thirteene leagues from the Southermost Iland in sight ouer-night, which I called the Morocco Saddle, by reason of a deepe Swampe on the top thereof. This Saddle-Iland aforesaid lieth in twentie one degrees fortie five minutes North latitude, it hath on the Westerside foure or five very small Ilands close by it, and on the Easterne side three Ilands in sight, lying all three next hand East North-east from it. From Saddle-Ile to the Westward, there are many Ilands ; some North-west from it, others West North-west, West by North ; and the Southermost of all those Ilands in sight did beare from this West, about fifteene leagues off. This afternoone, our ship waxed very leake, hauing on the sodaine foure foot and an halfe water in hold, which imployed both our Pumpes going a long time before we could free her. Towards the euening, it pleased God to discouer three or foure great leakes betweene wind and water, which when our Carpenters had stopped : wee found great ease and comfort, for then we could let the Pumpe stand still halfe an houre, and free her againe with one Pumpe in little more then a quarter of an houre. From this day noone, vntill the two and twentieth at noone, five leagues South South-west, with a paire of Courfers ; and nine leagues South-west by West a Hull : here we had twentie seuen fathoms and an halfe ozie. The two and twentieth in the afternoone, the violence of the wind began to decrease, and consequently, the furie of the waues allayed, which caused our ship to grow the thighter, whereby we plainly perceiued, that the most part of our leakes were betwixt wind and water, and therefore the first faire weather I caused our Carpenters to search the ships sides, where they found and stopped many bad places, some of a yard in length, where the Ocum was all rotten in the seame.

They lose sight of the Vnicorne.

Leakes.

The foure and twentieth day, we had sight of a great Iland, bearing North from vs, about seauen Leagues off, hauing a high Hill on the Easterne end of it, which was the same Iland that did beare West from Morocco Saddle, fifteene leagues off or thereabouts. From hence vntill the six and twentieth in the euening, our way was South by West twentie foure leagues, the depth increasing from nineteene vnto six and thirty fathoms ozie ground : Here we had a little round Iland South-west by West two leagues off, which lyeth in twenty degrees and twenty minutes neereft. This Iland hath foure small Ilands in the South-west side of it, but none of them equall in height with this, wee saw it at least ten leagues off, rising like a Chineses hat. From hence vntill the seuen and twentieth at noone East by North, two third parts North, twelue leagues : Here we had one and forty fathoms, ozie ground. This morning at two of the clocke the winde veered vp at South South-east and about noone at South.

From twelue the twentie seuen, vnto twelue the twentie eight, East North-east eightene leagues, here we had almost one and forty fathoms ozie ground. This morning at two of the clocke the wind veered back againe at South South-east. From the eight and twentieth vntill noone the nine and twentieth, East North-east eighteen leagues : Here we were in one and twenty degrees and ten minutes depth, one and forty fathoms ozie. The wind, this twenty foure houres, from South to South-east by South, and very faire weather euer since the storme. From the nine and twentieth vntill the thirtieth at noone, East North-east eightene leagues latitude, one and twenty degrees and thirty minutes depth, six and fifty fathoms ozie, the winde South-east by South, somewhat guffie weather.

From the last of Iune vntill the first of Iuly at noone, East North-east halfe North, two and twenty leagues latitude, two and twenty degrees and ten minutes, the depth five and twenty fathoms black sandy ozie : Here from the top-mast-head we saw land North North-west halfe North, the winde in the night South South-east, by day South-east. This day from noone to seuen at night North-east by North, sixe leagues, twentie foure fathoms black and white sand with shels. From thence vntill two at noone South-west halfe South, nine leagues and a halfe, foure and twenty fathoms sandy ozie. The first of Iuly, at sixe in the afternoone when we were in foure and twenty fathoms sand and shels, wee saw three China Fisher-boates. The winde came vp this euening at East South-east, with which we stood off to the Southwards, and hauing crackt our maine top-mast but a little before, which was the cause that wee could beare but course and bonnet of each, and therefore made our way of no better then South-west, as I said before. From this second day at noone vntill eight at night, our way was South foure leagues, depth seven and twenty fathoms ozie ground. From eight at night vntill noone the next day North North-west a quarter West, seven leagues five and twenty fathoms blacke ozie sand, like the former, the winde at East by North and East North-east; here wee saw the land from the North to the North-east about twelue leagues off, rising in certaine Hummocks, by which I coniecture that this land lyeth in two and twenty degrees and five and forty minutes neereft. From twelue this day to foure, North North-west three leagues five and twenty fathoms black sand. From foure to twelue the next day South-east by South, ten leagues five and forty fathoms black sandy ozie. From the fourth vntill the fifth at noone South-East by South six leagues no ground in eightie fathoms. This foure and twentie houres very little wind, for the most part at East North-east. From the fift to the sixt at noone North by East foure leagues, here we had no ground in eighty fathoms. This foure and twenty houres, it was for the most part calme, that lirtle winde that blew was at East and East North-east, when it was flat calme wee made diuers trialls with our Lead, and sometimes wee should haue sixty fathoms, otherwhiles fifty fixe fathoms, and then we perceiued that the ship was carryed to the South Westward with a sagging Current, and when the calme continued three or foure houres, then no ground in eighty fathoms, as aforesaid. This afternoone, it rained a downe-right showre, and after that, the wind came vp at South and South South-west an easie gale with fair weather. From the sixt vnto the seuenth at noone, North-east halfe North nine leagues; here we had twenty fixe fathoms black ozie ground: the winde continued at South South-west with faire weather. From the seuenth at noone vntill the eight at night, North-east by North three leagues and a halfe, twenty fathoms gray ozie sand, here by the Scorpions heart I found the ship to be in two and twenty degrees and five and thirty minutes. From eight to twelue, the eight North-east by North fiftene leagues, here the Sunne made vs in three and twenty degrees and sixe minutes. At this present we had sight of the high land of Logosse North-west by North eleuen leagues off, hauing nineteen fathoms, a grosse white sand with smal shels, the wind stil continuing at South-west & West South-west. This morning, we saw eight or nine Fisher-boats, whereof one came within hayling of vs, but we could not perswade them to come aboard. This morning, we came ouer a banke where we had but fiftene fathoms grosse ground, this afternoone, from twelue to foure North North-east halfe North five leagues, twenty fathoms sandy grauell and shels, the high land of Logosse bearing North-west by West nine leagues off. From foure to eight, North-east by North five leagues, two and twenty fathoms sandy grauell. From eight to twelue, five leagues thirty fathoms sandy ozie. From twelue to twelue the ninth, North-east twelue leagues thirtie foure fathome, blacke sandie ozie, the wind at South-west, faire weather, latitude twentie foure degrees, twentie minutes.

Current.
Small Islands.

Formosa.

China.

From the ninth at noone, vntill the tenth, North-east one quarter East, twelue leagues thirty five fathomes ozie, this night the skie was all ouer-cast, and the wind ouer-cast with raine. This forenoone it was calme, and we making tryall with the Lead, found that the Current did set vs North North-east. Here we had sight of certaine small Islands, one of them rising in forme of a Sugar-loafe, and did beare West North-west from vs at noone about eight leagues off. This afternoone we hoysed out our little Boat, which the Carpenters built vpon our fore-Castle: by her wee made tryall of the Current againe, and found it to set East North-east. This Euening, at eight we anchored in twentie eight fathomes, hauing made no way all this after-noone, but as the Current set vs, which was North-east about a mile an houre. Tuesday, the eleuenth in the morning, we set saile againe, and so droue away to the North-east-ward, by means of the former Current, hauing no wind at all: this day at noone, wee had sight of the top of Formosa aboue the clouds, the highest part of it bearing South-east by East, about eightene leagues off, and the neereft Island vnto vs on the Coast of China, was at the same time North-west from vs seven leagues: heere wee had sight of many great Fisher-boates almost round about vs, who sent certaine little Boats aboard vs with fish, for which we paid them double, the value at the first to encourage them to come againe. This Euening, at sixe, the wind came vp at North North-east, by means whereof, and a little helpe of the Current setting towards the North-east by East, which made an East way nine leagues to the twelfth at noone. Heere we had the highest Land of Formosa, South-east, the neereft land about eight leagues off, the neather point of it East by North ten leagues off our depth, fortie fixe fathomes ozie: the latitude twentie five degrees twentie minutes. From the high Land of Formosa, stretcheth out a lower Land to the water-side, being a white sandy shoare, and smooth sand Hills farther vp the Countrey, much like to the Coast of Barbary.

Wednesday, the twelfth, from twelue to three East two leagues, here we were in the same depths, that wee had at noone, viz. forty fixe fathomes, beeing foure leagues off the foresaid sandy shoare, and seeing wee could lye no slent this way, wee tackt and stood off againe, stemming North-west and North-west by North, and North by West, making North-west eight leagues, where we had forty fathomes. From hence we stood in againe vntill twelue, the next day our way East by East fixe leagues, here we had the Norther point of Formosa, East South-east ten leagues off, being in the latitude of twenty five degrees, fortie minutes, the depth fiftie fixe six fathoms ozie: by this we perceiued that the Current had carryed vs towards the East North-east. The thirteenth, from noone vntill six, we stood in East by South, and East South-east vntill we had the foresaid point East South-east halfe East, sixe leagues off forty two fathomes. Here we tackt about the North-ward, lying North North-west and North-west by North, which made a North-west by West way, till two at night about one halfe league, then the wind came vp at North-west by West, vntill sixe in the morning, with which halfe a league North-east by North, heere the foresaid point was East South-east halfe South. From sixe to twelue, it was calme with a cockling Sea, setting in vpon the shoare, and yet by meanes of the Current 10 setting towards the East North-east, we had by noone brought the said point South-east of vs, about five leagues off, hauing forty foure fathomes ozie, the latitude twentie five degrees fortie five minutes.

Friday, the fourteenth in the afternoone, we perceiued that the former Current was done, and that our ship was driuing to the South-west-wards with a contrary Current, wherefore we anchored, hauing fortie two fathomes, a browne glistering sand, here wee rode vntill eight at night, at which time finding the Current to set towards the East North-east: againe wee weighed with a little breath of wind Southerly, and within an houre after, the wind veered vp at West South-west, and began to blow fresh. At eight at night, the fourteenth vnto the 20 fifteenth at noone, North-east by North halfe East, nineteene leagues, twentie sixe degrees thirtie minutes, the wind West and West by North. From the fifteenth at noone, vntill the twelfth, the sixteenth, North-east by North, twentie foure leagues, latitude twentie foure degrees thirtie minutes, depth fifty five fathomes, black, sandie, ozie, the wind at West by North. From the twelfth, the sixteenth, vntill the twelfth, the seuenteenth, North-east by North, seuen leagues, latitude twentie eight degrees eight minutes, by this I perceiued, that the Current had set vs North-east foure halfe leagues, the wind West South-west, depth fiftie fathoms, blacke, sandy, ozie. From the seuenteenth, vntill the eighteenth at noone, our way through the water, East North-east, ten halfe leagues, by the Current North-east one quarter East, five leagues latitude twentie eight degrees thirtie minutes, the wind North by West, and North North-west faire weather. From the eighteenth, vntill the nineteenth at noone, our way
 30 through the water North-east by North thirty foure leagues, latitude twentie nine degrees forty five minutes, depth sixty fathomes, sandie, ozie. The wind at first North North-west, and North North-west vntill mid-night with faire weather. From thence vntill noone, the next day West South-west and South-west very foule weather with much raine. From the nineteenth vntill the twentieth at noone, North-east twentie eight leagues, latitude thirtie degrees thirtie five minutes, depth fiftie five fathomes, sandy, ozie, the wind for the most part South-west and West South-west, the weather showrie.

Thursday, the twentieth, from three to six North-east two leagues & a halfe, depth thirty seuen fathomes, blacke sand. From sixe to five, next morning, North-east by East nine leagues, eightie sixe fathomes, grosse, gray sand with some shels. From five to twelue, the one and twentieth, North-east nine leagues & a halfe, no ground in ninetie fathomes, here we were in one and 40 thirtie degrees twentie five minutes, South South-west South, and South South-east, here I found that the Current had carryed vs tenne miles to the North-wards of our computation in twentie foure houres. From twelue, the one and twentieth vnto twelue, the two and twentieth, North-east two third parts North, twentie five leagues, latitude thirtie two degrees fortie minutes, here the great found of Langasake, was East about nine leagues off, and the South-east of Goto West by North ten leagues off.

The three and twentieth, we arrived in a Port of Firando, called Cochee, which is about foure halfe English miles to the South of the Hauen of Firando.

THEIR RETURNE.

50 The eighteenth of December, Munday at noone, the Iles of Mexuma bore North-west from vs foure leagues off. Our course from Pomo being South South-west twentie five leagues, the wind North-west. From the eighteenth, at noone to the nineteenth, sixe leagues South-west, little wind & variable, yet faire weather (as before) here we had the Iles of Mexuma, North-east by North nine leagues off, the latitude one and thirtie degrees thirtie two minutes, here we had seuentie eight fathomes, streamy ground betwixt with a peppery sand and small shels. From the nineteenth to the twentieth at noone South-west foure leagues, latitude one and thirtie degrees two minutes, the wind from the West North-west to the North North-east, the weather very faire. From the twentieth, to the one and twentieth, South-west by West thirtie leagues, latitude thirtie degrees twentie three minutes, by this we found that the 60 Current had set vs thirteene miles to the North-wards of our account, the wind at North North-east, the weather faire. Friday, the two and twentieth, (from the former midday) we had made a South-west by West way twentie seuen leagues, latitude twentie nine degrees fortie minutes, here our latitude course & distance agreed wel together. This day at noon we had thirtie five fathoms, smal sand & ozie, the wind North North-east and North-east faire weather.

From Friday, to Saturday at noone, South South-west thirteene leagues. This morning, we came vp with a Iuncke of Nangasack, belonging to Ian Iowfson a Dutchman, and bound for Cambaya. I caused the Captaine of her to bring his Pasport aboard, which I perceiued to bee a Goshon from the Emperour of Iapan; I thereupon gaue him leaue to depart. This day, about noone, we had one and fortie fathomes ozie. This twentie foure houres the wind was very variable, the weather close and some-what hazie; at foure in the afternoone, fortie seuen fathomes ozie. From Saturday to Sunday noone, South-west halfe South, forty leagues, the wind at North and North North-west, close weather.

From Sunday noone, vntill Munday noone, being Christmasse day, South-west halfe South fiftie two leagues, here we had sight of certaine Ilands, which lye off the Coast of China, the neereft vnto vs was a small Iland bearing West by South from vs, about three leagues off, and did rise in the forme of a Cayman, the wind North North-east, and North-east, the depth in this place about thirty three fathomes ozie. This forenone, wee came vp with a Iuncke that kept the same course as we did, she had the Hollands Colours on her Poope, whereby we conceiued that she had a Passe from them, but had shee beene good purchas, wee could not haue dealt with her, because there was much wind, a loftie Sea.

From Munday noone to Tuesday noone, South-west by South, fiftie three leagues, here we had sight of certaine Ilands, which lye off Logaseo, bearing North-west by West nine leagues off, here wee had one and thirty fathomes, blacke peppery sand. From hence wee steered in West South-west ten leagues, vntill sixe at night. At which time wee had the Rockes of the point of Loamb West fortie leagues off, our depth twentie two fathomes, and white sand mixt. From sixe to twelue South-west by South, eleuen leagues, twentie fve fathomes ozie.

From twelue to twelue, the seuen and twentieth, South-west halfe West, one and twentie leagues. This seuen and twentieth, it blew a faire gale at North-east as before, and the weather cleered vp, that we had sight of the Sunne, which we had not of a long time seene before. From noone vntill mid-night South-west halfe West nineteene leagues: here by the North-star and Canopus, we were in one & twentie degrees thirtie minutes, the depth fiftie fve, sandy, ozie. From mid-night the seuen and twentieth, vnto mid-night the eight and twentieth, South-west nineteene leagues: heere by the Sunne, we were North twentie degrees, forty fve minutes, the wind still at North-east, the weather faire. From the eight and twentieth, vntill the nine and twentieth at noone, South-west thirtie eight leagues, latitude nineteene degrees fiftie three minutes, the depth seuentie fve fathomes, sandy, ozie, the wind North-east, the weather faire: by this we gathered, that we had made our way to the West-ward of the South-west by West, by meanes of some Current setting to the West-ward. From the nine and twentieth, vntill the thirtieth, South-west halfe South, thirtie eight leagues, latitude eighteene degrees thirtie minutes, the wind at East North-east and East by North, the weather very faire, no ground in one hundred and twentie fathomes. From Saturday vntill Sunday at noone, which was the last of December, South-west by South, twentie seuen leagues and a halfe, latitude seuentee degrees twentie minutes, wind East North-east, weather faire.

The first of January, from the last of December vntill New-yeeres day at noone, South-west by South twentie eight leagues, latitude sixteene degrees ten minutes. Here the wind came vp at North-east by North, the weather faire. From the first of January, vntill the second at noone South halfe West, twentie eight leagues, the weather ouer-cast the wind at North-east by North. From this day noone, vntill two of the clocke in the afternoone, South South-west halfe South three leagues, here wee had sight of a point of Land, bearing West from vs eight leagues off.

From two in the afternoone, vntill twelue the next day, South halfe East, fortie leagues, here we had Cape Varella North-west by North eight leagues off. This twentie foure houres we had much raine and dirtie weather. From the third at noone, vntill the fourth at sixe in the morning, our way one with another vpon a straight Line South South-west halfe West, thirtie leagues, here we were in eleuen degrees, North latitude, of our depth twentie foure fathomes, as neere as I could ghesse. Here also wee had sight of Poolo Cecir, bearing South by East seuen leagues off, and the Cape Cecir North by West sixe leagues from vs. From sixe vntill noone, West South-west thirteene leagues. From the fourth at noone, vntill the fifth at noone, first South-west by West twentie two leagues, then South-west halfe West sixe leagues, and then South South-west halfe South one and twentie leagues, here wee were in nine degrees. The body of Poolo Candor, bearing South South-west about seuen leagues from vs. Our depths from the fourth at noone, were from eighteene to fourteene fathomes: from sixteene to eleuen, wee felt a Current setting our ship to the South-ward beyond our computation, this same night at Sun-setting, we found the variation to be one degree North-westing. This euening, at sixe of the clocke we had the South-east end of Poolo Candor, North-west foure leagues off, the wind North-east. From six this euening, vntill twelue, the next South South-west thirtie leagues, latitude seuen degrees ten minutes, the wind at North-east, the weather very faire. From the six vntill the seuenth at noone, South South-west thirtie six leagues & a half, latitude fve five degrees thirtie minutes, the wind at North-east, the weather faire. From Sunday the seuenth, vntill Munday the eighth at noone South South-west halfe South fortie two leagues, latitude three degrees thirtie minutes, the wind at North-east by East and East North-east, the weather faire. This day at foure in the afternoone, we had the North point of Poolo Timon, South-west by South about seven leagues off, we hauing runne from noone seven leagues South South-west. From Munday to Tuesday at noone, South South-west seven leagues, South-east sixteene leagues, and South seuentene leagues; the latitude one degree twentie five minutes; by this we perceiued the Current had carryed vs sixteene minutes to the South-wards of our computation.

- 10 From this twelfth day vntill foure in the afternoone South sixe leagues, our depth twentie foure fathomes (streamy ground: here we saw Poolo Pengran South-west by South sixe leagues, and the head-land of Iore West South-west eight leagues off. From hence vntill foure leagues off South South-east fourteene leagues off, eightene fathomes, the same ground: from hence till noone, the tenth, South twelue degrees, here wee had seuentene fathomes. The tenth at noone, we had sight of Land. The Northermost high hummocke bearing West from vs about sixe leagues off. This day at noone by our iudgement, we were ten minutes to the South-ward of the Line.

- Thursday, the eleuenth at noone, we were in one degree sixteene minutes South latitude, our course from the tenth at noone, South halfe West twentie two leagues. Here the Souther Ile of Poolo Tayro, was due East from vs three leagues off: our depth fourteene fathomes, ozie. This Poolo Tayro consisteth of seven or eight Ilands and Rockes mixt together, the longest tract of them is North North-west, and South South-east, the Northermost Ile is farre longer and larger then any of the rest. From this Northermost Ile vnto Poolo Pan, North-west halfe West nine leagues, the depth from the tenth at noone vnto this present, was from seuentene to fourteene fathomes all alongst Poolo Tayro: when the Northermost Ile of Poolo Tayro, East North-east halfe East three leagues from vs, then the three hummocks on the North end of Banco did beare South-east ten leagues off; And the high Land of Mannapin South by East halfe East. From this day noone vntill mid-night, South South-west halfe South tenne leagues: here we anchored seuentene fathomes soft ground, where we rid all night. The next morning, we had the Hill of Mannapin, South South-east halfe East, the low Land by the water side three leagues off, the next head-land to the North-wards, which riseth in three hummockes, when you are to the North-wards of it East North-east halfe North. About six leagues off, the twelfth at noone being at anchor in the same place, by our obseruation wee were in one degree one and fiftie minutes neereft, the wind at West North-west, weather faire. This afternoone we weighed and stood in towards the Coast of Sumatra, and at mid-night anchored in twelue fathomes of the Riuer of Pallimbam, finding nine, ten, and twelue fathomes ozie, as we ranged along.

- Saturday, the thirteenth in the morning, we weighed againe (the wind Northerly) and steered along by the Sumatra shoare, through the Streights of Banco, vntill wee came betweene the first and second point, which was at eight at night, where we anchored in sixteene fathoms about two leagues off the Sumatra shoare. From the Riuer of Pallimbam vnto this place, we had nine, ten, eleuen, twelue fathomes within two halfe leagues off the Sumatra side, all alongst vntil we came vp neer the second point (which maketh the narrowest of the Streights) & there we found about twentie fathomes water. Sunday, the fourteenth, we set saile againe and borrowed faire aboard the Sumatra side in eight, seven and sixe fathomes vntill wee had Lucepara, South-east by East, and then we haled away South South-east, South-east by South and South-east finding all the way five fathomes ozie, vntill wee had brought Lucepara North by West about seven leagues off, and then the water began to deepen, hauing five fathomes & a halfe, sixe fathomes. Munday, the fifteenth, wee were in foure degrees fiftie eight minutes, wee being distant from Lucepara, thirtie sixe leagues South by East from it. From hence vntill foure in the afternoone South South-west foure leagues. Here we saw a shoald aboue the water, about foure miles from vs, West South-west. The two Ilands on the Coast of Sumatra, bearing vpon the same point seven leagues off. Also Poolo Keero did beare East South-east halfe South. From this shoald five leagues off, and the high Land of Marrough was South-west from the shoald afore-said. This Euening, the wind did hearten in at North-west: by which meanes we got in neere vnto Poolo Peniang after mid-night, and there came to anchor vntill the next day.

CHAP. VIII.

WILLIAM HORES Discourse of his Voyage in the Dragon and Expedition, from Surat to Achen, Teco and Bantam; and of the surprising the Dragon, Beare, Expedition, &c. in a Letter to the Companie.

To the Honorable Gouvernour and Right Worshipfull Committees of the Companie of the English trading in the EAST INDIA, &c.

Honorable and Right Worshipfull Sirs.

He passages of your businesse, in Captaine Bonnors Voyage, to and at Surat (till then and long after very hopefull) you haue by many aduises from themselves, and severall relations from others, largely and particularly vnderstood. Wherefore I shall therein be purposely silent, intending according to my poore meanes and abilitie, (the one being lost with your ships, and the other hauing alwayes beene very small) to acquaint you onely with such accidents as vntill the said ships taking hapned. Wherein I shall humbly beseech, that you would be pleased to pardon my presumption, in offering to your view these imperfect and vnworthy Lines, not doubting but others better able, will more accurately performe (what is by me omitted requisite your knowledge) then my insufficiency (especially at this time) is able to expresse, and poore employment in your seruice afforded not to be made partaker of.

Dragon parted from the Anne 17. Febr. neere Surat before Dabull. A lunk of Dabull, laden and bound for the Red Sea.

Kind entertainment at Dabull. The Dabull vs desire Trade with vs. Store of refreshing at Dabull and good cheape. Promising to buy quantities of cloth hereafter & Lead, but we could not put off any of the Lions remnant. The Captaine of the lunk desired an English Bible, to cause to be translated into Arabeck.

The Historie of the offered Pepper at Battacula.

The Dragon and other ships of that Fleet parting with the Anne, the seuenteenth of Februarie, 1618. the one and twentieth following, anchored before the Road and Towne of Dabull, (it being formerly ordered by consultation to touch there) and not long after came a Boat from the Gouvernour-Deputie, to learne what and whence we were; whereof being certified, hee againe returned ashore: and toward night, a graue man, Captaine of a lunk, then in the Road, laden and bound for the Red Sea, with his sonne came aboard, bringing ten Oxen, ten Goats, three hundred Hennes, with great store of Rice, Fruits, &c. for a Present, to conferre with our Captaine about such things as should be propounded; and that night they lodged aboard. The morrow after (they remayning for pledges) Master Sailbanke and Master Furstrand went ashore to the Deputie (the Gouvernour himselfe being then at Court, eight dayes iourney distant) The Chiefes of the Towne, as they affirmed, entertained them very kindly, professing likewise that they were much contented with the English arriuall, and had long desired to haue commerce with them, and to that end intreated to haue a Factorie left, or the ships to ride, till notice thereof might be giuen to the Gouvernour, because without his approbation they could not conclude of any thing. We had at this place great store of very good refreshing, indifferently cheape, large Bees for fixe Rialls a piece, and Fruits, &c. great plentie for small prices: but none of the old remnants in the Lion could vend, yet vpon future hopes, they promising fairely to deale hereafter for large quantities of broad Cloth, Lead, and other English commodities, Captaine Bonner deferred enforcing, aduising thereof to Surat, that the next yeeres Fleet might doe to them as occasion required. The sixe and twentieth, the aforesaid Noghoda landed, to whom was giuen a faire in-laid Musket with the furniture thereof: He also earnestly desired an English Bible, which being giuen, he said, he would carefully keepe till some English were there resident, and then with their helpe would haue it translated into Arabeck for his owne vse.

It hath beene, I presume, long since related vnto your Worships, how that during your Fleets abroad at Swally, two Malabar Frigots put themselves vnder command of your ships, affirming themselves subiects to a Ragia of Echaree neere Goa, and pretending to be sent by the King their Master, to capitulate with the English about establishing a Trade with him for Pepper, his Countrey, by their report, yeelding yearly sufficient to lade two great ships, the triall whereof being by consultation assented vnto, they both attended the Fleet to this place; and here one of them desired leaue to depart before to the King to aduize of our coming, that his Pepper might be in more readinesse against our arriuall, and that an English Merchant might accompanie him to view the commodities, and cut price with the King, for whom sufficient Hostage should be left aboard the Dragon. Which was likewise agreed vpon, Master Wight, Merchant, and Leo Tucker with him for Linguist, were dispeeded with him, and eight of the Prime men in both Frigats left for pledges.

The Lion being formerly disposed of for the Red Sea, it was ordered that shee should keepe the other ships companie to Dabull, there to vent, if possible, part or all those remnants brought from the Red Sea, for readie money, or to force them Trade, and the proceeding thereof to be toward lading the Expedition with Pepper at Battacula: but the vnfitness of those commodities for for the Dabulleers, their faire promises and kind vsage, procure their quiet this yeere, for which cause the Lions companie being iudged needlesse any further. The seuen and twentieth, shee was dispeeded vpon her voyage: but before her departure, sixe hundred pounds sterling intended to be transported to Surat, was detayned for speedier lading the Expedition: hauing left Letters to be sent to Surat: toward night the Dragen, &c. set saile, intending next for Batachala. At Dabull enquirie was made for Tho. Sprage, who was sent from Brampoore into Gulcandame, to recouer a debt due by a Persian in that place, and at Surat it was reported, that the said Persian was forceably taken from him at this Towne, and Sprage also very much abused. But they denie euer to haue seene or knowne any such men, but tooke notice from vs to apprehend both or 10 either if they should at any time happen on them.

The Lion dispeeded for the Red Sea. Sixe hundred pounds detayned for the lading of the Expedition.

Sprage not heard off at Dabull.

The fift of March, we anchored at Batachala, shooting three Peeeces to giue notice of our arriual: and the next day about noone, Master Wight with the other Mallabar Frigat came aboard, by whom we vnderstood, that at the Kings Towne, some three dayes iourney thence, was Pepper to the quantitie of one hundred and fiftie Tunnes or vpward, but the price was held hard at fiftie Rialls of eight the Candee, and would not be brought lower then fortie segen; the Pepper worse then that of Tercoo, and in all likelihood he had no intent for to sell it, but to keepe it for the Portugals, with whom he hath continuall Trading, and this to bee but a deuice of those Rowers to free themselues from command of the English. The Candee at this place contayneth neere fise hundred pounds.

The price of Pepper at Batachala at fiftie Rialls the Candee. The Candee fise hundred pound.

Our hopes of this place prouing no better: the third present, we set saile thence. Running along this Coast, we saw and met with many Iuncks of the Mallabars, and not finding ought in them, saue Coco-nuts and such trash, presently dismissed them, one excepted, belonging to the Samorine, which Captaine Bonner caused to returne with him, the sooner to procure satisfaction for goods and debts, left there by Peter Needham, &c. which Iuncke certified of another of the Samorines laden with Pepper, riding at Panana, some twelue leagues to the Southward of Calicut, and bound for the Red Sea, at which place also the Samorine then kept his Court, where arriuing the tenth dicto, a Messenger was sent to aduertise the ships arriual, to require satisfaction for his debts, &c. and to renew a Trade with vs; all which motions hee seemed willing to entertaine, promising the twelfth following to meet and confer with Captaine Bonner vpon the shoare neere the Sea-side, and after an end made of the old, to begin a new businesse. The King came at the time prefixed, hauing the day before drawne alhoare and vnladen his Iuncke, she riding within a Riuer, at the mouth whereof was a great Barre, hindring our seizing her, whom Captaine Bonner (attended with a Guard of fiftie small shot, &c.) met, deliuered our Kings Maiesties Letter with a Present to him; and after long debating, it was concluded, that in regard we knew not the summe due by goods left with him and others, not hauing any notice thereof; the payment should be deferred till information from Needham might be procured, and with aduice of his Merchant consented to sell vs Pepper: at present, seuen or eight hundred Candees or more, at thirtie Rialls of eight, free of all charges. The Candee we found by triall thereof, with our English weights, to contayne fise hundred and two pounds nete; whereupon resolving, it was 40 concluded that the next day Master Wight and my selfe should view the quantitie and qualitie of the commoditie, which wee were to certifie Captaine Bonner (then aboard the small Pinasse neere the shoare) who would thereupon haue landed, money, &c. and gone to weighing.

A Iuncke of the Samorine detayned.

At Panana is the Samorines country twelue leagues from Surat, was Iuncke of the Samorine laden with pepper, bound for the Red Sea. Satisfaction of our debts demanded of the Samorine.

The Samorines cunning. Pepper offered by the Samorine fraudulently.

The Candee fise hundred and two pound weight.

The Samorines dissimulations: large discourse.

But that night the Kings mind changed, and we landing early next morning, were refused sight thereof vnlesse the King gaue expresse order thereto, to whom also going, hee demanded when our Captaine would land, which wee certified him would not bee till wee had seene the Pepper, and could iudge of the quantitie, and that then we should make signe for his comming. He then sent vs backe with one of his Kinsmen to the Merchants house, willing vs there to stay till he either came himselfe, or sent order for dipatch: but there we attended while past noone, and then not hearing ought returned to the King, who by his Iurabassa fell to discoursing of our Countrey manners, had Tumblers playing before him, and with such trifling delays put off the time till neere foure after noone, when we entreated him to giue vs an answer, that we might returne to the Captaine, who all this while expected our comming. Whereupon taking vs aside into a roome from sight of his people, he told vs, that he had many matters of import whereof to conferre with the Captaine, which he would not haue his owne people to take notice off, and to that end had appointed a priuate house to be prepared for his entertainment not far from his Court, and therefore willed that Master Wight should carrie and accompanie him presently thither, and that I should returne to the Captaine and bring him to the place assigned. I desired to see it, but he refused, appointing one of his attendants to goe with me to the Sea-side, there to carrie Captaine Bonners landing, and conduct him to the foresaid house. But by the way considering, how indiscreet it would seeme, to motion his going to a place I had neither seene nor knew, especially in such a treacherous place, I told my Companion, that vnlesse I might first see where the King intended to meet, I would not aduise the Captaines landing; he perceiuing me resolute, left me, and directed one of his Slaues to shew it me; who lead me neere two English miles vp into the Countrey, and at length brought mee to a little house (but handsome enough) sited in the midst of a small Wood, about which was a faire plaine a quarter of a mile every way, and without that, round enuironed with thicke and high Woods : which place ministring iustly great cause of suspicion. I returned to the King, whom I met vpon the way with fortie or fiftie attendants comming thither, with him also Master Wight; to whom I shewed my opinion of the place, and that it now grew late, and therefore nothing to be done that night.

The Samorine denyeth to performe with vs according, to his promise vnder fortie Rialls the Candee.

Bonner threatned the Samorine, to take his Luncke, and pay our selues.

A Pinnasse ordered to be sent from Achen from Rob. Bonner vnto Teco and Bantam.

The Pinnasse arriue among our ships neer Bantam, the 23. Aprill.

Cap. Iordain in the Samson and Hound went for Iambe, Patania, Syam, to visit those Factories about the 9. of Aprill.

Comming to the house, the King sate a good while musing without speaking, when we desired leave to depart, it being now neere night and past time for the Captaines landing, and that if he pleased we should againe returne on the morrow, as also to certifie his desire of priuate conference with the Captaine, but withall intreated, that we might lose no more dayes, but that according to his former conclusion, we might dispatch our businesse. After a little pause, he commanded all his owne people out of the roome; leauing none but Master Wight, Ino. Tucker Linguist, and my selfe. The doores being shut, hee beckned vs, and then readily finding his Portuguese tongue (till then concealed) told vs resolutely, that he could not performe at the price contracted for; the Pepper being none of his but the Merchants of the Towne, and that vnder fortie Rialls of eight the Candee he could not accomplish; and if they or any other would sell cheaper, he gaue licence thereto, but if none, then at that price himselfe would furnish, and that he would satisfie his debt when we could certifie how much and wherefore it was due: Also, that he had other businesse to confer with the Captaine, which he said should not be mentioned, vnlesse himselfe were present: with which answere we returned aboard to Captaine Bonner, who sent him word ashore by one of his seruants who came with vs, that the English should largely pay themselves vpon his Luncks, both for the goods he detayned, and for this abuse also.

The fourteenth of March we departed thence, the nineteenth anchored at Brimion; where failing of refreshing or water, the people by the Portugalls instigation, refusing to let our Caskes be filled vnder eightie Rialls of eight: the twentieth, altogether that night set saile, and that night doubled Cape Comorine.

The two and twentieth of March, a consultation was held aboard the Dragon, wherein was propounded and concluded, sending the Portugall Pinnasse for Bantam: and by the way to touch at Teco, to learne the estate of that Factorie (if any were) to stay there foure dayes, and at Bantam ten, and then vnlesse by Captaine Iordaine detayned longer, to make all haste possible backe to Teco, there to attend the Dragons arriual from Argin, to informe the Companies affaires at Bantam. In her was appointed William Ricker Master, with twentie other, and my vnhappy selfe also, that Factorie being likeliest to want attendance, and I willing to my best seruice, though in so meane a condition, as it hath pleased your Worships to dispose me.

The foure and twentieth dicto, about foure after noone we parted with the ships, they standing away for Achen, and we for Teco, of whose proceedings there I am altogether ignorant, and shall therefore presume to referre your Worships to Master Nichols his aduice (if as I much feare hath hapned) the rest from the Factors there haue with your ships miscarried.

The sixt of Aprill, 1619. wee arriued at Teco, and hearing nothing at this place, saue what your Worships haue long since beene acquainted with, hauing watered and sent aduice to Captaine Bonner, of our arriual, &c. The eleuenth following, we set saile for Bantam. Hauing had diuers dayes calme, and sometimes the wind contrarie: the three and twentieth dicto, wee anchored twixt the salt Hills in the Straights of Sunda: and the seuen and twentieth toward night, a small gale blowing, we weighed and intended to haue put into Bantam Road before day, but the vnuall calme forced our anchoring some foure miles short of Poolo-Paniang: and in the morning, readie to set saile, we descried ten ships and foure Luncks, riding vnder the foresaid Island, who with that breath weighed and stood toward vs, we knew not what to conceiue of them, little expecting to haue found so many English, especially those ships in that place; the better to make them, we hoysed out our Prow and in her three men, to row vntill they could make their Colours; and if Dutch, to repaire backe to vs; if English, to goe aboard them, the latter whereof they did. Ere long the Admirall was thwart of vs, whom Master Ricker saluted with three Peeeces, he answered with one, and sending his Skiffe aboard, willed our Master to weigh and stand after him to Morrogh, and me to come aboard his ship, and bring such Letters as I had with me, which I presently did, where I haue related all those miserable and lamentable accidents, which, I presume, your Worships long since vnderstood by the Iames, safely arriued home.

The nine and twentieth dicto, the Fleet anchored Morrogh, and the next day Sir Thomas Dale, Captaine Pring, &c. came aboard our Pinnasse, and dispeeded her for Bantam, if possible to get some prouision for the shippes, as also to learne if any Flemmish shippes were at Iacatra or thereabouts: but speeding of neither, we returned to the Fleete the second of May. The ten ships then at Morrogh, were the Moone, Cloue, Globe, Pepper-corne, the Iames Royall, Gift, Vnicorne, Aduice, Rose and Bee: Captaine Iordaine being some foureteene dayes before our comming gone with the Samson and Hound, for Iambee, Patania, Syam, and other places, besides the foure Luncks, three whereof were from China, the other from Patania, and our Pinnasse newly also by Sir Thomas Dale ordered for to attend his Fleete.

The first of May, the China Luncks began to be Romidged, and their goods taken into your ships, ships, for debts owing by the Chineses to your Worships. After which, cutting downe their masts, yards and sayles, to preuent their lading the Pepper at Bantam, left them there ryding: the quantitie and qualitie of those goods exceeds my knowledge to aduize, I being both a stranger, and by your Worships order not to meddle in businesse of that nature.

The foure and twentieth of May, Owen Bodman was executed at the yard arme in the Moone. This day the Fleete fitted to sayle, and the Rose in stead of the Pinnasse, was intended for Teco and Achen, to aduize Captaine Bonner of proceedings there with a Cargazon of Rice, Steele, &c. Confined to Master Furstrand at Achen; In which ship also it pleased Sir Thomas to appoint my 10 returne. One of the foresaid Iuncks being of Patania, and most of her lading Rice, belonging to the Flemmings: so much thereof as was thought fitting, each ships prouision was taken out, and she this day dismissed. The five and twentieth Dicto the Fleete set sayle, Sir Thomas Dale with the Moone, Clone, Globe, Pepper-corne, Aduice and Pinnasse, standing for Ingano, to recouer (if possible) part of the Monies lost, in the Sunne, and to releue those men left there, if any were aliue; and Captaine Pring with the James Royall, Gift, Vnicorne and Bee for the Coast: intending there all to meete, and to come with their ioynt strength to Priaman, there to meete with the ships from England, and also Captaine Bonnors, and altogether to goe to Bantam.

The fifteenth of Iune we arriued at Teco, where we made little stay, but hauing watered, &c. and left letters for Captaine Bonner, of the past proceedings at Bantam, and future purposes 20 for this place, departed thence the nineteenth Dicto from Achen, going betwixt the Mayne of Sumatra and the Shoalds, which from Teco lye foure degrees or more of North latitude, and stopping euery night: The ninth of Iuly, about sixe in the euening, a storme began at North-west (we being then anchored some fifteene leagues to the Northward of Barrous) which increased in great extremitie till about mid-night with very fearefull Thunder, Lightning, and terrible Raine, we had but one anchor aground, hauing the Shoalds and the Mayne on euery side of vs within two leagues. In this extremitie, not knowing what course to take, but onely to attend Gods mercy in our deliuerance, our Cable brake, and we bare roome backe ouer these Shoalds in an exceeding darke night, with which formerly we durst scarce deale at noone-day; yet the neuer forsaking mercy of the Almightye preserued vs from all those dangers, and with 30 day-light also sent vs faire weather, when necessitie enforced determination to beare backe againe for Teco: it is said we were the first ship that euer went this way, and I thinke no man that dare depend vpon his skill, to aduenture without sight of land, will euer saile that way againe.

The one and twentieth dicto, we had another great storm, which began about two after noone, with very much Wind, Thunder and Raine, which lasted about foure houres, split our maine saile, and blew away our sprit-saile; Rich. Crane, one of our companie, being then vpon the yard arme, the braces, lifts, and all the rigging of the sprit-saile yard at once broke, and hee with his head downewards hung (at euery set of the ship couered with the Sea) about a glasse space, no 40 man being able by any meanes to succour him, till at last, faintnes & wearines made him let goe, and as he droue by the ships side tooke hold of a Rope, by which meanes, next to the Almightyes mercy, his life was beyond expectation miraculously preserued; another, named Price Hawks, standing in the waste, was by a flash of Lightning strooke dumbe and lame ouer all his body, lying in most lamentable plight for many dayes, yet, God be thanked, his speech is a little returned, but a kind of dead numbnesse in both his legs and armes, maketh him still continue a very miserable man, distressed as aforesaid.

The three and twentieth dicto, we returned to Teco, and by reason of our wants, both of Cordage, Sailes, and Ground-tacke, of which there was no more in the ship then was at that time in vse, no more then one Hoghead of flesh, no bread but Rice and that not sweet, no other drinke for sicke men, &c. but water; but nineteene men in the ship, whereof five very sicke, and diuers others lame: It was resolu'd through importunitie of the companie thereto, to 50 remayne there and attend reliefe from the Dragon, or other English; but in the interim, a rumour of Flemmish ships comming from Bantam, forced vs change resolution: and the sixt dicto, with our weake crew put to Sea, in hope either to meet the ships from Achen, or to get our intended parke, and by that meanes to ease our selues of some of those miseries. Hauing had since our departure from Teco a very faire gale: The tenth dicto, to our great comforts we met the Dragon and Expedition, betwixt the Ilands Nimtam and Batta: so soone as we came neere, Captaine Bonner sent his Skiffe aboard, to whom I went and deliuered his Letters from Master Spalding, Master Ball, &c. Sir Tho. Dale by reason of his sicknesse hauing also referred him to them for aduise. The next morning at a Consultation it was concluded, that the Rose should returne backe 60 to Teco, in regard of her vnfitnessse for any Voyage, as also for that the goods in her would vend so well here, or better then at Achen, the Invoice whereof was inclosed in a Letter, sealed and directed to Master Rich. Furstrand, which I then likewise deliuered: By Captaine Bonner I vnderstood of two moneths Trade granted at Teco, of about one thousand and three hundred Bahars of Pepper, then in the Dragon, and of more then one thousand and five hundred remayning at Achen vn Bought, for lacke of meanes. To the end that so little as might be of our short time should be lost; the fifteenth in the night, Captaine Bonner sent off his barge with Master Nichols and my selfe, to goe ashore, and acquaint the King &c. with our licence for Trade; as also to take an house, and so much as might be, to set each thing in a forwardnesse. The King seemed very willing; appointing, as we desired, a very conuenient house close by the sea side, next to the Custome-houle, and promised so soone as he saw the Kings Letter, musters of our goods, and had concluded of the price; order should be giuen for present weighing.

The nineteenth, Master Nichols went aboard the Dragon, riding two leagues without the Road, and brought the Kings Letter ashore with him, which seene and read, Proclamation thereof was presently sent into the Countrey, and many in the Towne had good quantities of Pepper, which they would not sell till the King had first begunne. The one and twentieth, the Dragon &c. came into the Road, and musters of goods landed, the greatest part whereof was Cainkeenes, blue Selas; and the price was concluded, fiftie Selas, thirtie five Cainkeenes, sixteene blue Byronnes, red Selas thirtie two, and of Baftaes according to the goodnesse, eight, ten, and twelue Pieces for a Bahar, which valued according to the rates worth in readie money, twentie Rials the Bahar; and it was agreed, that the next morning the King should beginne to weigh (the Custome of goods not to be payed in kind; but to land whatsoever wee would, and to pay fourteene the hundred Custome, in Rials of eight: for all the Pepper should be payed, either with goods, or money; a very hard condition and wondrous vnadvisedly consented to, by those formerly there employed; but now it is continued, and little hope to get it euer reclaime. Some goods were this day landed, being first opened aboue, and sent ashore in bags, to preuent wetting; and small quantities at once, for feare of fire and treacherie, both which are very vsuall here (but especially the latter) more then in any part of India.

The two and twentieth dicto, the King &c. returned to the Balley, refusing their former Contract, and would not himselfe sell vnder fortie Cainkeenes, and sixtie blue Selas the Bahar; but gaue free leaue to any other that would; which was nothing: for till he began, none would sell a Catee, so that necessitie inforced our assenting. The sixe and twentieth our trade began, and this day weighed the first Pepper, the contents whereof, and of the succeeding dayes, I forbear to recite, hauing collected it together in a note herewith vnto your Worships. Master Nichols &c. being aboard the Dragon, this day Captaine Bonner discoursing of the businesse past at Ban-tam, and his owne at present in the Dragon, fearing lest at the Fleets arriual, the Pepper in her should be taken out, and sent home vpon some other ship that had bene long in the Countrey, as also dreading the Flemmings arriual (of whom hee was alwayes wondrous suspicious) affirmed, he had no intent to lade more Pepper in the Dragon, till he knew certainly how he should be disposed of; but would take it into the Expedition, whereto he said shee should be presently fitted, and the Dragon kept cleere and prettie for a Man of Warre, in case the Flemmings should come: his reason was, that he could not at any time after take it into his ship, of which if he could dispose, hee could likewise by the same power command the Expedition, and goods therein: in which determination he seemed to be firme; and gaue order for the Expeditions fitting roomes. But the next day after, arriued Henry Bate Merchant, from the ship Beare; who the day before anchored at Priaman; and the eight and twentieth of August aforesaid, arriued at Tecoo: at instant of whose comming, but vpon what presumption or reports I cannot certainly determine, Captaine Bonner changed resolution, and proceeds to lade the Dragon, filling each place with lumber, romaging her bread-roomes, and so cloying her deckes, as was not possible to vse her Peeeces in greatest extremitie; by which vnhappy accident, Wee your poore Seruants haue with losse of liues, or goods, or both, indured excelsse of most base, and past compare, contemptible viage, from an ingratefull and vnciuill Nation, with many other neuer to be satisfied or forgotten iniuries.

The seuen and twentieth, all night being very tempestuous, fearefull thunder and lightning, and abundance of raine, we had vnder our house, in a roome for that purpose, some small store of Steele Bettel boxes, and such like; where also lay two men, appointed by Capt. Bonner to watch the house, the boat being left behind them ashore. That night John Cocket (alias Tucker) a youth, who had long liued at Surat, and he also lodged there: about midnight came theeuers to open the doore, which one within perceiuing, with crying out scarred them away; two houres after, they returned; and one of them putting in his arme, was stricke at with a sword, but missed, fled away the second time; and they within made the doore so fast as they could (which was but hurdles.) About foure in the morning, comming againe, & opening the doore, one went in, taking some Braffe Bettel boxes, our men being all fast asleepe; and in returning, rubbed against Tuckers legs, who starting vp, caught hold of him, and cried, A theefe, I haue him; which scarce pronounced, with a pitifull accent, cried out againe, Oh, hee is gone, and hath stabd mee with his Creeze: which was so sodainely done, as those who lay by him had not time to rescue him. There was at that time aloft the Surgeon of the Dragon &c. who presently ran downe with a light, but too late; the villaine hauing with a knife giuen him two wounds, one whereof to the heart, who without speaking more words then, Lord haue mercie vpon me, presently died.

Discourse of theft in Teco, the seuen and twentieth of August.

John Tucker slaine the seuen and twentieth of Aug.

Wee in vaine searched each bush and place about our house, and I went to call the Cowals (or Waiters) who euery night till this, kept watch in a Balley within twentie paces of our house; misting whom, I went instantly to the Pongolo Cowallas house, and calling him, asked him where was the Watch; he said, at the Balley; which I denying, he affirmed to haue charged one that night. Then I told him we had a man slaine, and willed him to search narrowly, if any suspicious person could be apprehended, he forthwith went and acquainted the King therewith, who presently came downe with the Chiefe thereabouts, saw the dead bodie, and affirmed, he would doe what might be, to find the murtherer: Master Nichols charged the Cowals to bee actors, or authors hereof, and required to haue them all sent for, and one after another to touch the Corps, whereto the King gaue order: and when each one had taken him by the hand, and no cause to suspect any, appeared; Master Nichols demanded if there were no more Cowals; it was answered, no more saue one, who was sicke, and kept his bed; him the King commanded to be sent for, whose very lookes and demeanour condemned him in the opinion of all, to bee the villaine sought for, the King commanded to take the dead man by the hand, which with extreme quaking, and many distracted gestures and answeres he did, but would not hold it any time. Master Nichols vrge this to be the man, and required Iustice. The King caused him to be bound, and professed in his conscience that was the man who kild him, but that hee must be tried by their Law also, whereto the fellow assented.

A story of trial of a Malefactor in a strange manner

And while preparation was made thereto, wee sent word to Captaine Bonner, who came ashore to see the euent hereof: presently after whose comming, a fire was made, and an iron pan with a gallon of oyle set thereon; which leasurely boyled till it came to such a degree of heat, that a greene leate but dipped therein was sodden and shuiered. The prisoner then called, and persisting in deniall of the fact, was in testimonie of his innocencie, to take out of the said oyle a small ball of brasse, little bigger then a Musket shot, with his naked hand; and that if any burning or scalding appeared thereon, hee was contented to die: which hee addressed himselfe to performe; stripping vp his sleue about the elbow, and taking a kind of protestation, desiring that as he was cleere thereof, so he might prosper in this act; dipped his hand to the wrist in the burning oyle, tooke out the ball, held it fast, and crying, Olla Basar, or, great is the Lord, toft it vp, caught it againe, and then cast it on the ground; shewing his hand vnto all that would, which had no more signe of hurt, then if hee had experimented the same in cold water. The Deuill, it seemes, being loth at that time to lose his credit. The fellow was instantly released, and within an houre after returned in his holiday apparell, and none so lustie as hee, though but a little before he had bene sicke, and so weake, as he was faine to be brought vpon mens shoulders to his triall: and this was all the iustice we could haue, for our murdered man; though in all likelihood, and their iudgements also, he was the actor.

This businesse ended, the King propounded to Captaine Bonner, that our time of Trade began now to be short, and that there was great store of Pepper yet to be had, which might speedily be bought for readie money: the people being vnwilling to deale for any more Cloth, in regard the Iunkes from Argin were daily expected with great store from the King, who would force their taking thereof; and that hauing sold before for readie money, they would make the better shift: which he said was alike to vs, our commodities being as vendible in other places; and the new ship (the Beare) hauing brought good store of mony, which might be wel employed: whereto consent being giuen, the price was cut, twentie two Rials the Bahar, and the assemblie dismissed. That night good store of Pepper was brought downe to be weighed the next day, many of the Chieffes affirming, that there was in and about Tecoo, about a thousand Bahars Pepper, which so fast as could be weighed, would be brought in. The King gaue vs leaue, that if in the night we saw any about the house, we should detaine them prisoners till the next day; and in case they refused to come vnto vs, being called, we should shoot them, and the perill to lie vpon their owne heads. The nine and twentieth dicto, Captaine Bonner perceiuing the Dragon to bee already deepe, and hoping ere long to haue her full lading, weighed out of the Road, by the Iland, and anchored without, attending a wind to goe to the Southward of those Ilands, there to ride, and take the rest of her lading.

The Admirall
and Vice-Ad-

ships dischar-

they passed by;

The first of October, about foure in the morning, the Dragon weighed, and neere eight, with the Breeze set saile, and came into the foresaid Road; not long after, all the boats and Skiffes of the Dragon, Expedition, and Rose, came ashore to fetch Pepper, who laded so fast as they could; but before all were laden, fixe Saile were descried, standing with a fresh gale at South, toward the Road of our ships. The Boats forthwith put off, and had very much labour to row to windward, the men being much wearied before, with mooring the ships, and carrying the bags of Pepper: Captaine Bonner iudged them to be Sir Thomas Dales Fleet, who had determined to arrive there, by the fine of September; and therefore, till they came within lesse then a league, that their Hulls shewed who they were, no Colours being abroad, not suspecting them: and then before any prouision could be made for defence, the Admirall and Vice-Admirall layed the Dragon aboard, all the other as they went, by shooting so many Peeces as could be brought to beare vpon her, who had that day taken in about an hundred Bahars of Pepper, had all her men Hollanders most sterne insulters and incompassable cruell Enemies.

If the Infidels had not bene more mercifull then the Hollanders, three hundred men had perished. The Hollanders put our men in Irons, in their ships all night in open ayre, in a most raynie and tempestuous night neither respecting sicke nor maymed.

The next morning turned them ashore with ragges, amongst were fortie sixe of the Stars men, euen till now kept Prisoners. Rob. Bonner was sent ashore, offering to carrie away the bed he lay vpon, which for triple the value was redeemed. His death with commendation, 9. October. God moued the Heathen to fauour our people.

The King did visit Captaine Bonner, and furnished him with needfull, and offering all courtesie.

euen spent with labour, and was at that time so cloyed as was neuer poore, all emptie and full of caske, bread, and other prouisions then vpon her deckes, and all her lower Gunnes so stowed vp with lumber, as that in so little time, as was then to prouide, not more then one could be cleered, and that but once discharged; powder, and shot in that extremitie not to bee come by. With those Ordnance which were cleere, the Fight was maintained very hot about three glasse, or more; till Captaine Bonner (his worthie resolution approuing his zeale to doe your Worshippes his vttermost seruice) receiued a mortall wound, with a shot in the right side, which remained in his bodie, who being carried downe, the ship fired, in foure or five seuerall places most pitifully torne, and many men slaine, shee became a Prey, rather then a Prize vnto them.

The other foure Dutch ships stood in to the Beare, Expedition, and Rose, who seeing, as is said, the Dragons disaster, yeelded also the two first without shooting a shot. Worthie Sirs, I was not at present an actor at this surprize, though I shall haue alwayes cause to bewaile what I then suffered; and therefore must beseech your fauourable acceptance of this small recitall, till others therein employed, of farre better abilitie then my selfe, shall largely acquaint you with euery circumstance: neither dare I persist in this subiect, lest iust passion, caused by remembrance of so late felt, and (vnlesse by your Worships clemencie relieued) neuer to bee recovered miserie, should transport mee beyond those limits, wherein I must now willingly containe my selfe. But thus much I may truly professe, if (as is a common Maxim) contraries hold the same reason of proportion in change of qualitie, they may be expected to be most kind friends; for alreadie, we haue found them most sterne insulters, and beyond compare cruell enemies: and had not more true compassion, pitie, and reliefe, bene extended to vs from Infidell Moores, then from these Dutch Christians, three hundred of your Seruants (vnhappy men) a great number of whom, would not, a few houres before, haue changed fortunes euen with the chiefeest and vnworthiest of that Crew, had left their dead Carcasses a prey to beasts and fowles, and subjected their liuing bodies to miserable seruitude, if a greater chastisement for our sinnes had not bene inflicted.

Being possessed of our ships, they straight way sent the English aboard theirs, and for refreshing after so great labour, as they had that day sustayned, set them in Irons vpon the gratings, in such a night of wind, raine, thunder and lightning, as either before or since I neuer saw; without respect to either sicke or wounded: many of whose liues shortly after payd for that nights barbarous entertainment.

The next morning early, they turned all ashore with such poore ragges, as they would suffer them to weare on their backs vpon the mayne at Tecoo, beeing the foresaid foure shippes Company, and fortie sixe of the Stars men, till then also kept Prisoners, there beeing then a shoare in the Factorie, William Nichols, Henry Bate, and my selfe; where so good order was taken for the sicke and wounded, as the times Confusion, and poore meanes then there would permit.

The third day following, Captaine Bonner was sent ashore with a Gardian, attending him to the house sent by the Dutch Admirall, to carry backe euen the poore bed he lay vpon, which for triple the value was redeemed, where Griefe and Anguish adding a violent Feuer and Spasme, to his former deadly wound: hauing heretofore well deserued the repute of a Worthy, now shewing no lesse a Christian man, and with a resolution well fixt on the merits of our Redeemer; yeelded his soule into the hands of the Almighty, the ninth of October, leauing vs distressed iustly to lament his losse, who were before enough sorrowfull afflicted with remembrance of passed misery, and expectation of more and greater ensuing calamitie, whose bodie as he desired, was buried vpon the little Iland at Tecoo, so neere his Brother Thomas as could be ghesse.

Somewhat to comfort vs in this distresse, it pleased the Lord to giue vs fauour in those peoples fights, who vsed vs fairely and well, as could haue bene expected in any Christian part of the World. The King would diuers times visit Captaine Bonner, and each day present him with such Cates as were there esteemed fittest for so sicke a man, desiring him also to bee comforted, and that both they and Countrey should bee readie both to protect and relieue vs, which was well performed: for so long as the Flemmings rode there, one thousand men armed lay within a quarter of a mile of our house ready vpon any occasion; and a continuall Market for victuall was kept at our doore, wherein all prouisions sold cheaper then before our ships were taken.

The fifth dicto, the Hollanders hauing taken in their Pepper at Tecoo, set sayle with these ships following, viz. The Vapan van Sealand, Admirall in her; William Johnson, Commander of the Fleet; the Huerlam, New Zeland, Neptunes, English Starre, Post-part, the Dragon, Beare, and Expedition for Priaman, intending thence for Bantam, to the rest of their Fleet, there consisting of thirtie five sayle besides them, and were then besieging Bantam. The Pangram and they Vying for dead mens heads, one for Hollanders and the other for Ianas, giuing Rewards; and in which deadly difference, it was unhappy Diegos destinie to bee a sufferer; who after his being taken taken in the Starre; and kept Prisoner, making an escape in a Prow from Jacatra, intending to haue secured himselfe in the English house at Bantam, was by the James apprehended and be-headed instead of a Dutchman; leauing the Rose in the Road, hauing first taken out all her Ordnances, Powder, and Munition; and in her twelue Hogsheads salt flesh, two Buttes of Wine; and some few bagges of bread, and a very small proportion of water-caske, for the foresaid number of men, except such as in the interim ranne away into their seruice, to transport our selues whithersoever we could.

10 About this time there arriued at Tecoo a man (as himselfe said) belonging to Monanchabo; who reported confidently (but whether by the Flemmings instigation, or his owne knowledge I cannot determine) that at the place whence he came, two ships and a Pinnaße were said to be taken at Iambee by foure other ships, which is much to be doubted of Captaine Jordan, &c. The English on the Starre likewise, affirming they had heard of foure ships which were double manned, and maruellously well fitted, sent purposely to take them, which the Lord, I trust, in his mercy hath preuented. The foresaid Blucke was thirtie dayes from Monanchabo thither, and though not commonly yet sometimes aduise from Iambee, commeth hither ouer-land.

20 During our abode at Tecoo, before the Rose could be fitted to sayle, it pleased the Almighty to take compassion on our distresse, and to deliuer vs from the many ineuitable dangers, yea, euen confusions, which were likely presently to light vpon vs, by sending in thither Captaine Charles Clifingham with the Palsgrane, Elizabeth and Hope; who by consultation at the Cape, were intended for Priaman, and arriued at Tecoo, the three and twentieth of October, aboard whom the men ashore were forth-with disperfed. M. Nichols, and Henry Bate sent in a small Prow to Achin; and the Rose, in that poore and weake state shee then was, and no otherwise concluded, to be dispatched for England; to aduise of these accidents and proceedings. Concerning the intendments of the three foresaid ships, as also the end of sending those mentioned to Achin, I am ignorant, and therefore shall humbly referre your Worships to their owne aduices. The fore-said ships with the Rose, set sayle all together from Tecoo, the tenth of Nouember, & at Nimtam parted the fourteenth dicto, & the Lord of his mercie vouchsafed vs so faire a passage, that with the losse of but one man, who also was sicke before we left Tecoo; (notwithstanding our hard allowance, most of our Bread, and much of our Rice beeing consumed and spoyled with Wormes and Vermine) was arriued at the Cape Bona Spei, all in sound health, the eight and 30 twentieth of Ianuary 1619.

Going ashore at Soldania, we found Letters left by Captain Adams, (the Copie whereof is herewith inclosed) also of two Dutch ships departed thence home-ward, left by an Englishman; passenger in one of them; the Copie whereof is herewith likewise inclosed. We had our Sayne ashore to fish, and the Countrey people demeaned themselves as formerly they accustomed, but the next day returning againe ashore to fish and water. The most tragicall and wofull accident befell vs, that euer happened to any English in these parts: eight of our men going to the Riuer by Land, carryed the Sayne with them to fish, and were all by the Saluages either miserably slaine or kept away from vs; we hauing found the dead bodies of but foure of them. The cause 40 which should excite them to such an horrid and vnheard of attempt I cannot conceiue, vnlesse (as is most probable) some wrong offered by the Dutch lately gone hence, haue moued them to practise and exercise this Treachery to vs now, and to bee doubted, will bee indeauoured to all that shall hereafter arriue.

Hauing watered our ship, buried so many of the slaine men as could bee found, and left Letters for any that should arriue after vs, we set sayle from Soldania. The second of February, about noone, past the Equinoctiall, The fifth of March, and the of arriued at in England. The Almighty hauing of his inestimable clemencie protected and deliuered vs, from the exceeding many and eminent dangers of a most miserable Voyage, and vouchsafe vs safe returne into our Native Countrey, for which and all other gracious fauours from our beginnings to this day extended, his great and glorious Maiestie be extolled and magnified, both now and for euermore. Amen. Amen. 50

Your Worships poore Seruant in all dutie and seruice euer at your command,

CHAP. IX.

The Iournall of Master NATHANIEL COURTHOP, his Voyage from Bantam to the Ilands of Banda, being chiefe Commander of the two Ships, the Swanne, Admirall; Master DAVIS, Master: and the Defence, Vice-Admirall; Master HINCHLEY, Master: together with his residence in Banda, and occurrents there; contayning the differences in those parts betwixt the English and Hollanders contracted.

§. I.

English kindneses to the Dutch: the surrender of Poolaroon to His Maie Heie, and the fortifying there by the English: Dutch Hostilitie, their taking the Swanne, Salomon and Attendance, and keeping the Defence betrayed by Fugitives, with other wrongs.

20

Let none accuse me for tediousnesse, or being too punctuall in this Relation: seeing the Dutch pestilence grew principally from hence: and hence may his Maiesties right to these Ilands beeknowne to future Ages: for which I adde this witness after Spurway.

The English kindneses to the King and his Captaine Bonner, and furnished him with needfull, and offering all courtesie.

The names of the Holland ships departing from Tecoo to Priaman and Bantam, where they had thirty five saile being Bantam.

The Panayam at Bantam, and the Hollandaine veying h, p. 516 slught, ne re- of sed to his persiaestie.

Fortifying there. Three Holland ships to disturb the English.

WE set saile from Bantam the last day of October, 1616. and arriued at Macassar, the seuenteenth of Nouember, with the Swanne: the Defence came in the nineteenth, where I went on shoare to get readie our preuision of goods and Rice, hauing no goods as then in Bantam, to serue those places; but had commission to take them here: where I found small store; the chiefeest being one hundred Quians of Rice.

The fift of December, I spyed a boate alongst the shoare, being a Skiffe of the Hollanders come from their ship (which was in the offing) thinking they had had a Factory here: but I soone certified them, it was dissolved, the people their enemies. Whereupon they intreated me to stand their friend: and I forthwith * went to the King and intreated him to dismisse them in that they came ignorantly, who at my request let them goe, giuing them warning not to attempt the shoare a second time. So being night I wished them to goe aboard my ship to refresh themselves, and to depart at their pleasure. That night their Pinnasse went out to Sea, but missed their ship which came the next day into the Road, and not vnderstanding the newes, sent their long Boat towards the shoare, which the King of Macassar perceiuing, sent a number of Prowes which surprized her, and slue euery man of them being sixteene in number.

The ninth of December, we set saile for Banda, with the Hollander in our Company, and being cleere of Macassar, relieved them at their request with fresh water, and sold them two Quines of Rice, with some few Hennes and racke, keeping company as farre as Amboyne. Hence we proceeded, and the three and twentieth of December, being neere Polaroon sent my Skiffe ashore to vnderstand the state of the Ilanders, who were glad of our comming, as beeing not able to hold out longer against the Hollanders oppression, keeping them from reliefe of Victuals.

The same day we came to anchor at Polaroon, the Orankayes came aboard, and I enquired of them whether there had beene any former contract betweene them and the Hollanders: who certified me, there had beene none at all. Then according * to my Commission, I required them to surrender their Land to the Kings Maiestie of England, which they presently did: and drew Articles of Trade and Conditions to be obserued betwixt vs; which being agreed on, we spread Saint George vpon the Iland, and shot off most of our Ordnance.

The five and twentieth of December, we saw a Holland ship comming from the West-wards, and forthwith vpon Councell landed three Peeces of Ordnance out of the Swanne, and mounted them on a Cliffe fittest for that purpose, and made what haste wee could to fit a platforme for them. We landed three other Peeces of Ordnance, and mounted them on a point of Land which commanded the Road: thus fitted, I landed most of the goods and settled a Factory.

Vpon the third of Ianuary, there came three Flemmish ships into the Road, flourishing with their Trumpets and came to anchor by vs. Wee fitted our shippes for fight, and I sent Master Muschamp aboard the Admirall, to certifie them of the surrender, as also to demand if they could lay any clayme to the said Land. They answered, no. I further offered them water or any thing the Iland afforded; but they plainly told me, they came for no such thing: whereupon I told them the Countrey people would not suffer them to ride there vnder their noses; and that that they had beene doing, but I caused them to forbear: and perceiuing their intent to surprize vs, and fearing they would lay vs aboard in the night, I told them I could not stay the Countrey people any longer, if they were not gone before two Glasses were runne. They thereupon weighed and departed. The fourth, there came a Holland Boat and sounded all alongst the little Iland, at whom Master Hinchley shot from the Land, but hit her not, and they departed.

John Davis his Letter. This and other Letters I had whole, and haue taken that which I thought most fit, leauing the rest: which are to be seene perused in Master Cort. Iournall. I had about 60. Letters belonging to this and Master Hayes Iournall to peruse: some of which I here haue from the originall transcribed.

Neylackey a little Iland by Polaroone. Fortified. The Defence betrayed by perfidious Knaves to the Hollanders. King, Christmas, Howes, Harris, Bridges, Rockwell, Carter, Taylor and Woodlocke. See what a Dutch prison will doe; together with lying pretences of the Hollanders and fugitives. The Deuill was also a Lyer and Murtherer from the beginning. Thus did the Dutch with Generall Kill, Wey and all; I dare not lay lye all, in pretence of Commission and the Kings Letter. Take this as the fugitives and Hollanders reports.

The Swan being deliuered, Master Davis would goe water at Wayre, obstinately contrariying my command. I being then very sicke came aboard the Defence, and sent Sophonie aboard the Swan, which departed Jan. 18. I after had vncertaine newes, that the Hollanders had taken her and sent the Sewes ouer to Lantore to heare the newes, which brought word that the Swan was in Nero Road. On the seuen and twentieth of Februarie, I sent Robert Hayes to the Hollander with a flagge of Truce, to demand the reason of taking her. Their reason was, we came yearly to make our voyage and lade our ships, and be gone; they had the brunt of the Warre, and wee came sneaking to doe them iniurie. And further, they said, that the States of Holland and the Lords of the Councell should conferre of this businesse: and being demanded the manner of her taking, they said, Time should bring it forth. And further, threatened to fetch the Defence out of the Road. They asked what men wee had at Wayre and Rosfing, and said, they would fetch them out of those places. They also sent a writing, the effect whereof was, that the wrongs we offered them could no longer be indured, and that they would haue one sent ouer to come to composition with them. Hereupon by councell it was agreed for the safetie of our ship, liues and goods, to land all our prouisions on the small Iland, with most of the men to manage the Ordinance: which being subscribed by Corthop, Spurway, Hinchley, Hayes, Stacy, Helmore, and the second of March to be put in execution, none else of the ships companie would yeeld thereto, but would keepe the ship to death. The seuenth of March, a Letter was brought from Nero, by a Hollander, with a flagge of Truce from Master Davis, part whereof I haue transcribed: Master Corthop commendations, &c. The Admirall and the rest haue settled their resolutions to haue you off from Polaroone, according to their Commission, and I know, that vnlesse you doe talke together, there will be much slaughter about it. For they are all double manned from their Castles, and must fight it out as I haue proued already. For they did shoote at me twice before I began, although I was in the Sea eight leagues off when they chased me. We fought almost boord and boord for the space of one houre and an halfe, untill they had killed five men, maymed three, and hurt eight. And when wee began we had not thirtie men able to doe any thing, nor no wind to worke withall, &c.

I answered by a Letter to them, that we doubted of their Message and Letter, except they would send an Englisb man, one of the ships companie, to notifie things vnto vs: that we heard they had murdered our men in cold blood: and as they pretended commission to beat vs off, we had commission to maintayne the Kings Maiesties right of England. We thus sought to prolong time for our better fortification: and the same night sent Ordinance and Munition to the little Iland of Neylackey which maketh the Road; and if they had planted there as they pretended, they would haue beaten all our ships out of the Road, and haue kept all reliefe from the great Iland, so that we must haue beene gone for want of food. The tenth of March came a Hollander with Master Davies Boy and a Letter from him, to signifie, that after the Flagge was furled not one man was meddled with: Sophonie was the first man was torne in pieces with a great shot, &c. This Letter came with other Dutch Letters: but we now being almost readie for them, wrote them an absolute answer, that if we should come into their subiection as they desire, we should shew our selues no true subiects to his Maiestie: and that our resolution was to stand to all hazards whatsoever, March 11.

On the fourteenth it was concluded by councell, to bring ashore our Prouisions; and to bring the ship about, her Cables twice cut in two with the Rocks, and now hauing but two anchors to Sea-boord. But finding her leake and vnlkely to be brought about, wee agreed to bring her ashore vnder the Defences Fort. Master Hinchley, on the eighteenth came to an anchor neerer into the Bay, leauing aboard John King Boatson, with some twentie more. And on the twentieth in the morning, the ship was driuen almost as farre as Lantore; which when they which were a sleepe in the ship perceiued, and asked the reason, the King answered; Tell the Master I had the Watch, and being asleepe, the ship droue! Thus some went into the long boate, the rest which were compacted stayed behinde, and when the long boate was come away, they set their fore-course and went into Nero Roade, and deliuered the ship to the Hollanders.

The first of Aprill 1617. the Flemmings sent ouer letters with a flagge of truce; one from Master Davis to vrge a composition, aduising very passionately, If I lose any more men by your arrogance; as here I haue lost by sicknesse already, their liues and blouds shall rest upon your heads and your faction, and this I will write with dying hand, God giue me leaue: for what they doe or haue done, their Commission will beare them out in: and are contented to let the Law decide betweene our Masters and theirs, or will come to any reasonable matter of friendship, that no more bloud may be spilt on either side: For I plainly see how you carry it. You haue caused the Master of the Defence, to land his peeces ashore from his ship and make wracke of her * to drine up and downe. Is it in our hands to defend an army that haue order for what they doe? He proceedeth to an inuēctiue, that they would defend trecherous Bandanefes, who are at Banda daily to make a peace with the Hollanders, that they may haue time to cut your throates, &c.

I made answer to the Hollanders, promising vpon such two stayes to come and conferre, with all redemanding the Defence with her men and goods. Those pledges came not, but two others; and on the sixt went to Nero. Where the next day the generall and Councell offered mee restitution of ships, goods, men and all losses whatsoever, on condition that I should take off my Ordnance from Polaroon and Neylackey and leaue the Iland: to which I answered, I could not vnlesse I should turne Traitor vnto my King and Countrey, in giuing vp that right which I am able to hold; and also betray the Countrey people, who had surrendered vp their land to our Kings Maiestie; but promised to conferre with my Councell and send him an absolute answer. I returned the eight, and sent him his pledges: The next day I called a Councell, shewed my Commission, where it was resolved to send word to Bantam, and a resolute answer to the Hollanders, that we could not giue away the Kings right without treason; and to betray the Hollanders his subiects were both vnchristian falshood, and vnreasonable folly to incurre their fury. But if the Dutch would restore the Defence with men and goods, and helpe to conuay them to Bantam, giuing vnder their hands, that no attempt should be made against the two Ilands, till it be decided in England or Bantam, then &c. They returned the messenger to aduise mee by writing, to consider of it, and send my full resolution in three dayes, or else hee would bring all his forces and take vs perforce. He not comming, we fitted a Prow to send newes to Bantam, and demand ayde, wherein went Master Spurway, Master Hinchley, Christopher the Flemmish fugitive, whom doubting, I gaue order to leaue at Macasser. I wrote a letter of Occurrents to Bantam; signifying also the Dutch brauadoes (which they had made Master Davis belecue) as that they had our Kings Letters to take any of vs to the East of Celebes: He offered, * If they could shew such letters, he would giue vp all, or if they could shew any Surrender made to them by the Natives, or if they would carry vs to Bantam, and not meddle till there, or in England, things bee decided: that the Hollanders are hated of all Nations in those parts: that they vaunt they haue the Copies of the Companiss Commission before any ships come forth: that no English Generall hath the Kings Commission: that they bring Letters from petty Kings (which are reputed as their slanes) as of Amboyna and Hetto, with the like: that if the Bandanefes will haue their Countreyes in peace, they must submit themselves to the Hollanders, for that no Nation can compare with them: with request of supply the next winds: that he could haue had all Lantore Ilands deliuered him, but did not thinke it fit, hauing no goods nor victuals for them; which if it come, in two dayes will bee done, the small league they enter with the Hollander, being but to sustayne their hunger; all of them being agreed to haue no other peace with them, &c.

The fift of Iune, the Holland Generall Laurence Ryall, in a small ship, came within shot of our Fort, vpon Neylackey, hauing heard by the Defence-fugitiues, that most of our men would runne away, if they had opportunity: but he expecting them in the Skiffe, was welcomed from me with foureteene shot, that a man was not seene to trimme the sailes, but they bore vp the helme and departed. I sent another Prow with aduice for Bantam, lest the former might miscarry by Master Stacy, which departed the eight of Iuly.

The foure and twentieth of December, we had newes that the men of Lantore had detayned seuen Hollanders of their chiete and their goods, killing one of them in the taking, the other ransomed for eighty fve Bandanefes: and so the league was broken. The three and twentieth of February, I had newes that the Prow in which Master Stacy went, was cast away, and the King of Botton lent them another for Macasser. The twelfth of March, we felt a terrible earthquake.

The fve and twentieth of March, 1618. we saw two of our ships about some fve leagues from Polaroon comming from the Westwards, with the very last of the westerly windes, and as then being taken with an Easterly winde, which brought the foure Holland ships (these we had seene looking out from the twentieth day) vp with them, the great Bantam, the Trow, the Star and the Swanne: These fought with them from two of the clocke till nine at night. The fight was in sight of Polaroon some three leagues off. And at midnight came the Attendance Skiffe ashore at Polaroon with foure and twenty Bandanefes, who told vs of three ships, the Solomon, the Thomas, and the Attendance; and how the Thomas had left them in the Streights of Desolam, and neuer was seene after; and that the ships could no longer endure the fight, because the Solomon could not vse her lower Teere, and their Powder was naught. The sixe and twentieth, we lost sight of all the ships, and in the nine and twentieth, all six came into Nero Road, where the Hollanders wore our Colours vnder their ships sternes in all disgracefull manner.

10 He first of Aprill, Robert Fuller brought newes from Lantore, that the Bandanefes were most of them slaine by the Hollanders (in taking the ships) and that they fezed the Hollanders twice ouer boord and slew many of them, but were oppressed with number. On the foureteenth, a Hollander with a flag of truce brought mee a letter from Master Cassarian David, Commander of the three ships aforesaid, in these words.

20 MAfter Corthop, my loue premised vnto your selfe, and the rest of your good companie, I wish you all health and prosperitie. Having at this time (through the Generalls permission) gotten oportunitie to write vnto you, I thought good to let you vnderstand of that, which I thinke, you doe already know too well, that is, of our being surprized by the Hollanders. The Generall and his Councell doe allege, that these Ilands Pooloway and Pooloroan with the rest, is their right, as you haue formerly heard them say, and that if any of the English came there for Trade, they haue a Commission to make lawfull prize of them, and so late experience hath taught vs here. For my part I cannot resolue the Generall of any determinate course, for want of your aduise, but I wish you were all safe from thence.

False pretence of Commission.

30 It rests that you doe aduise with the Merchants and the rest, residing with you, and (if you thinke good) write downe your determination, and send it me by this Bearer, that I may the better answer to the Generalls Propositions, which I cannot doe, till we vnderstand each others mind, as for my consent it shall be grounded vpon your knowledge and experience of the Iland, whether you bee able to keepe it, or bee willing to leaue it.

Our ships, the Salomon and the Attendance, ride at Nero, and our men shared amongst the Dutch ships, being stripped out of all money and clothes. My selfe with one English Boy to attend me, remayne vpon Pooloway, where the Generall and his Councell doe abide, at whose hands I doe daily find much fauour and kind vsage, though watched and looked vnto as a prisoner. The Thomas, which was my Vice-Admirall, we lost in the Streights of Delalon, and by all iudgement; shee is there cast away, yet we haue no absolute certaintie thereof.

40 I would be glad to haue your presence here for our better proceeding in the businesse, and the Generall is willing to send to Pooloroan a man of fashion to stay there as a pledge in your absence, but alwayes provided, that you enter into a condition with the Countrey people, that the said pledge haue no wrong offered him in your absence, but as you shall returne in safetie to Pooloroan, so hee may returne in safetie to Pooloway againe, of this, I pray you, consider, &c. and conferre with the Orankayas, and send it me in writing by this Bearer, whether you may doe so or not: If you thinke good that it shall be so, faile not to aduise me thereof, and the Boat shall come for you againe, and bring the Generalls pledge. And so I commit you to the safe tuition of the Almighty: And rest

Your euer louing Friend,

CASSARIAN DAVID.

Aboord the Trow in Nero Road, the twentie sixe of April, 1618.

60 Most louing and kind friend, Master Nathaniel Corthop, I heartily salute you, and beseech God to send continuance of health vnto you all there: Your Letters, yesterday being of vs safely receiued here, ministred much ioy vnto vs all in middest of our lamentations for you, vnderstanding thereby the Flemmings notorious lyes, who can doe little else, reporting you all to be in all manner of wants and miserie by the Bandanefes, against whom they are speedily bent to make an assault vpon either Lantore or otherwise Polaroon (but I hope you mistrust the worst) with fine hundred Souldiers at least, now they haue here eight saile of ships of their owne, and within two or three dayes expect them.

Lies of English
distesse.

It

It pleased Master Geo. Barkley, the twentieth of Februarie, 1616. to send mee with Ric. Hunt, (who died at Bantam) upon the attendant to your selfe, but the Monson being spent wee could but fetch Macassar, where I stayed but eleuen moneths, in expectation of our Fleet for Banda, which was a hot one when it came (to encounter with such an Enemy) being but three ships, and the best of them run away afore-hand, I meane the Thomas, Master William Hakeridge leaving my selfe and his Mate Tatten, and Purser, with five more of his companie aboard the Salomon, and God knoweth what is become of them, which had we bene together, doubtlesse we had gelded them of their great Bantam, but being as we were so deepe ships, hauing upwards of two hundred quoyes of Rice, besides Arack six hundred latres, thirtie foure bales of cloth with other provisions, as neuer was Poolaroon so fitted, if it had pleased God, wee had all safely here arrived, for that wee were 100 100 much euer-matched by their great Forces. 10

Sicknesse at Bantam.

There hath bene this yeare a great mortalitie in Bantam, the chiefe Factors there, with Generall Pepwell and the rest kept the ships there so long, that there dyed aboue two hundred of our men there before their departure from thence.

French arrived at Bantam, and how welcomed by the Dutch.

The Frenchmen that arrived at Bantam, these Flemmings tooke their Dutchmen out of them perforce, to the ouerthrow of their Voyage, and for any farther matter not worthy the writing thereof.

Now to come to our selues, and our taking the Bantam being nearest vs, of the Flemmings foure ships, yet some distance off, and the five and twentieth of March last past, about noone shot at vs, whom we soone answered againe with shot for shot all that afternoone, but our Powder was naught, and could not carrie the shot home, when theirs came euer vs, but neuer tucked vs to the setting of the Sunne, 20 soone after the wind comming Easterly, we were in the midst of our foes, and being so much over-matched, were by them surprized and taken, but the Bandanezes eight of them fought very valiantly, and killed the Flemmings, three men out-right, and hurt them three more: but the tall man of Pooloway, and another little man with him, played their parts excellently, for they drew the Flemmings over-board, by fortie at once; some up into the foure shrouds, some one way, and some another, that they had scoured the Deckes of them all. I thinke if the Bandanezes had had them upon plaine ground, they would haue put the Flemmings to the sword euery man of them, for that they were exceedingly fearefull to deale with them, but by their Boats and subtiltie, they killed the Bandanezes, and tooke senen or eight Boyes prisoners, whereof one or two of them is runne away and escaped from hence out of their hands, and I hope got safely to you there by this time. Now, after that wee came to a parley with the 30 Flemmings, they killed vs three men basely, both against the Law of Armes and all good manners besides, bringing vs afterwards to Nero, where they made pillage (by the Dutch Generall his order) of all that we had, keeping our men in Irons, these Flemmings being so close in all their doings, that their owne Skippers cannot know their determination; and yet their Generall is bound with them in companie, or else I thinke little would be by them performed, what I can I will aduise you, though I cannot perswade you, but I beseech God blesse you, and all with you.

Braue spirits of the Bandanezes.

Base dealing of Brutish Dutch.

Master Cassarian Dauid is kept by the Dutch Generall at Pooloway, being sent by the chiefe Factor and counsell at Bantam, Cape Merchant of the Fleet upon the Salomon, and my selfe his second upon the Thomas, consigned all by Commission unto your selfe and is referred to your appointment. The first present I writ Master Cassarian at Pooloway, aduising him to acquaint you with all Occur- 40 rences what hath passed, that you might not be ignorant of any thing, nor frustrate your hopes in expectation of what now cannot be, I say, the more to blame them at Bantam, so carelesly to keepe these ships there so long, unto the eight of Ianuarie, last before, they sent them away from thence, which hath brought upon vs all this miserie. The shippes arrived at Macassar the second of February last, and through extremitie of foule weather it was the senenth of March, before we could set saile from thence. I pray you returne my hearty commendations unto Master Muschampe, Master Hayes, and Thomas Foord, with all the rest of our louing friends, there likewise Master Lane, Master Churchman, Master Kellum, and Thomas Fowle, commend themselves heartily unto you all, I cannot yet heare from Master Cassarian, I thinke hereafter we shall goe for Amboyna, where Master Davis is and twentie 50 men more, the rest are at Ternate, I pray you excuse my not formerly writing to you, because I doubted the deliuerie, and thus much at present shall for this time suffice, and with my kindest commendations unto your selfe, I beseech God to keepe you out of the hands of all your enemies, and make our meeting ioyfull to each other, and so in haste I rest,

Want of conueyance maketh a long passage.

Your euer louing friend here now Prisoners, Geo. Jackson, in the behalfe of Jacob Lane, Bartholomew Churchman and the rest.

This was a Lie, for it arrived safe at Poolaroon.

These Flemmings report that the day after we were taken, their other three ships tooke vp the Attendants Skiffe, halfe full of bloody water, and thinke those Bandanezes that went away in the Skiffe, killed one another; and got not to Poolaroon. Wherefore in your next, I pray you write the certaintie of it, likewise, they report that our men did not runne away with the Defence, but would haue carryed her for Ceyran, but that the Flemmings manned out two of their long Boats, and tooke the Defence, and brought her into Nero. 60

Pro idem GEO. JACKSON.

A Letter from Master Lane Master of the Salomon. From aboard the Trow of Amsterdam, in Nero Road the twelfth of Aprill.

Loving Friend Master Nathaniell Corthop, I heartily salute, these are to certifie you, the seventh of March we departed out of Macasser Road, with the Salomon, the Thomas and the Attendance, Master Cassarian Davis being our chiefe Commander of all the ships, the thirteenth of the same moneth, being neere the Streights of Saler, we lost company of the Thomas, which wee never heard of 10 since all of vs being bound directly for Poolarooke: the five and twentieth of the same moneth, being break of the day, the Salomon and the Tendance being within foure or five leagues of Poolarooke, we saw foure sayles of Dutch ships, three of them being to the Easterne of vs, the other being their Ad-mirall, was neere unto the Iland of Poolarooke, that day being calme with little wind Easterly, wee towed with our Boats and made the best meanes we could to get the Iland, the Dutch ships having the wind of vs, bore with vs at two a clocke in the afternoone, the great Bantam Vice-Admirall got within shot of vs, and plyed her best to vs, and we requited her to our power at foure a clocke; the Starre which tooke the Swanne, and the Swanne likewise got within shot of vs, at eight a clocke at night. The Ad-mirall got within a ships length of vs, and plyed their great Ordnance upon vs, killing three men, and hurt thirteene or fourteene men, but would not boord vs, commanding the chiefe of vs to come aboard 20 their Admirall, and to strike downe our Sayles, and to take in our Flagge, which Master Cassarian caused to be done, and commanding the Skiffe to be manned to goe aboard of them, and likewise Master Jackson, in another Boat to goe aboard another of them, they being there, I could heare no answer from any of them, the Dutch having our two Boates aboard with our chiefe Commander, send their foure large Boats full of men, to the number of one hundred and fortie, or one hundred and fiftie men to keepe our ships, and to take the Bandaneses which they killed, the Arankayes to the number of twelue of them, the rest they saved alive, and carry them ashore to Nero, for Master Cassarian hee is and hath beene at Pooloway since we came in here, but for my part with my Mate Churchman, and Master Jackson, with thirteene men more, are aboard of the Trow in Irons; but we three, for Master Vil-les which was Master of the Attendance, he is aboard the Starre with many of his men, for the rest of 30 our men they are aboard the Bantam, and the Swanne not suffered to goe to one another, but lye and fare more like slaves then men, which I thinke will kill many of vs. For our things they have taken away all that every man had to their clothes of their backs; Sir, I understand, that your wants are great at the Iland, and that the Countrey people have got the Castles from you, and that within short time they meane to send you all over here unto the hands of the Dutch, which I wish you could rather get for Macasser, then to come in their hands. The Dutch hath no ships at Buttone, three ships they have now in the offing, or at Amboyna five ships, they have heard if, the three ships get in here, they purpose to come all for Poolarooke, otherwise I thinke not this yeare, yet I heare within this seven or eight dayes, the old Horne a ship of seven or eight hundred tunnes, with the small Gally and other Boats are to come for Poolarooke, where they understand that the small Castle shall be delivred up unto the Dutch, for the 40 rest of their ships that be here, I heard within this three weekes they are to goe for Amboyna. Sir, I have saved these two Letters which Captaine Ball delivred me for you, which I used the best meanes I could to save them for you, and to send them to you with the best meanes I could to save them for you, and to send them to you with the best meanes I could use, which I desire you may receive, and to send me answer how all businesse standeth with you in this case, and I will be glad to pay the Coat off my backe to the bearer for an answer, other Letters we have for you and the rest of your company on the Iland, which if I can shall be sent you.

Sir, the Salomon was deepe layd with Rice, the Thomas laded with Rice and Racke, and other provision, the Attendance laded with Rice, Fish and Racke and other provision. Thus with my love unto you with the rest of your company, I cease, beseeching God to blesse you in your proceedings, and deliv-50 us out of the hands of these Tyrants, and send us all a ioyfull meeting.

Your Friend to his poore power to command,

JACOB LANE.

Sir, the Generall of the Dutch had giuen expresse authoritie vnto the Commanders of those ships, that if they meet vs, either to sinke or burne vs before wee should recover the Iland, or else 60 he would hang them that should be the occasion.

Howsoever William Hakeridge hath dealt with me, yet I rest much bound to your selfe for your loue to me, that thought so well on me, whose thankefulnesse should undoubtedly haue turned to your credit, had it not beene by these arrogant theewish Flemmings, and Master Hakeridge: otherwise preuented, which mischiefe grew from a Molajo Letter, written by a Flemming Whore in Maccasser, and sent in a Trunke to Amboyna, aduising of our comming: otherwise wee had beene at our Port before that the Flemmings had heard of vs. Hereupon the Flemmings layed waight for vs, with foure of their best ships of Warre, and three more readie to second them if need required. Now the Thomas being lost out of our Company: we plyed our Voyage with the Salomon, and the Attendant sayling to the South-ward of the shoalds that are off a Buttone. And the five and twentieth of March last, by day breake we had sight of Polarroone, about five leagues off, presently upon this we descried three sayle of Flemmings to the North-ward, and one to the East-ward, to say, the Bantam, the Trow, the Swanne, and the Starre that tooke the Swanne, which of these shippes the Bantam came somewhat neere vs about noone, and had we here had the Thomas in our Company, wee had surely Gelded them of their great Bantam for that ship was some distance from her Consorts, and seeing our weaknesse, began fight and shot at vs, whom we soone answered againe with shot for shot, but our Powder was naught and could not carry the shot home, when the Flemmings shot ouer vs, thus wee continued but no hurt done of eyther side to the setting of the Sunne, for that we were some distance off, and being sent to too late: the Monson fayles vs, the wind comming now Easterly, and in the night brought our enemies round about vs, at which time of being sent by Master Cassarian aboard their Vice-Admirall.
The Bantam to know their intent which was according to their protest made at Bantam against vs, then the Trow their Admirall very basely shot: the Salomon twice thorough and thorough, killed there foure men, and hurt vs ten men more, thus were we by the Flemmings surprized, taken Prisoners, and pillaged; who kept vs first in their ships at Nero, and now close Prisoners in Pooloway Castle ten of vs, the rest are carryed for Amboyna, and the Moluccas.

Now if our three ships had beene sent sooner, we had not onely arriued safely at Polarroone with two hundred and fiftie Quens of Rice, for that I know there was no lesse provided in Maccasser, but also we had gained the whole commoditie of Nuts and Mace, with both Countrey of Banda, and people likewise; and the Flemmings could not haue bought two hundred Suckles of Mace whereas now they haue bought at least two hundred Tunnes. The neglect of which thus much importeth, though it prone not the losse of both commoditie and Countrey hereafter.

The five and twentieth of May last, the Flemmings marched with seven hundred and fiftie Soul-diers against Lantore, but the Bandanezes gaue them such a repulse, killing them foure men, and hurt them sixteene more, that the Flemmings came off againe, and neuer beate their Drumme. The Dutch Generall would not be intreated of us to shew us any kindnesse, neyther would he ransom us for any money, it may be that he thinketh the English will take so many of his men, and so ransom one man for another.

Thus not willing to be ouer tedious, I beseech you good Sir, to consider our misery, and doe what may be for our Releasement.

Your euer louing Friend to command,

Pooloway, the 18. of September.

George Jackson.

I sent an answer offering vpon pledges to come ouer to Pooloway, in the Vessell which they should come in.

M. Courthops
Letter to M.
Ball.

The seuenteenth of Aprill, the Orrenkayes of Lantore came ouer to me to conferre about keeping the Iland another yeare, which they promised to keepe out the Hollander from trading with them, onely relying vpon our Forces the next yeare. Wee agreed to hold it out till the next yeare. The eighteenth, by a Praw that went to Bottoone, I sent a Letter for Bantam, to be conueyed by that King to our Factorie at Maccasser, signifying the taking of these ships, the vnadvisednesse in sending them so vnseasonably (for one day sooner had brought them in) neither was there about halfe a day of Westerly winds to bring them to Nero) that many poore men were slaine, maymed, or held in slauerie worse then Turkish slaues; and had not foure or five Iaua lunkes come in, for want of victuals we must also haue giuen up, and still liue on Rice only with a little fish, which in foule weather is not to be had; daily expecting an assault from the Hollanders, and wish it not so much able to stand out, as willing to make them pay deare, &c. He sent another also for refreshment to the Factor at Maccasser.

The twentieth of Aprill, we were aduertized that within two dayes the Hollanders would assail

assailed vs, but they came not. The thirtieth, they trayned their men, about seven hundred. I sent another Letter to Master Ball (where, in relating the fight these words are used.) *The Attendance before they yeelded gaue the Bandanezes their small Boat; so they escaped to Poolarooone. But the Salomon was so belayd: that the Bandanezes could not goe out of her. Master Cassarian yeelded in that manner that if I had beene in his place, before I would haue done it, I would haue sunke downe * right in the Sea. That was in this manner: After they had fought from two till nine at night, being almost boord and boord, the Dutch called vnto him to take in his Colours, strike his sayles and come himselfe aboard, which all hee did, they detayned him and his Boat. So our men in the ship played a good and wise part likewise: for they perceiuing their Commander kept aboard the Dutch shippes, went* 10 and got the Bandanezes Swords, and hid them from them: only two of them kept their Swords privately: nineteene had no weapons, and stowed themselves in the ship, and some eight or ten of them with their Creezes and two Swords, at the Hollanders entring of our ship killed the Hollanders at least forty of them, and hurt diuers more of them; most of this slaughter being done by two of the Bandanezes only. For at their entring our men kept themselves in the fore-castle apart, whilst the Bandanezes fought; but at last being taken, the Hollanders killed some twelue, and saved seven of the youngest. So farre as can I perceine, they neither respect right or iustice, but stand altogether vpon force of Armes. I haue but thirtie eight men to withstand their force and tyranny, our wants extreme: neither haue wee victuals or drinke but only Rice and water, they haue at present eight ships here and two Gallies, and to my knowledge all fitted to come against vs. I looke daily and howerly for them, &c.
20 He signified also both to him and in a Letter to the Factor at Macassar, that he had not, since first hee came into these Ilands, receiued one Letter or aduise from any English.

* Thus he did fore-tell his owne death in the cause and manner.

In a Letter from Master Lane to M. Courthop, is written that he had sent away the Bandanezes, but one Richard Tanton Masters Mate of the Thomas would not suffer it, for feare of the Dutch seueritie: and that they seeing no remedie, shot William Shoply, after Master, and cut the eare off of the Gunners Mate neere off; another they ranne thorow the backe. This is like to be the cause of taking away their Swords. The seventh of May, the Salomon went from Nero laden. The five and twentieth, the Hollanders gaue an assault on Lantore landing eight companies of Souldiers, contayning about five hundred men, but were repulsed with losse of foure of theirs and one Bandaneze. The two and twentieth, for further certaintie I sent another Letter to Master Ball.

The eight and twentieth of Iune, I had a Letter sent mee from Master Cassarian David, wherein he signifieth the Dutch threats of perpetuall imprisonment; if I came not to better consideration: which I answered, refelling the Hollanders lyes touching the Attendants Boat taken up by them with bloud; and another, that I should send the Generall a Letter to surrender the small Iland; and that I haue but ten English here: also that the Blackes had possession of my Ordinance, &c.

Dutch lyes to scare the English, and sawce their imprisonment.

The last of Iune, Master Balls Letter was sent me by Master Lane, which is as followeth.

Master Courthop, my heartie commendations to you, and all the rest of your companie, with my prayers for your health, and happinesse, &c. Yours of the eleuenth of Aprill, by Master Thomas Spurway, and the thirtieth of Iune, by Master Stacy, I receiued vnderstanding thereby of the Occurrences happened in Banda, which, albeit in many things contrary to our expectation, yet as now not to be auoyded, nor by any faire course hoped to haue it amended, was it to be doubted that surrender being made to his Maiestie of England, of those places, and his subiects in possession, that in so apparent and iust cause; the Flemmings durst haue fallen out into open Hostilitie with vs, in taking the Swan, and making themselves Owners of the Defence, with the imprisonment of our men, but now we haue too manifest a prooffe of their insolencie, and that they dare doe any thing, that is not above their 50 force, and make the best shew of a bad meaning.

They pretend contracts with the King of Ternate, for defence of his Countries, and with his subiects for their Epices, and all Trade whatsoeuer, euen to the exclusion of all other Nations, Iustice is too weake to deale with force, and consequently, no pleading with them without force, which I hoped wee should haue beene able this yeare to haue effected, albeit that it falls out to the contrary, but the next I doubt not, but we shall haue force to make them know, that free gift and possession is better then contracts, and that they are not to conquer Countries to themselves, vnder pretence of defending the King of Ternate, being to them in nature of a Prisoner; that are in no command of him, in the meane time our indeauour must be: for the right of our King and honour of our Countrey, to make good what wee haue; Master Spurway in his returne was charged into Botone by the Flemmings, and so belaid for, that had not the King of that place stood his very good friend, hee, and his companie had fallen into their hands: but by this meanes while the Flemmings waited before the mouth of the Riuer for their coming out, they were conueyed over a necke of Land, and so escaped for Macassar, where meeting the Attendance they tooke passage, and came hither, Stacie that Owle, blind in his selfe will, cast away his Praw upon Botone, the goods all lost, the men only saved, where he left the Bandanezes, who chose to stay there, in hope to saue something for themselves: and by the Kings fauour got a Praw, and came thither by the way of Maccaffer, all the Billes of exchange, only the hundred Rials of Peter van Loare: I payd also the Honourable our Employers, lose one quarter thereby, the Cattee of Macc taken there at a Riall, worth here not three quarters of a Riall, and for him the said van Loare, as he came to you an effie in that place, so at his best oportunitie hee left vs here; leauing, though very loth, his money behind him.

Captaine Iordane departed hence in the Cloue for England, Christmasse last a yeare, and Captaine Barkley our Chiefe, departed this life the first of March past: here arriued the Fleet of Captaine Ioseph, but not himselfe, being slaine about the Ilands of Comora, in fight with a Carracke; who hauing no meanes to escape, ranne ashore and fired, there was in her besides goods of diuers Fabriques, three and twentie hundred thousand pieces of eight, a prettie Cargazon, and would haue done well in our Factories, but it is fallen out, a lasse, to the Portugals, and no gaine unto vs, neither in purse nor credit, as you may understand by others.

It is giuen vs to understand, by Letters from our Honourable Employers of a second ioynt Stocke, subscribed for twentie hundred thousand pounds; It began the first of this yeare, the first ioynt Stocke ended in the Fleet of Captaine Pring, consisting of senen shippes, whereof two, to say, the Hope, and Hound came directly hither, the other five went by, by off Surat, I pray God to blesse them, and that performing effectually there, they may arriue hither in safety, the Gouvernour of the Flemmings hath beene here, but we conferred not together, the cause proceeding of pride in them, and no submission in me: but to be short, as they began, which you see they haue continued unto vs in Hostile manner. The fixe and twentieth of Nouember, the Speed-well, Robert Iackson Master, bound for Iacatra, was taken, and the men all (but one that was slaine in the entring her, and one that is since dead) are in Chaines, the Gouvernour after the taking of this Pinnasse came with sixteene ships into Bantam Road, to braue vs which we were content to suffer, in respect of their too much aduantage. And now you may understand I haue dispeeded these two ships, the Salomon and Thomas for Maccaffer, to lade Rice already provided for them, with a good Cargazon of goods, besides of cloth, of diuers sorts for Banda, according to the Inuoyce here inclosed sent you, whereof not doubting your care and diligence for Sales and Returnes, I omit in that respect to insert to your memory. For other Newes and Occurrents here passed since your departure, I commend you unto the Bearers hereof, and so for this time, I commit you to the might and mercifull protection of the Almighty.

Bantam, the seuenth of Ianuary, 1617.

Your euer louing Friend,

GEO. BALL.

The seuenth of Iuly, I sent Robert Hayes to Lantore, to view the Road, what conuenient place our ships might ride in, free from shot of Nero Castle, and what place wee might plant Ordnance to defend our ships, and endamage the Hollanders, which returned with a draught of the Roads there, on the eighteenth. The two and twentieth, I wrote againe by a Iana luncke to Master Ball (touching the taking of the ships, the Hollanders proud wearing our colours at their sterne, and a long time neuer ceasing shooting day nor night, as though they had taken halfe the goods in the World. The third of this present, the Generall with five ships set saile to the Westwards, sending me word some foure dayes before, that he would come by me, and send me some flying Messengers to know how I did: but like a bragging, lying, &c.

The second of August, I sent Master Muschamp in a Banda Praw, with the Sabandar of Pooloway and Inche Tungull, to giue intelligence at Bantam: by whom I writ (touching the intolerable pride and tyrannie, that the Hollander vsesh in these parts upon vs both, in bodies, and name, and that with a good conscience we may proceed in regard of the great outrage and infamie they haue offered vs in these parts, both in disgracefull speeches to our King and Nation, and in their barbarous tyrannie they haue vsed to our weak forces, being captinated by them: hauing written how we may offend them by planting Ordnance at Oretaton, &c.

* M. Courthops magnanimous mind is not more scene in withstanding the Hollanders wrongs, then in bearing the impatience of his Countrey-men impotently vrging right.

The thirteenth of August, there came fiftene Portugals borne at Goa, which had beene surprized by the Hollanders, from Nero in a Praw, and I gaue them entertaynment. The fiftenth, I receiued a Letter from Master Cassarian David, in the name of the English at Pooloway, vrging to right what was amisse, * and to call conscience to the Barre (words shewing what a hard imprisonment and faire glosses may doe with impotent and impatient spirits) which I answered the next day, both with best reason, and sending them reliefe. I receiued also a Letter from Master Willes, as followeth.

From

From Pooloway, the fifteenth of August, 1618.

Loving Friend, Master Courthop my loue remembred to you and to all the rest of our good friends, &c. Master Courthop, the urgent occasion at this present is to let you understand, about sending the Blackes ashore was this, first about ten of the clocke the same day, we being chased by three sayle, for my part I went aboard of the Salomon, to see what they were minded to doe. Master Cassarian willed me presently to goe aboard againe, and to be readie to defend our selues, and to keepe faire by him, which indeed I did, and also I could haue gone from them at first sight if I would, but I could not haue gotten to the Iland if I had gone at ten of the clocke at night, we were faire by the Flemmings, the Salomon being within call of vs. The Blackes that were in the Salomon, were got into the ships Boate for to goe ashore, then was I called to to haue our Blacks, for to make themselves readie to goe with them, which I did, and looking when the Salomons Boate would come, thinking they had beene gone. I gaue them our small Boate to carry them: and for my part faine would I haue sent you a Letter or some other thing, but being at that time so employed, that I had not time to do as I would: Faine would I haue writ more at large, but that time will not permit. So I rest, praying to the Almighty to blesse you to in all your affaires. Yours to command, I pray commend mee to Master Iones. Vse to his power the Chirurgion, Matthew Willes.

Loving and kind Friend, Master Courthop, heartie commendations vnto you and the rest of your good company, with all health & prosperity to you in all Affaires: for to relate of our crosse Voyage and misfortunes, it is no newes. But I hope to see the proudest of them pulled downe one day, although we indure the miserie of it in the mean time: I am glad to heare of your good prosperitie and wel-fare; the which, I much doubted, long since of your wants: but God will provide for his Seruants, although he giues these Horse-turds leaue to domineere awhile, whosoeuer lues will see their Pride abated. I must needs say they doe vse vs well. For I doe not know to compare it neerer then to Ludgate, or Newgate: not an inch libertie nor allowance more, then the worst Prisoner they haue in keeping, which was commanded at the receite of your last Letter to the Generall, in the which case I wish you were able to doe vs any good: but in the mean time I hope God will provide for vs. There is this yeere to come to Bantam the best fleet of ships that euer came out of England, one Martine Friend is Generall. The Horse-turd that tooke vs was at the Cape with them, in all five ships: the Royall Iames a new ship Admirall, the Ball Vice-admirall, the Gift reare-Admirall, with two ships more which went to Surat: wee had the last yeare eleuen ships at Bantam, but the reason of no more coming this way, as I heare was by Master Lucas his coming from the coast, and setting Captaine Ball and Captaine Pepwell together by the eares: because Lucas must haue a ship to goe home: for afore Lucas came Captaine Pepwell was minded to come this way, but time will not permit to write any more, so in haste I take my leaue.

I had a Box of stones of yours which I did imploy for your vse in Rice. Some of them, and the Remaynder I brought backe, but all is lost: for I had some necessaries for you, as linnen and some clothes, but all is gone, and not able to helpe my selfe: you shall receiue a Letter from Captaine Ball, which I got out of the Salomon after she was taken, but it was opened. I pray commend mee to Master Muschampe, Master Hayes, and Master Ford, Thomas Miller.

Yours to my power,

Kellum Throgmorton.

The nineteenth, Master David sent me a Letter from Master Ball, bearing date the sixe and twentieth of Ianuary, expressing his cares and endeouours for furthering the Banda businesse; that it falleth out so late in the yeare before I send vnto you hath beene caused through discord betwixt Captaine P. and my selfe, who of himselfe weake and extreame couetous, and instigated by his proud and insolent Masters, did obstinately insist to crosse our Designes, thinking to bring vs under his command. If this Captaine and his Masters had beene, they had this yeare come for Banda, to haue made further tryall of these Flemmings, that threaten fire and sword; but haue sent only two or three shippes that are worst able to hold out; which if not catched up by the Flemming, will be sufficient. But if taken, the losse will be the lesse vnto vs. I shall not be able to send you Beefe, Porke, or Powder for your reliefe, because I can get none from these new-come ships, how much it doth grieue vs, that wee are able to doe no better, &c.

Disagreeme-of the English, aduantageous to the Dutch: I had the whole Letter, which being long I haue expressed this onely.

The Commander Captaine Derickson vsed the English Prisoners with some kindnesse, and more would, but for Rials strict command: him therefore I did write vnto, with thanks, &c. who also passed on the three and twentieth of August, by the Iland of Neylackey, and strooke his mayne top-sayle; and there was shot in kindnesse betwixt vs on either part some fiewe or sixe Peeces; he going for the Moluccas. The six and twentieth, the Hollanders Frigat fetching water at Salamon, were beset by Lantore men, one killed and diuers hurt, and had beene all taken but for discouery by Salamon men.

The Captaine
his kindnesse,

English dissensions & vanity

The tenth of September, I sent William Newbegin with supply of two Goates twelue Hens, Mackerell, Oranges, and other trifles to the English at Pooloway. The Messenger returned with a Letter from Master Cassarian David, commending the vsage of the Captaine since the departure of the Commander, in what he might be bold without offending orders prescribed vnto him, that the Salomon and Thomas were sent away with goods and victuals, and one and twentie dayes after the Attendance, wherem I was to shape my course directly for Poolaroon: but by reason the Salomon and Thomas both ware their flagges in the mayne-top, and that in fight, in going out of the Road of Bantam, the President thinking it done in pride by the two Ship-masters, as also shaping a forbidden course for water at Pontang: therefore it was decreed that I should first goe to Macassar, there to take the gouernment of the three ships and dispose them after the order of a Fleet. If it had not beene for strining for authoritie betwene Captaine P. and Captaine B. You should haue beene visited last yeare with the Charles and the Vnicorne, and other good ships. But multitude of Commanders maketh a confused gouernment, which is the only cause of ours, and your faring the worse this yeare, &c.

Here followeth also a Letter from the English at Amboyna, to Master David.

Captaine, I heartily commend me vnto you and to our Master and his Mate, and all the rest of the Company, this is to let you vnderstand, that I am in good health, and all the rest of our Company, only Andrew Keele and Thomas Sweet is dead, but all the rest are in good health, but vsed very basely: for we are kept in Irons night and day, and if we haue not a Releasement the sooner, I thinke it will make an end of vs all. I maruell much we could not heare from you by the Frigat, which made me the more forgetfull to write vnto you. No more at this time, but the Lord haue you in his keeping. From Amboyna, this third of October, 1618.

Your Friend to command to his power,
Richard Nash.

Petitions of the English Prisoners to the Dutch Generall cruelly reiected.

I receiued Copies of certaine notes, The first a petition of the English for shift of clothes and to be freed of Irons in the day time; which was in some sort granted. The second, that each man might come before the Generall to speake for his libertie, which would not be granted. The third, that the Dutch Generall might giue vs an old ship, Pinnaffe or Praw to carrie vs to Bantam; or that hee would set a ranfome on the English Prisoners, which he would neither grant nor heare of; but answered, that he would keepe vs Prisoners so long as any English were vpon Poolaroon. The seuenth of Iune we were sent for Pooloway. The fourth humble petition of the Prisoners in Nero Road. The fourth of Iune, 1618. Humbly shewing vnto your good Lordship, that whereas your Lordships poore Petitioners and Prisoners, being altogether doubtfull of any speedie Releasement, and desirous to auoyd the dangers of sicknesse and mortalitie, incident to all men in these vnwholsome Countreies, do therefore beseech your Lordship, that it may stand with your Lordships pleasure to grant vnto your Lordships said Petitioners, license & fauour to go for Holland this yeare in your Lordships ships. And so your Lordships poore Prisoners shall doe our best endeuours to doe your Lordships seruice in our passage, wishing there may be a good end of all these differences; and thus hoping of your Lordships fauourable charitie herein towards vs poore Prisoners; we will pray for the prosperous successe of your Lordships Affaires. The Petition would be granted. The fifth, on the second of Iuly, Humbly sheweth vnto your Lordship, that we poore Prisoners now in this Castle of Pooloway, doe petition vnto your Lordship, that we may be allowed such victuals as may sustaine our bodies without famishment, and that your Lordship will be pleased to spare vs money to buy such things as are needfull for vs: for our clothing at this time is but very bare. Wherefore we beseech your Lordship to take some course for vs before your Lordships departure from hence. Likewise we beseech your Lordship, that we may be suffered to walke abroad at seuerall times, as your Lordship shall be pleased to giue order. And so your Lordships poore Prisoners shall pray for the good successe of your Lordships Affaires. Which would not be granted.

§. III.

Other Acts of the Hollanders in diuers places of the Indies: Encouragements from Sir THOMAS DALE, Master IORDAN and others, and various euents in those parts till his death.

10 He seuen and twentieth of September, I sent Robert Hayes with a white flagge to visit the English Prisoners, and to carrie such refreshment as Poolaroone affoordeth, who being kindly vsed by the Hollanders, returned that night. The eight and twentieth of October, I likewise sent Arthur Atkinson to Pooloway with refreshing. The tenth of Nouember, the Hollanders made an ambushment alhoare at Oretaton, but caught one slaue only whom they cut to pieces. The thirteenth of December, heere arriued a Keydupa Prow laden with Coco Nuts: she brought newes that the Thomas was gone for the Moluccas. The fourteenth of Ianuary, I had prouisions from Lantore; with Abraham that went with Master Mustian for Maccasser, who by the vnskilfulnesse of the Pilot fell with Rosinging an Island fixe leagues to lee-wards to our great troubles, to fetch prouision in small Boats. He brought diuers Letters, one from Master Stanerton, in which is mention of the Hollanders, that through their brutish vsage and rapine, taking of Iunckes of all places, they haue excluded themselves 20 all Iaua, and the Rice Countries, except where they hold by force: for Bantam, Iacatra, and Iapara, I referre you to the Presidents Letter.

Newes of the Thomas.

M. Stanertons Letter.

The two and twentieth of Nouember last, here came three of their great ships brauing, to this place, and first came to an Anchor off Tennacooke Castle, without shewing any Colours. And at night, it being faire Moone light, they came neerer into the Road: and one of them went and road under the Island under point Iantaua. And in the morning, they commanded two Iaua Iunckes of Iacatra, hauing in them some fiftie Quoine of Rice, and by the Iaua Nochoda, sent a Letter ashore to the King, and great men of Maccasser, pretending Debts and required satisfaction for their mens liues murdered two yeares since, which they would balance with so many liues of men of qualitie at Maccasser. The King sent an answer, what I know not, and they writ againe, but hee answered not. They burnt 30 one of the Iaua Iunckes, and on the sixe and twentieth, set sayle as we coniecture for Amboyna. The last yeare I wrote what prouision I laded on the ship Salomon, one hundred and one Quoine, three hundred seuentie seuen g. of Rice: on the Thomas seuentie five q. eightie foure g. On the Attendance sixteene q. five hundred seuentie sixe g. (one hundred ninetie three q. two hundred thirtie seuen g.) eight hundred sixtie five Iarres of Aracke, most upon the Thomas: also sundry other prouisions diuided upon the ships, which with Racke and Rice amounted to three thousand nine hundred and sixteene Mas. What prouision was laded from Bantam and Iacatra, I know not, &c. The last year, happened great mortalitye; there dyed out of the Hope, Captaine Newport that worthy Seaman and Commander, also Henry Rauens Master, and fortie more of that shippes company. Out of the Iames, Captaine 40 Childe, &c.

The goods in the ships which the Dutch took. But for prouision I had added the In-voyce of goods from thence which I had written by M. Ball. Death of many of Captaine Newport. Spaniards and Portugals at Iordan, kill M. Iackson. Iapara spoiled Iacatra abused. Bantam frightened.

He sent to me Master Balls Letter to him (wherein is relation of Master Iacksons losse with Iuncke, goods and slaues, except three which saued themselves by swimming, as by writing from his Father appeareth. For wanting Rice and necessaries he put in: o Iordan to the number of three and twentieth, under colour of bringing prouisions aboard, entred the Iuncke, and killed him and all his company but three which lept ouer-board, and carried the Iuncke away: the rest of the Port remayning ashore are Prisoners to the King to answer for their fellowes. The Flemmings landed at Iapara by night, fired the Towne, and seuen or eight Iunckes in the roade. The people fled to the Mountaines, they haue forcibly built a Fort upon the mayne at Iacatra, and another upon the Islands ouer against the warring place, which makes the Pangram of Bantam, looke about him.

The seuen and twentieth of Ianuary, here arriued a small Pinnasse called the Francis, with 50 aduice from the Fleet and reliefe, Master Robert Iackson, Master.

Sir Thomas Dales Letter, as followeth.

60 Master Courthop, as unknowne I remember my loue, which I will alwayes be readie to expresse, in respect of your worthy service, for the honour of our Countrey, and benefite of our Honourable Employers: and doe desire you to proceed in your good resolution, with the rest of your honest Companie; nothing doubting, but that the Company will recompence your deserts to the full. I haue sent you by this Bearer, only to supply your present wants; the particulars are enclosed in the Presidents Letter: and will, if God spare me life, shew the follow: my stay being only, to reuenge in part the abuses receiued from them, hauing now an oportunitie by a difference betwixt them & the King of Iacatra, to put them from thence, if God giue the blessing, which I intend forthwith to put in execution: If it shall please God to giue good suc-

cesse, I shall leaue all safe behind me, and may proceed with the better resolution: if otherwise, yet I must aduenture forward to affront them there, although I leaue an ill Neighbour behind me. I haue already giuen them a taste of twelue hundred great shot from six of our ships within the space of foure houres, betweene Bantam and Iacatra: which they did so much mislike, that they left vs in the plaine field, and fled before vs to the East-wards thorow the Bay of Iacatra, in sight of their Castle Reall. For other newes I referre you to the Presidents Letter, not doubting but that he hath satisfied you at large. And thus with my best wishes for your health and safetie. I take my leaue untill I come.

Remayning your assured Friend,

THO. DALE.

The PRESIDENTS Letters.

Master Nathaniel Courthop, we heartily salute you with the rest, wee haue thought it good as present to send you this small Pinnaffe, the Little Francis, as an Aduiser with such provisions as she is able to carrie, thereby to comfort you and your Company in the interim, not doubting but as you haue begun, so you will continue with a constant resolution to defend the place: when you are also to incourage the Countrey people of Pooloway, Poolarooone and Lantore, and for the better satisfaction of the Countrey people we haue sent in the Pinnaffe one or two of the Bandanezes; to relate vnto them the iust wars that we haue with the Dutch. For shortly after our arrivall at Bantam, the two and twentieth of Nouember, with five ships, wherein is Admirall for the Sea, Sir Thomas Dale Knight, wee understanding so many iniuries and insolencies done to our Nation, aswell in those parts as in all other places of the India, we tooke one of their ships called the Red Lion, laden with Rice, Pepper, and other Commodities. Whereupon out of their great pride they imprisoned two of our Merchants at Iacatra, and chayned them in their Gate-house, to the view of all the Countrey people. And not content herewith, their house being strong fortified with much Ordnance in it, shot at our Goodoung, and set fire to it and burnt it to the ground: as also they shot into the Iaua quarter into the Kings house, and killed many Iauas, and razed the China quarter to the ground with their Ordnance, and with fire. And the King hath shot some Ordnance against their house or Fort, and hath had many Skirmishes with them, so that of both sides there hath beene slaughter, but most of the Iauas. Now the King of Iacatra seeing himselfe in a strait, sent a Messenger to Bantam, desiring ayde of vs. And calling here a Councell, concluded to send a fleet of eleuen Sayle of ships, wherein goeth Sir Thomas Dale, and Captaine Pring Commanders, not only to surprize their ships, but also to destroy their Fort, if it please God to giue a blessing thereunto. Which being once effected, by Gods grace, we determine to proceed for Banda and the Moluccas, hoping in God that we shall be able to lay some part of their insolent pride. If not altogether this yeare, yet the next we expect a farre greater fleet thereby at once to finish all. And whereas the proud Laurence Reall (the Dutch Generall that was) hath falsly reported that he hath Letters Patents from his Maiestie of England to surprize vs in those parts of Banda, and the Moluccas, we takenotice therof, and will put it in print amongst the rest of their lyes, out of whose mouth there commeth not a true word. We like very well of your former proceedings, and of your large aduise concerning those parts, praying you to continue therein, and with a stedfast resolution, notwithstanding the Hollanders threatening, to defend the place untill we send further ayde. And no doubt, but the Honorable Company will highly reward you and all those that faithfully and truly doe their endeuour in their affaires. Thus leaving further to insert at present, referring all things to our next, in which God willing, we will write you more at large, praying God to prosper your proceedings to his glory, and your hearts desire.

Bantam, the three and twentieth of December, 1618.

Your louing Friends,

John Iordan, Augustine Spaldwin, George Ball.

Post-script of Master Iordan.

THe Iames and the Bantam arrived at Bantam from Iambe, the one and twentieth dicto, by whom we understand of the death of Master Richard Wellly, murdered there by the Dutch, they inviting him to their house, to giue him his soy, he being bound for Bantam in these ships, and there ended his life. The three and twentieth dicto, I set saile in the Iames, Hound and Petty France from Bantam, towards the Fleet, which lay about the Ilands of Iacatra neere the Holland fleet, hoping to haue beene with them before they had begunne any fight. But the very same day in the morning, the Fleets had a very hot incounter for the space of foure houres, our men valiantly fighting, and they no lesse defending our Fleet, having shot about twelve hundred shot to the Hollanders; so that they have had such a breakfast that they will not abide a second, but flye before us, as we suppose, only to draw us to the East-wards from their Fort, supposing that wee shall not bee able to come up this Monson. But wee have not followed them further then the Easter point of Iacatra, whereas wee have lost sight of them, and know not as yet which way they are gone either to the Eastward or to the Westward.

Your loving Friend,

John Iordane.

The second of February, we by councill ordered that the Francis should ride vnder the Fort, to releue such Iunckes as should come thither for reliefe: diuers of which with some Praw or Curracorra they had intercepted, so to starue the Inhabitants. The fift, came a Praw from Pooloway with Letters from the English Prisoners, deploring that lying in misery and irons many of them have lost their liues, who if they had beene at libertie might have beene alive, and have done their King and Countrey good seruice, and praying to supply their wants by that Praw with money and what else could be sent, not knowing whether they might bee suffered hereafter to send or no: which I answered with Certificate of the newes and prouision.

Letter from the Prisoners complayning of many of them dead by misery of imprisonment.

20 The thirteenth of February, there were three ships in Nero Road, one whereof had her beak head shot off, and shot thorow in fortie places. I ghesse it one of the ships which were in the skirmish at Iacatra.

The eighteenth, I receiued a Letter by a Praw from Wayre, from Bartholomew Churchman, wherein with thanks for things sent, he certifieth that the Angell came from Amboyna that night, where they left their Generall to get all their forces together, which will bee fourteene or fiftene ships with the old Generall too, that commeth from Ternate: and shortly they looke for their Fleet from the Maneelos, which is ten ships. And they say they will goe all to Iaua together, and where they had the ouerthrow, there againe they will set upon our ships to reconer their former losse and disgrace in sight of all the Iauas. But I thinke they will be hanged before they meet upon equal tearmes. Three dayes after wee had receiued your Letter, they brought us all to Nero, where they doe allow us now more victuals and libertie, then they did before (God be thanked therefore) and within two or three dayes we are to goe for Amboyna in the Angell &c.

Dutch preparation.

The two and twentieth of Aprill, 1619. I did write to Master Stauerton at Macasser, and also to Master President, certifying that at that time there was neither Holland ship nor Gally in Banda: and had the English ships come as they promised, I verily thinke there would not at the end of this Monson beene left one Hollander, enemie to vs in Banda, by reason, I know, the World was neuer so hard with them: their wants being extreame, both for men and victuals: likely that few of their Souldiers but would haue fled to vs: wee hauing neither stocke nor victuals, but bare encouragement of words, &c.

40 The eight of Iune, the Pinnasse set saile for Seiran, and returned the fourteenth of Iuly, with fiftie thousand Cakes of Sago.

The three and twentieth of August, I sent her thither againe. Shee returned the five and twentieth of Nouember, so full of leakes, that the third of December we haled her on shoare, and found her so rotten that we saued what we could, and set fire on the rest.

The fift of December, there came a Lantore Coracora, which brought newes that foure dayes before they had taken a Holland Praw rowing from Nero to Pooloway, there being foure Holland Prawes in company, bound for Pooloway, who came by Lantore daring the Banda men to come forth: who manned two Prawes, and followed them almost to Pooloway, and tooke one of them, and killed all the men, being twentie Blacks and nine Hollanders. The Lantore men are now in heart: and now I haue gotten the Banda men to repaire the Fort at the Iland, beeing much out of reparations. The foure and twentieth of December, heere arriued a Iuncke from Macasser, which brought vs some prouision, but no newes from the West. That day Master Jackson misse-behauing himselfe to the Captaine was censured.

50 The twelfth of Ianuary, an Holland Coracora which came from Amboyna with Letters to the Captaine of Nero, put off by a gulf, was taken by the Ilanders. The Letters contayned their losing of Bachan to the Spaniards, and their troubles at Amboyna and Luho, but no newes from the West. The thirtieth, I sent ouer Robert Hayes with the Priest of Pooloway to Lantore, to conferre with the Orancais there about the surrender of their Land to the Kings Maiestie of England; to which they all agreed, that the Sabandar of Lantore should be the man to come ouer and agree with me about that businesse. And that whatsoeuer he should agree vpon, the whole 60 Countrey would affirme vnto. Also I sent to them concerning their making Illams of all such Hollanders as came running from Nero, which caused so few to come. They promised it should be no more so: but hereafter, as they should see cause, they would either kill them or send them to mee.

Surrender of Lantore talked of.

Making Moores of Christians.

The eight and twentieth, went by a Holland ship, and neuer touched at Pooloway, nor Nero; only a Boat came aboard her, and whither she went I know not. I ghesed, they brought no reliefe, and therefore would not stay for feare of Mutinies amongst the Souldiers, they being in great want and distresse for victuals. Whiles Master Hayes was ouer at Lantore, the Hollanders brake league with the Solamon men, taking three Prawes of theirs.

Holland Fleet reported thirtie foure Saile.

The thirteenth of February, came in a Iana Iuncke, and a Praw of this Iland, with Sago from Buro. The Ianas could tell vs no certaine newes of our shipping, but they reported that thirtie foure Holland ships were at Bantam, and that fiftene English ships were gone thorow the Straights of Sunda: and thought that no English ship would be here this yeare: which was cold comfort to me, which had neither direction nor stockes. Many Iunckes arriued which could tell no other newes, one a Portugall Frigat, and in her Matthews a Blacke whom I had sent the last Easterly winds to Macassar, which brought Letters from thence, but Iuncke and Letters were cast away. He came in this Frigat which was bound for the Moluccas, but hauing stricken on a Rocke and leake, was perswaded to come to Poolaroon. I tooke vp all his lading, God make mee able to pay him.

The twentieth of March, I receiued a Letter sent from Master Stauerton at Macassar, dated the seuenth of February, wherein is mentioned the report of the Hound and Samson, taken at Patania by the Dutch; the Beare, Rose, Hope, and Dragon at Tecoo; and at Bantam, a ship called the Starre, new come out of England: complayning also of wants there, by neglect at Bantam. The two and twentieth, here arriued a Praw from Macassar, with one Guilliam Gualtier a French-mans goods sent me to sell for him. The losse of the ships aforesaid, I thought good to adde out of a Letter of Master Muschamp, to Master Courthop.

Laus Deo in Iacatra, this ninth of March, 1619.

Worthy and respected friend heartie salutations: my hope was to haue beene my owne Messenger, but there was an unfortunate change, and time spent to little purpose, the manner I referre to future relation, not being desirous to censure my superiours, only to cleare my selfe of the trust you imposed vpon me, which I prosecuted with all my endeuours, and to performe my promise in returning, freed my selfe from the chiefe Merchants place in Bantam. After all hope was past of coming to you I was appointed chiefe for Siam, and went with the President for Patania, where we fell in the hands of our Enemies, and in the defence of our ships and goods, performed what we were able: but the Elements fought against vs; for contrary to the common course, we had neither wind nor tyde to thwart the ship to bring our Ordnance to beare, and they breathed themselves to our great disadvantage, which wee might haue helped ouer-night, if the President had not stood too much vpon points of honour in the sight of the Countrey people, which in his owne person he endeuoured to maintaine, with as much resolution as euer did any Comma:der, and most part of vs seconded, with our best endeuours as long as we were able, untill many of vs were killed and hurt. Then the President souned a parley, and in talking with Henrike Iohnson, receiued his death's wound with a Musket, and they presently surprized our ships, made pillage of all we had, but gaue most part of vs our libertie, by reason of our wounds, where I continued foure monethes in miserable torture with the losse of my right legge, (shot off with a Canon) for want of Medicines to apply to it. Afterwards we came to seeke our Fleet in three Prawes, and left two of them with Master Weldin, and fortie men for the defence of our Factorie at Iambe: the residue being sixe and twentie with my selfe, came for Bantam, thinking to haue found our Fleet, where wee were surprized with their ships and boats, and now remayne Prisoners with them, which is more grienous to me then the rest, by reason of the want of my legge, and vrgeth me to sollicite to goe home in their ships, which will be an unseasonable and discontented passage at this time, but in the case I am in, I doe not much value my life, and haue euery day lesse comfort and courage to remain in these parts for either you or my selfe, howsoeuer I make no question, our honourable Masters will truly vaine your deserts. God send you well home, to receiue the guerdon thereof, and the comfort of your friends, who as I heare are very desirous to see you, and your elder brother wished the Purfers Mate of the Starre to tell you, that you should come home with the first, and that while he had a peny you should not want to receiue it.

The newes since our taking, as followeth.

The Starre come out of England, taken in the Straights of Sunda: the Dragon, Expedition, Rose, and Beare taken at Tecoo, with sixe of their ships, they came vpon them vnprouided, and the Deckes of the Dragon was so pestered with Pepper and other things, that they could not vse one quarter of their Ordnance, so that they were taken without any great resistance: the residue of our Fleet are at the Coast: viz. ten ships, where it is supposed they stay to ioine with seuen ships that are at Surat, and three of the King of Denmarkes ships, which will be of force sufficient to reuenge our iniuries, if God be of our side and that they haue no new force out of Holland: they haue now not aboue fourteen ships before Bantam, and the Pangram continues their mortall Enemy, all the forces they haue (which was thirtie saile at one time) cannot bring him to any composition, but wholly relyeth vpon our Fleet, and his owne strength, which will much aduantage the Companies Trade, if they be of force to make their owne way, and assist him according to expectation.

Excuse

Excuse my vnperfect aduise, for I haue neither time nor place to write as I would, when occasion shall serue, you shall find me alwayes readie to deserue your loue and friendship, remember my loue to Master Hayes, Master Iones, Iohn Elmor, Thomas Dobins and all the rest, with my dearest affection to your selfe: I rest now and euer

Your faithfull friend to his power,

George Muschampe.

10 The eight and twentieth of March, 1620. here arriued a Iuncke from Iortan, laden with Rice. The third of Aprill, three Holland ships sayled into Nero Road.

This yeare I had no Letter nor any aduice from our Commanders at Bantam, nor any supply: and am enforced to take vp all my mens goods, to buy victuals, to pay fiftie per cento, per annum interest. The thirtieth, I sent a Letter to the President and Commanders signifying my wants, and if the Portugall Frigat had not come in, I must haue giuen ouer the place, whom yet I am enforced to send to Bantam for his payment on my Bill. God grant mee good getting out of these Countrie peoples hands: for they haue spent their Gold and estates, begging themselves: and diuers of them losing, some their liues, others their liberties in holding out in expectation of the English forces. Can the Heathens saile to and againe, as also all other Nations, French and Portugals, and only the English feare to aduenture the Companies goods, passing ouer the matter with rub out another yeare? we haue rubbed off the skinne already, and if we rub any longer, shall rub to the bone; I pray looke to it, &c.

The third of May, the long expected Iurotinge arriued with his Iuncke, Master West dyed of the Fluxe.

The twentieth of Iune, I sent Letters to Macasser, with a Letter inclosed to the President and Commanders, aduising to send a ship with prouisions, and of the Lantore men holding out still in expectation, and that except some such course be taken, they should see mee before they should heare any further from me.

30 The three and twentieth of September, Iurotinge set saile for Macasser, whom I sent to fetch Rice: and with him three China men, which ranne from Nero to the Blackes at Lantore, which but for me would haue forced them to turne Slammes.

CHAP. X.

The continuation of the former Iournall by Master ROBERT HAYES, contayning the death of Captaine COURTHOP, succession of ROBERT HAYES, 40 surrender of Lantore to His Maiestie, newes of the peace, and after the peace Lantore and Poolaroone seized by the Dutch, with abominable wrongs to the English.

50 THe eighteenth of October, 1620. Our Captaine Nathaniel Courthop came to me Robert Hayes, and said that he heard say, there were two Prawes gone into Lantore yesterday, which were Key Prawes as hee thought (yet were not) and in regard of former abuses to Iurotinge, hee would goe and reuenge the same. I prayed him to stay till he heard from thence whether it were so or no: But hee refused saying, if they were not of Key, it were but so much labour lost, & now he might go with the Priest. Thus went he ouer that night with his Boy William, wel fitted with Muskets and weapons; promising to returne in fise dayes, and bidding me send for water on the three and twentieth, which I did, but he came not, and sent me word hee would come the sixe and twentieth at night. Hee came accordingly part of the way, the Priest staying at Lantore, because it was a great Feast with the Blackes the next day. There were one and twentie persons in the Boate with sixe Muskets and Fowling Peeces of the Companies, and goods of the Captaine to the value of one hundred and fiftie Rials of eight or vpwards. Comming thwart of Pooloway, about two or three a clocke in the morning, they met with the Hollanders Coracora and one Praw more with some fortie small shot, and comming vp with them fought with them: where 60 the Captaine behaued himselfe couragiously vntill diuers of the Banda men were slaine. And the Captaine also receiuing a shot on the brest fate downe, and with all his Peece being cloyed threw it ouer-boord, and then leapt ouer-boord himselfe in his clothes, the Praw being too hot to stay in. And what became of him I know not: but the Blackes say surely he there funke, by reason of his wounds and his clothes all about him. There came of those one and twentie persons,

This Iurotinge, M. Stauerton in a Letter of his which I haue, calleth an vn-luckie fellow (as heere hee proued) seeing a blacke Saine, being a blacke Deuill.

Captaine Courthop wounded, leapes ouer-boord.

sons, seven ashore, who had not been wounded, and were strong to swimme, the space being some five miles. The same night Riall a Dutchman (formerly turned Moore) ranne away to the Hollanders with a small Prow.

New agreement betwixt the new Captaine and the people.

The seven and twentieth of October, I went to the Fort at Neylackey, and calling the Company together, demanded of them their purpose: and they all promised that as formerly they had been ruled by the Captaine, so now they would be ruled by me Robert Hayes, as knowing before that I was to succeed in case of Mortalitie. I tooke order concerning better watch, having but twentie three men on Neylackey, and two barrells of Powder with that which was in the Gunnes. The one and thirtieth, I sent a small Prow to Lantore, with foure men to certifie Robert Randall of businesse. The same night the Sabander Rato, came with a Corocora and an Orankay, well provided to bring over the Priest and Robert Randall with them. So all the chiefe of the Countrey came to the Fort on Saturday in the Evening the fourth of November, and called all our company, demanded whom they should now (our Captaine being dead) trust to take charge: they all answered, Master Hayes: they further demanded, if they would stand to that which I should promise, because they were not to make agreement with a multitude without a head. They all answered, they would performe all my agreements and promises to the utmost of their power. I then being settled in my businesse, demanded thirtie men each night to come to watch with vs, viz. fifteene at the Iland, and fifteene betwixt the two Forts; for that I feared assault in the night: and it was agreed.

The fift of November, the Sabander Rato came with the Priest to me, to know my determination about foure Peeces of Ordnance, which the Captaine had promised to Lantore, as Master Randall knew & my selfe; and perusing the Presidents Letter to go thorow with them of Lantore, as we had done with them of Poolaroone and Pooloway; I answered, that if the Chiefe would come over and agree with me, I would performe their request. The seventh, Robert Randall went backe with the said Sab. Rato in the Corocora, which Rato said hee would certifie the Sab. of Lantore and the Orankayes of my answer; and that within three dayes I should expect them againe. At present here were seven Key Prowes in the Road, and the seventeenth, I manned our Oranbay with a Murtherer, and seven Muskets, and went with other five Muskets on the Flanker at Feriat, and sent to the Key-men that two of their Chiefe should come and conferre with me about the cloth stolne from Jurotinge: But they all swamme on shore, till the Countrey people tooke up the matter, and gaue mee two Key-men pledges, whom I kept at Ney-larkey.

Key-men chastised.

Lantore surren-
dred to the King.

Dutch Advisor
taken.

The foure and twentieth, came three Corocoras with other Prowes from Lantore, for the Guns promised: and upon their demand of ayde of vs, and agreement to surrender their Land to the Kings Maiestie of England, I gaue them two Sakers and one Demiculuerin. The same day the Key-case was ended. And the same day they of Lantore surrendered the Land to the Kings most excellent Maiestie.

The sixe and twentieth of November, we saw a saile to the West, and all the chiefe of Banda being here put off with thirteene Corocoras, and came up with her, being a Holland Advisor from Iapan and Amboyna, with Letters for Banda. They killed foure and kept three alive, being in all seven Hollanders. The Letters they brought me, but I could not attayne to the full contents by want of the Dutch Language. Only thus I found that the English and Hollander were agreed at home, and I read the thirtieth Article of agreement betwixt vs and them: so that I thought it not unfit to send the Letters to Pooloway. I would have kept the businesse from the Banda men; but then it would have beene worse for vs. I therefore disclosed it to the Priest of Pooloway, so to frame our answer to the whole Countrey, namely, that shippes both English and Dutch were to come thither to end the businesse, and that it were good those Writings should be sent to the Hollanders to redeeme their three men with sixe Blacks. Wee were glad of the agreement, but knew not how to cleere our selues of the Countrey people, in case of peace.

The eight and twentieth, I sent Robert Munday with sixe Banda slaues to Pooloway with a flagge of Truce and that packet of Letters, and to redeeme their men, and to send word whether they would persist in their rigorous courses, or be still till ships came: which if they refused, that they take notice that the Banda men are in hand with a stratageme against them (for they purposed to make use of their Ordnance, and besides, to set on their Frigate, but I would not disclose the particulars.) The nine and twentieth, my Messenger came backe with a Letter written.

To his louing Friend Master Robert Hayes, Factor for the English upon Poolaroone.

VVorthy Sir, your Letters of the eight and twentieth of November, we haue received, also the packet of Letters which were by it, and haue with great ioy and gladnesse understood the friend-friendship and agreement betweene both our Masters: wherewithall is ended warre which was begunne with great bloodshedding, not suting for two Nations which haue beene so good Friends as yours and ours haue beene. We haue further understood with sadnesse the losse of the Campas and the killing of foure men at the taking of her: likewise of three which are the Banda mens Prisoners, for the redeeming of which they will haue sixe men: howsoeuer, I will not leaue them vn-redeemed. The Captaine Nathaniel is killed in the Prow, for which God knoweth I was heartily sorie. We haue buried him so stately and honestly as euer we could fitting for such a man.

The Letter of the Dutch to the English about the peace

M. Courtbop buried by the Dutch.

He proceeds with desire that Master Hayes and an Orankaia should come that they might conferre vpon some truce with the Bandanezes till the ships comming, wherein they should well agree if they would let them haue Mace and Nuts for their money: with promise of securitie, a present, thanks and commendations.

Dated Pooloway, in the Castle of Reuenge this ninth of Decemb. Anno 1620. stilo nouo.

Your louing Friend William van Anthon.

20 The second of December, the Priest was content to take man for man, but freemen; and if they had not, so many hundred Rials of 8. for the third. And I writ so by Ed. Twelues, and aduised them of going betweene Lantore and Guning Apee, and of an action in hand, &c. The third my Messenger returned with a Holland Prow rowed by Spaniards, and two Hollanders, the Minister and an Ancient-bearer which brought Nocoda Ismael, Mirnie, and one hundred Rials of eight. And I suffered no Banda man to come to the Iland but only the Priest, and exchanged the Prisoners. I entertayned the Hollanders in the best manner I could, but would not suffer them as they desired to speake with a Banda Orankaia, suspecting it was for trade. In the Letter of van Anthon, he writes, Touching the truce of which you write, is not only betweene Yours and Our Masters made a truce, but also a good and sure peace. Therefore there is nothing to say betweene you and us. When it please you, you may goe where soeuer you list, &c.

30 The fift day, the Westerne Monson blew with raine, God be thanked, for wee had no water fell to any purpose, since the beginning of Iune last being sixe monethes, so that wee went to Lantore seuen times for water, besides that I hired the Key-men once. The same day came a Praw from Beynawre, and told of twentie Corocoras gone from Seyram to Amboyna against the Hollander, besides many small Prowes. There came ouer the Sabander Rato, and Sab. Lantore with a Coracora and two Oranbaygs for their other Gunne: and told that the Hollanders sued for peace and Trade with the Lantore men and those of Salomon, but were deferred till tenne dayes for answer. I bade them remember their Surrender, and how they had promised in writing to sell no Spice but to the English. Thus the Hollander sought by policie what he could, notwithstanding the newes was publike.

Want of water

Beynawre.

40 The eighteenth, I had word that the Hollanders came to seeke for Trade with the Lantore men, which would not agree except they would restore them one of the Ilands of Nero or Pooloway: whereupon the Hollanders Messenger returned to Nero, and pulled downe their white Flags which had stood some ten dayes, and set red in place, and sent the Frigat to shoot into Lantore. And at night the Lantore men sent three Blackes in a small Praw to Nero, which killed a Hollander in a house without the Castle. And the Sab. Rato sent me word that they would keepe their Spice for the English only.

50 The one and twentieth of December, here arriued at the Lucon a China Iuncke from Macassar, with a little Rice and Racke from the Factor and Letters, but no newes from the West; so that we knew more Newes here then they there. He also protested in his Letter, that hee had that on trust, hauing no meanes left but borrowing, the people censuring and the Portugals laughing hereat. Dated the nine and twentieth of Nouember, to Captaine Courtbop.

The nineteenth of Ianuary, I sent ouer the Sewes to fetch Letters from Master Stauerton, in a Portugall Iuncke. I heard then by Master Randalls Letter, that the Hollanders had burned the great China Iuncke with our Flag in her, and tooke our Letters and all the China men Prisoners: but the Lantore men will redeeme them with two Hollanders, they tooke in a small Prow, hauing killed the third. But the Hollanders care not so much to redeeme their men, as to haue Trade with the Blackes. They doe what lyeth in their power to set the Banda men and vs at difference. For any Sailes they see they pursue, vnder the reach of Ordnance: and being pursued by Banda Coracoras, put out a white Flagge to vs: which I thinke basely done. They were intreated by mee to bee still till the Fleetes came but they will not, though themselves goe by the worst. They professe friendship to the English, and skirmish with the Bandanezes, with whom we liue.

Dutch cunning.

The Letters which I receiued from Hoia Murad, was the Copie of a Letter from Master Hayward the Factor at Succadania to Master Stauerton of the place. Dated the seuen and twentieth tieth of October. It was vnder-written by Master Stanerton, with promise of reliefe, his best endeouours, the Copie of the Articles sent from our Commanders at Iacatra, vnder-written by Captaine Furresland President, Master Brokden, Master Spaldin, &c.

The five and twentieth of January, Matthew Richards was centured for misdemeanour, in pulling downe the Orders set vp in our place of Common Prayer and vnciuill speeches, by consent of Councell.

Hollanders pretence to Lantore.

The ninth of February, the Dragons Claw arriued and brought vs Letters and a Cargazon. The eleuenth, came by eleuen Holland ships, and I sent my Prow aboard to heare of our shipping. I receiued a Letter from Master Bates from Amboyna, wherein I was certified of the Hollanders pretence to take Lantore with two thousand Souldiers, besides a thousand more of all Nations; which was strange newes to vs, expecting nothing lesse, in respect that Land was surrendered vnto vs, and we had a Factory there, with men, Ordnance, and goods. I expected directions from Iacatra concerning this affaire, but I had no knowledge concerning it. Three dayes after, in came some three ships more.

Notice giuen to the Dutch Generall, which would giue no answer.

The sixteenth at night, I wrote a Letter to the Dutch Generall, to giue him notice of the surrender of Lantore, and of our men, goods and munition there. The eighteenth, my Messenger returned certifying me that the Dutch Generall read my Letter, but would not answere it, but bid my Messenger be gone. Now the Dutch sent to the Lantore men to yeeld vp their Countrey to them, and to put the English from them; but they would not. Neither would I send for them to come off, for I could not answere it, namely to forsake the Companies goods there, or to leaue the Land so surrendered to the Kings Maiestie. The Lantore men sent ouer to mee, to know what we meant to deceiue them, and not to succour them as we had promised. I sent ouer my Prow with men in her for the defending of the Companies Spice there. But for that the Countrey saw I could not relieue them, denied that we should put out our Flagge, in regard they must defend themselves for all vs. So all the men returned except Robert Randall, and two more English.

Hollanders invade Lantore, and burne the Towne. The English villinously abused by Hollanders.

The first of March, the Hollanders forces went on shoare at a place betwixt Loquee and Mau-de Anginy, and so marched to Lantore, and tooke the Towne and fired it; there being small bloud-shed on either partie. The Inhabitants fled, and Master Randall & the other two English standing by the Companies goods were taken and stript to their skinnies, bound, beaten, throwne ouer the Towne-wall; and carried aboard the Generall, and put in Chaines. They tooke all the Companies spice, goods and monies by accompt of Robert Randall, three and twentie thousand foure hundred pounds English, of Maces, and one hundred and twenty thousand pounds English of Nats, Monies, five hundred Rials, Cloth and others to a small quantitie.

Dutch flights.

The third day the Starre arriued here at Poolaroone: so I went aboard and made Master Welden and Master Bates acquainted with these Occurrents. The fift, they went ouer to the Generall at Nero, to know his pleasure about setting of Factories in Banda: but hee pretended businesse for three or foure dayes, and then we should heare further. At Master Weldens being there, he spake with Master Randall with much adoe, who told of his vsage. But release could not be gotten for our men. Further, the Generall demanded, if we had Poolaroone men in subiection, as he had the Lantore men; otherwise he would come and doe it. His pretence (as I suppose) is to picke a Quarrell with the Poolaroone men to get vs out, and after to settle vs vnder them.

Hollanders arts at Poolaroone.

The Fiscals threats.

The people pleade subiection to his Maiestie.

Sententias loquitur Carnifex.

The sixt of March, the Hart came and anchored at the Lucon, and twentie five Prowes containing some fiftene hundred men, came and lay off: and the Fiscall came aboard the Starre. Now the Countrey people came flocking to know what these Prowes meant, and whether they came in peace or warre. The Fiscall intreated Master Welden to goe ashore with him: but Master Welden said he had businesse aboard, desiring me to goe on shoare. The Fiscall then told the Countrey people they had nothing to say to vs: but as for them, if they did not come and submit themselves presently to the Generall, that they should fare as those of Lantore: & would know how they durst surrender Poolaroone to the English. The Countrey said that they knowing it to bee peace betwixt them and the English; and they themselves subiects to the Kings Maiestie of England, doubted not that the Hollander had any further to say in this matter. The Aduocate replied, that if on the morrow they would not come ouer and surrender their Land to the Generall, that then they would come with their forces, &c. and so hee departed. And the seventh day, the Countrey being afraid that we could not withstand the Hollanders (as indeed then we could not) they went to the Generall and told him they had brought the Land vnto him, but it was not theirs to giue, being formerly giuen the English: therefore let them and the English try for that as we would. The ninth, came the Aduocate with certaine Souldiers and Amboynezes, to command the Blacks to pull downe their wals, and deliuer vp their weapons, which they did: and afterwards bid the Blacks take off our Gunnes from the Land; but the Orankay answered they could not doe it by reason of former agreement. Then the Fiscall would haue mee to take them off, but I would not. The Fiscall said that if the Blacks would not giue them the Land cleare without bushes on it (mening by vs) that then he would come with his forces. So by their policie they set the Blacks against vs to cut our throats as much as lay in their power.

The

The thirteenth, the Fiscall came to see if the Blacks had pulled downe their wals, and was at them to pull off our Gunnes, and left their flagge standing vpon one of the carriages of our Gunnes which were at the Towne, the same time Master Welden went to Nero to the publication. The fourteenth, came in the Exchange, and I related to Captaine Fitzherbert of the Oc-Captaine Fitzherbert.

10 The twentieth, the Fiscall and the Captaine Solar came with twentie Souldiers, and threw downe all our Ordnance of the mayne Iland, being nine Peeces, and broke them, and carried away the Peeces thereof. Also they tooke away a flagge from one of the Forts, and carried away a Coracora of the English for Poolaway. As for the little Iland they medled not with it at all, but as we had it, so we might keepe it. The flagge which they tooke, the Fiscall said was in reuenge that Captaine Fitzherbert had taken away their flagge.
Dutch hostilitie to the English.

The one and twentieth, the Claw arriued from Amboyna. The sixe and twentieth, 1621. the Generall of the Hollanders sent to the Orankies of Poolaroon, commanding them to sell vs no more Spice.
Imperious Dutch.

The second of Aprill, Master Bate went to settle at Poolaway. The Pinnasse was sent on a Voyage to Seyran, to buy slaues and Sago. The eight and twentieth, we heard of a strange Massacre, that the Generall cut in pieces fortie foure Orankies of Lantore for Treason.
Dutch Empires!

20 The second of May, the Generall signed Articles of agreement with the Poolaroon men, which were all one in effect with our Articles formerly signed with them; only, that they must pay Tenthis to the Prince of the Countrey. The fourth, hee sent to take the Orancks of Poolaroon their Oathes to be true to the Prince of Orange. The two and twentieth, I heard of the Clawes misfortune betrayed by Seran men, losing twentie two slaues and halfe their Sago, being glad to get aboard themselves, lost two men and all whatsoeuer on shoare. The cause sprang from Lantore men that ranne thither, saying, that the English and Hollanders were all one and had massacred their Orencaius.
Seran treachery. English suffer for Hollanders faults.

The fift of Iune, I went in the Claw from Poolaroon to Amboyna, where I went ashoare on the ninth.

30 I haue added to this Iournall of Master Hayes (by him kindly communicated to me) a Letter of Master Fitzherbert to him, sorting with these Dutch Affaires.

I haue added Master Fitzherberts Letter here printed out of the originall, because the Dutch in their Answer make him an Approouer of their Designes.

40 MAfter Hayes, these are to require you to discharge these three Dutchmen out of the Companies service, and to dispatch them off the Iland, for so much I haue promised unto the Dutch Generall who is much offended with them, that he saith, he will haue them howsoeuer. It doth grieue mee to turne away the Companies Seruants in this manner, preferring in my minde the time of our infortunate warre before a troubled peace. Other newes I could write, but I referre it to better occasion. From aboard the Royall Exchange in Nero Roade, the eighteenth of March, 1620.

FOr the Readers more full satisfaction in these Affaires of Banda (the originall of the Warres betwixt the English and Hollanders in the Indies) I haue re-printed three Letters before published: as also the Declaration of the Hollanders in answer thereto; and the same refuted by certaine Mariners, together with Depositions touching the Premisses. And lastly, the state of the Quarrels betwixt the Dutch and the Bandanezes, and betwixt ours and them, is more fully cleered by the Authour.

C H A P. XI.

A Letter written to the East India Company in England, from their Factors.

Bout the moneth of December, 1620. the Dutch Generall hauing prepared a force of sixteene ships, declared to our President, that hee intended an exploit for the good of both Companies, without mentioning any particulars of his Designes.

And seeing vs to haue no such forces readie to ioine with him, hee said hee would attempt it alone. And the third of Ianuary, 1620. he did set sayle from Iaquatra with his said forces, and arriued at Banda about the third of February following.

Presently vpon his arriual, he made great preparation against the Iland of Lantore, which Iland was formerly by the Inhabitants thereof deliuered ouer vnto our people for the vse, and vnder the subiection of the Kings Maiestie of England, whereof our Captaine of the Ile of Polaroone had taken possession, and had also settled a Factory there.

* This was M. Hayes, Captain of the English.

When our chiefe Factor * in our said Ile of Polaroone, heard of the purpose of the Dutch Generall against the said Ile of Lantore, he wrote a Letter vnto the said Generall, aduising him that the said Ile of Lantore did belong vnto the King of England, and that therefore hee should not attempt any violence against it, seeing there is an accord made in England betweene vs. Which Letter, the said Generall threw from him in a great rage, scarce vouchsafing to reade it ouer, and caused the Messenger to bee thrust out of doores, requiring him to aduise our Factor of Polaroone, presently to send to Lantore, and fetch away all such of our people and goods as were vpon that Iland; for whomsoever hee should find there, hee would take them as his vtter Enemies, and they should fare no better then the Inhabitants.

And within ten or twelue dayes after he landed all his forces there, and subdued the said Iland. So long as the fight endured, our Factors and Seruants there (being three English and eight Chincses) kept themselues within doores, and afterwards our people came out of their houles, and told them, the house wherein they were, was the English house, and that therefore they should not meddle therewith.

Robert Randall.

Neuertheless they sacked our house, tooke away all our goods, murthered three of our Chincses Seruants, bound the rest (as well English as Chincses) hand and foote, and threatned them to cut their throats, binding them three seuerall times to seuerall stakes, with their weapons readie drawne out, and did put a halter vpon our principall Factors necke, drawing vp his head, and stretching out his necke, readie to put them to death, yet did not execute them, but as they were bound hand and foot (as afore-said) tumbled them downe ouer the Rockes like Dogges, and like to haue broken their neckes, and thus bound, carryed them aboard their shippes, and there kept them Prisoners in Irons, foureteene or sixteene dayes.

* This was M. Welden.

After the conquest of the Iland of Lantore, the Dutch Generall threatned to doe the like vnto Polaroone, wherefore our principall * Factor of Polaroone being there but newly arriued, went vnto the Dutch Generall vnto the Castle of Nero, and told him that hee heard that hee purposed to take Polaroone by force, which he could not beleue, although his owne Messenger sent to Polaroone, to speake with our Factors, had giuen it out also, that the Generall himselfe should say, that if the English did not come presently vnto him, and yeeld the said Fort of Polaroone vnto him, hee would send his forces, and ouer-runne all the Countrey, but hoped hee would enterprize no such thing against that place, considering the Articles of agreement, and knowing how many yeares (to the great losse and charge of the Company) wee held possession and maintayned the place to the vse of his Maiestie of England.

The said Generall made little answer to it, as though there were no such matter intended, whereupon our said Factor tooke his leaue and came away.

But the next day he was followed to Polaroone, with an Armado of twentie fixe Prowes, and one ship, which did put the Inhabitants of Polaroone in such a feare, as they knew not what to doe; whereupon our chiefe Factor there asked the Commander of those forces, what his purpose was with such a Fleet there, and that if he attempted any thing against Polaroone, it was a breach of the Articles it being in our possession. This could not preuaile with him, but said the Land was theirs, and they would haue it by faire meanes or force, and as for our profession, they would not acknowledge it (the Inhabitants and not we being Masters of the place) and so the Dutch Commander went ashore vnto the Inhabitants.

Whereupon the said Inhabitants asked vs if we could and would defend them, but perceiuing we were not able to defend our selues, much lesse to secure them: they were forced to yeeld themselues and the Iland into his hands.

The Dutch tooke downe the English colours, and set vp their owne, and caused the Inhabitants presently to bring in all their weapons, and to throw downe all their wals, and would haue haue forced them to haue taken all our Ordnance out of our Fort, which they at the first refused to doe, alleaging that they had formerly giuen and surrendred the Land to the King of England, and in respect they had liued so long with the English, they would not now offer vs any iniurie or violence.

And when our chiefe Factor went ashore to expostulate the matter with the Dutch Commander, he could obtayne nothing at his hands, but that the Land was theirs, and things must be so, and should be so.

Whereupon our said Factor went againe vnto the Dutch Generall to the Castle of Nero to conferre with him thereabouts, but he would giue no other answer, but that hee had referred those busineses to his said Lieutenant sent thither, with whom he might conferre: who in the absence of our chiefe Factor, had brought some of his Souldiers ashore vpon Poolarone, and forced the Ilanders to throw all our Ordnance ouer the Rocke from the place where they were planted (being nine peeces) whereof foure broke with the fall, and were all carryed away by the Dutch.

Moreover our Captaine of Poolarone who had defended the Iland foure yeeres together, going to Lantore (at the request of the Inhabitants) to receiue the surrendry thereof for our Kings Maiesties vse (as aforesaid) and returning backe againe about the beginning of Nouember, 1620. was slaine by the Dutch. And it is very probable, they did it after the time they had intelligence of the publication of the accord at Bantam, in March 1619. For presently vpon the said publication, they sent secretly to the Ilands in those parts, where they had trade, to preuent vs of our part of the Spices due vnto vs by the accord.

Nathaniel Contrib.

After the said Dutch Generall had subdued the fore mentioned Iland of Lantore, hee constrained them to deliuer vnto him, the principall of all their children for Hostages: Then hee tooke away from them all their small Vessels and Boates, and then he also required all the men of Lantore to be brought vnto him, and they brought him all the principall men, but this did not satisfie him, but he would haue all the Bandanezes, which had ayded them, as also all their wiues and children, small and great to be brought as Prisoners aboard his ships.

Which when the Bandanezes perceiued (doubting that he meant to make them all slaues and to carrie them to some other places) they agreed together to retyre themselves into the highest and strongest places of the Land, and there did fortifie themselves, whereupon the Dutch slue of them and tooke twelue hundred persons Prisoners, most of them being women and children, which they haue since carryed to Iacatra and other places.

50 Loving Brother: I haue receiued your Letters, and according to your desire, haue returned these few Lines in answer thereto. If I haue not so fully satisfied the particulars of your Letters, as I wished and purposed, I pray you impute it not to any want of will, but vnto my disacquaintance with your Dutch Tongue and hand: I should peradventure haue giuen you better satisfaction then now I doe, if you had written to me in the Latine Tongue. But to leaue excuses and come to the matter, the thing you touch in your Letter is but too too true, to wit, that the hatred and dissention among Christians (if it continue, as God defend it should) is, and will bee the cause of much innocent blood-shedding amongst friends, and of estranging the hearts of Heathens, from the worship of the true God. And therefore that enmitie amongst friends may cease, and that such as are yet without, may be allured to submit themselves to the Scepter of Iesus Christ: it standeth vs vpon (who are Preachers of the Gospel of Peace) to be instruments of peace, which for my owne part how willing I am to doe, is not vnkowne to such as know my selfe, and among whom I doe daily conuerse. I haue alwayes both in publike and priuate, by Letters to our Worshipfull Company in England, and by liuely voice to our Commanders here in the Indies, declared how good a thing it is for vs that are Christians professing one Faith, one Christ, one Baptisme, to liue in peace, and to dwell together in vnitie. And of this my earnest desire to be a Peace-maker, Master Brancraft your Master of the Blacke Lion, who remayned after his taking some weekes aboard of the Royall Iames, can giue euident testimonie and witnesse. And now that you haue written to this end, I will 60 stirre up my selfe, and set afresh vpon the worke of reconciliation. It is pelfe indeed and pride that is the Make-bate breeding strife and discord: for, had not the riches of the Moluccas, and the robbing of the Chinees and others by you, vnder the English Colours, fathering thereby your theft vpon vs, cast you into a deepe and deadly Lethargie, you would not as you haue done, haue abused your best friends abroad, that haue shed so much of their dearest blood in defence of you and your countrey at home; but now you are freed from the Spaniards at home, you fall out with your friends abroad. Is this the recompence of our loue and blood shewed vnto you, and shed for you, to keepe you from the supposed thraldome of Spaine? Did Dauid thus reward his three Worthies, who aduentured their liues to satisfie his longing, & to quench his thirst? Did he not say, Lord, be it farre from me that I should doe this: is not this the blood of the men that went in iopardy of their liues? 2.Sam. 23. 17. Doe you thus requite vs, as Lot did Abraham, Who, when as hee with the three hundred and eightene that were borne and brought up in his house, did reconer Lot and his goods, and women out of the hands of the Conquerors, cared not for him but to serue his owne turne, and being deliuered, did in a manner scorne Abrahams company. VVell, though Abraham being the elder and worthier might haue stood vpon his right, yet yeelded of his interest, that he and Lot might liue as brothers, and the rather because both of them at this time sojourned among the Canaanites and Pheresites, who were ready to take notice of their discord, and so to curse their God and holy Religion. Yet what gained Lot by separating company, but a showre of fire and brimstone, which rained vpon Sodome wherein he liued, and would haue consumed both him and his, if God had not bene mercifull vnto him at Abrahams request.

It is not long of the English that we expose our selues to the mockery of Infidels: our Company loue peace, and trade peaceably: they haue put vp for peace sake more wrongs at your hands, then they meane to doe againe. You write and publish to the world, that the Sea is free, and yet by your encroaching vpon it, are not you both the Mothers and Nurses of discord? One of our Commanders, wrote (as I thinke, or at least sent word by one of speciall note amongst your selues) to Coen your Commander concerning a parley before the shooting downe of our Turret at Iacatra: but the first and last newes we heard of him, was it not the beating downe of our house there, and the defaming of our Nation, with Penoran at Bantam and others here?

And thinke you that this is the way to make peace?

The present Captaine of your Fort at Iacatra promised to the Right Worshipfull Sir Thomas Dale our chiefe Commander, vpon the faith of a Christian, that M. Peter Wadden (now your prisoner) should haue free ingresse and egress in and out of your house to parley betweene vs, to returne to our Shippes: and yet is either promise or oath kept? hath he not, and doth he not continue your prisoner to this hower? You remember Iehu his answere to Iehoram, What peace whiles the whoredomes of thy Mother Iezabel, and her witchcrafts are yet in great number? 2.Kings 9.23. No sound league of friendship or reconciliation can be made, or being made can continue, till the wrongs which men haue done one to another, be reponed, and remoued; and satisfaction giuen by word and deed, where it may possibly be performed; else it will be like a wound or sore, that being cured outwardly to the eye, doth bleed and fester inwardly; many hollow reconciliations are daily made amongst men, which afterwards breake out to the hurt of both parties, and scandall of others: As a wound that is ill cured, by an unskilfull or an unconscionable Chirurgion. As for mine owne part, I would to God that if it were possible, I might with all my best skill and cunning be the Chirurgion to cure this wound, that our reconciliation, when euer it shall be made, may not be hollow, but holy and firme: yea I wish from my heart, that my very blood might be the milke to put out this wilde fire which now is kindled, and (if it be not quenched in time) is like to deuoure, not onely the ships and goods (as it hath done some already, and is like to doe more) but the precious liues of many of both Nations, and of those also that are as yet vborne, who (it is like) will curse the time that euer the English and Dutch knew the Indies. All standeth not in one side, there must be a yeelding of both sides, if euer there be a sound peace. But you say, both sides are stout, who shall begin? I answere, what auaieth anger without strength to beare it out? What is fiercenesse of spirit without wisdom of heart? but euen a fooles bolt against him selfe. And to such a one may not the saying of Archidamus to his sonne, being too foole-hardie, be as fitly applyed as a gloue to a mans hand: Sonne, sonne, either put too more strength, or take away some of this courage? You cannot be ignorant that when Herod intended to make warre against the Tyrians and Sydonians, how they came all with one accord, and perswaded Blattus the Kings Chamberlaine that they might liue in peace, or else they should all of them be starued, Act. 12. 20. Take heede you come not to this when it is too late. Are you so well able to liue of your selues in Holland, that you haue no need of your neighbour countrey England? Are you so high aboue the waters, that the fluces of heauen cannot drowne you? Or are the Seas so low beneath your Netherlands, that you feare no deluge? Shebna the Treasurer, was he not as surely seated as your Graue is in Holland? or the greatest amongst you here in the Indies, euen Coen him selfe? and yet was he not tossed up and downe as a foote-ball in a strange countrey? and were not the Chariots of his glory the shame of his Lords house? Esay 22. 18. But I haue runne my selfe a little beyond that I intended, and now to reconer my breath, by these lines I promise, and by word and deed will, God willing, with saile and care labour to bring to passe, that we may liue as friends and neighbours both here and at home. Thus I haue returned you an answere to that you desire, and looke that both of vs should doe our best endeauour for the good of our present Fleets, and of such as hereafter may liue to blesse vs. From our Royall Iames riding neere to Bantam Rode, this 20. of Aprill 1619.

Your louing brother Patricke Copland.

- August the second 1619. our ship and goods were taken by the Flemings in the strait of Sunda neere Bantam, and set ashore at Iacquatra. September the eight 1619. the Flemings dispersed us into their ships, and on the coast of Sumatra the first of October 1619. they tooke foure other English ships, viz. the Dragon, the Beare, the Expedition, and the Rose. And on the second of October they turned us all ashore at Tecoo amongst the Indians, where our Merchants had no trade, but for eight dayes. We were then three hundred seuentie and odde men, all or the most part undone. About fifteene men were killed in fight. They left us the little Rose to shift for our selues.
- 10 The three & twentieth of October, 1619. there came into the Roade out of England three other ships, the Palsgraue, the Elizabeth, and the Merchants hope. From Tecoo we sayled too and fro, and at length came to anchor at an Iland called Amyncan, where we had fresh water and some fish, but is no place of trade, nor is there any man that knoweth of anything that growes upon it. The people are thought to be encaters. After this we returned backe for Tecoo, & neere the same twenty nine of Ianuary 1619. we met with Generall Pring in the Royall Iames, and his whole fleet of ships, in number nine. All the fleet being then twelue goodly ships, were resolved to saile for Bantam: and in sight of two Flemish ships, (which we purposed to take) Captaine Adams in the ship called the Bull, together with one of the Flemish ships, came up with newes of peace. We then sailed for Iacatra, where by the way met vs seuenieen saile of goodly Flemish ships, with whom (had not the peace then come) we must haue fought it out. But peace being then concluded betweene the Flemmings and us, our English Factorie was againe settled at Iacatra; and the ships diuided, some for one place, some for another.
- 20 The fixe and twentieth of Aprill 1620. the Royall Iames, and a ship of some eight hundred Tunnes, called the Vnicorne, set saile for Iapan, the distance neere about a eleuen hundred leagues. The second of Iune 1620. The Vnicorne was cast away on the coast of China, neere a certaine Iland called the Macoio Iland. In the ship were two English women; both which, and all the men were saued: for they ran the ship neere the shore. Most part of all their goods they lost. As we sailed for Iapan at a place called Patanie, we heard of Captaine Iordayne, who being there with two ships, called the Hound, and the Samson, there came into the Rode and fought with them three Flemish ships: Captaine Iordayne was slaine in that fight, and the Flemmings tooke both their shippes. The seuenteenth of December 1620. The great Iames being well trimmed at a place called Firando in Iapan, came away from thence: and the fourteenth of Ianuarie 1620. we arriued safely at Iacatra, where she is now laden for England.
- 30 The ships that since my comming from England, haue beene taken and lost, are the Sunne, cast away neere Bantam; the Starre, taken neere Bantam; the Dragon, the Beare, the Expedition, and the Rose, taken at Tecoo; the Hound and the Samson taken at Patany; the Vnicorne cast away on the coast of China; two or three other ships taken and lost at the Moluccas.
- Men of good command, dead, are, Captaine Parker of Plymmouth, Sir Thomas Dale, Captaine Iordayne killed at Patany, Captaine Bonner killed at Tecoo while we were at Iapan. The Flemmings yeelded up againe the Starre to the English, and she is gone to the Moluccas.

§. I.

A true Relation of that which passed in the Ilands of Banda, in the East Indies, in the yeere of our Lord God 1621. And before printed at Amsterdam 1622.

- 60 At the Ilands of Banda, from the tenth of August 1609. by a speciall treaty and agreement made with the Orankaves, or Magistrates of the foresaid Ilands, were put under the protection of the high and mighty, the States generall of the united Prouinces, on condition to defend them from the Portugall, and other their Enemies, provided that they of the said Ilands, are bound to deliuer vnto the Fort called Nassau, or vnto the Committees of the said Company, all their fruits or spices at a certaine price, and so forth, as by the said treaty of agreement more at large appeareth. These articles of agreement, being for a time by them performed, were afterward broken and violated, as well in keeping backe, and with-holding the said fruits and spices, which they were tyed to deliver to the Netherlands Company; as also enforcing and robbing their Ware-houses, and contrary to solemnne treaty and promise; murdering at sundry times and places, diuers of the principall Officers, Committees, and Seruants of the said Netherlands Company, in taking away diuers small Shippe prouision, their open invading of the places and Countries, withstood also lately under the subiection of the High and Mightie the States generall, and in conquering the inhabitants thereof, whom with a strong hand they forced from being Christians to become Moores againe, or those which withstood or gaine-said them, they sold as Slaues, and in committing all kind of peruerse wickednesse and trechery: during which passages and doings, there was againe certaine contracts on the aforesaid conditions agreed vpon, with the said Bandanefes, as in May, in the yeere 1616. by one of the Netherlands Commanders called Lam, and by their Gouvernour Generall Laurence Reall, in the yeere 1617. which indeed were shortly after broken and violated by the Bandanefes, and that through the animating by the English, who did openly ayde and assist the foresaid Ilands, and maintained them in warrage, the Netherlands Company with victuals, and Munition, great Ordnance, Men and Ships, thereby to with-hold from vs the fruits and spices, which the Bandanefes were tyed to deliver. In this wilfulnesse the Bandanefes continued, till in Iune 1620. Till that at Iacatra was published both amongst the English and the Netherlands Fleet, then riding there in the Road: the treaty concluded and agreed vpon, betweene his most excellent Maestie, the King of great Britaine, and the High and Mighty Lords the States generall, for to reconcile vpon certaine conditions, the English and Netherlands East India Companies.

The which Treaty, and by conference of handling concerning the Moluccaes, Amboyna, and Banda, all disputes and differences betweene the English and the Netherlands Company concerning the same, were to that time abolished, and a generall force of Shippes of Warre was ordained betweene them, for the defence of both Companies in their rights, and the commerce which they had obtained in the Indies.

The Reduction of the wilfull Bandanefes vnto the Netherlands Campe, was hindred a yeere or two, (through the actual proceedings which the English in Banda it selfe, since the yeere 1616. and afterwards in the yeere 1618. about the coast of Iaua, and whole India through) by open hostility did attempt: whereby the aforesaid Bandanefes being encouraged, and made bolder, did withdraw themselves wholly from under the subiection of the Castle of Nassaw, doing vnto vs and ours all wrong and hostility, and with-holding from vs their fruits (to say) Nutmegs & Mace, which they did not onely sell vnto the English, and to the Indians, but also to the Portugals, who are both their and our Enemies, with whom they seeke to make neerer alliance of friendship, as already in the great Iland named Banda, were come fiftie or threescore Portugals, who by some more assistance, considering the naturall force of the said Iland, would haue beene sufficient to haue deprived both the English and the Netherlands Company of the rights therein, and the fruits thereof, without hope hereafter to haue any redresse.

In regard of those inconueniences, after the publication of the contract that was made, the Generall of the Netherland Company, in the common Councell for defence, (consisting of Englishmen, and Netherlanders) propounded the necessity of the taking of Banda, as also the redressing and assuring of those Quarters, and of the trade in Amboyna and Moluccaes, to the which end, both the Companies according to the contract were bound together, to vse all the force and power that he could, for the preservation of the places, as much as concerned the trade, for both the Companies. And it appeareth by the Act made by those of the said Councell for defence, bearing date the first of Iauary 1621. it is noua, that the English Committees there declared, that the necessities of the businesse was well knowne vnto them; as also that they were very willing together with vs, to doe some common exploit: but for that as then, they wanted both power and meanes of men and ships, that they could not for that time furnish any thing towards the same: Whereupon, the Netherlands Gouvernour Generall declared, that with the particular power of the Netherland Company, he would take the same in hand, and effect it in such manner, as God should be pleased to prosper his proceedings.

And to that end, vpon the thirtieth of Iauary, the Gouvernour Generall went from Iacatra to Amboyna, where he arrived vpon the fourteenth of February. and from thence went to Banda, to the Castle of Nassaw, lying in the Iland Nero, vpon the seuen and twentieth of February 1621. In the meane time, one of the English Councell for defence, that had beene at Iacatra vpon the first of Iauary 1621. and was pruy to the contract made, lying then in Amboyna, when the Gouvernour Generall went from thence to Banda; sent Letters in our owne Ships to the Englishmen, lying in the small Iland Polaroon, and made knowne and discovered vnto those of Banda, in what manner the Generall of the Netherland Company, intended to assaile the great Iland of Banda: & when the said Gouvernour Generall was come to the Fort of Nassaw in Banda, he understood that the Englishmen in Polaroon, had added them of the Towne of Lantore in the great Iland of Banda, with foure Peeces of great Ordnance; and that if they had had longer time, that the entrance of the Generall of the Netherlands Army into Lantore Hauen, should haue beene let and withstood by a great battery. As also that some Englishmen, in Lantore, assisted these of Banda, ours, and (according to the contract) their enemies, both with counsell and force, encouraging them with their presence, & notwithstanding that the said Generall required the said Englishmen of Lantore

Lantore to leaue the Towne, for the causes and reasons aforesaid, as also for that they themselves, according to the Contract and Order made by the Counsell of Defence, before that time might not buy any Fruit in Moluccas, Amboina, and Banda, as after the publication of the Contract they may doe, and that onely together, and in common places with the Netherlanders, yet some few of them stayed still with them of Banda our common enemies. Notwithstanding also that the Governour generall protested, that he was not therein to be blamed, if by that meanes any hurt were done unto them, being among and with our common enemies, from whom they should and ought to haue separated themselves.

First, the Governours generall determined to assaile the great Island of Banda on the South side, (by some called Lantore, because the principall Towne is so called) by land in a place called Luchny, and to that end caused the ship called the Hart to anchor thereabouts, which lay not long there but it was shot at by an English Peece of Ordnance, whereby our men were forced to tow the said ship with a Galley from the shoare, and to leaue two Anchors and two Cables behind them, or else it had beene in great danger of sinking or burning, our men assuring vs, that an English Gunner had shot at them, and that they perfectly descried and saw him, although the Englishmen seeme to denie it.

Whereby altering of their first purpose, the Generall of the Netherlanders resolved to land upon the inward part of the Island of Banda, there to encamp themselves, and then to goe up upon the Hills, and there to plant their Ordnance, and to that end upon the eighth of March, 1621. landed with seuentene Companies betweene Comber and Ortatten, they marched along the shoareside, within the reach of three Peeces of great Ordnance lent then by the Englishmen, and not long before planted there, whereby if they had marched forward many of our men had beene slaine, and so wee should haue found no place there to encamp our selues, but the Enemy from the Hills would haue domineered ouer vs, no man knowing what counsell to giue, whereby wee might get up upon the Hills. The way whereon about three yeeres before wee had beene, being all intrenched, whereupon the Generall determined to enter againe into his ship with the whole Armie, to take another course. They of Banda not once pursuing after vs, but with flouting and mocking let vs goe, and so thinking thereby, that they had gotten the upper hand of vs, most part of them brought their wives and children againe into Lantore. After these two enterprizes, partly hindred by the English Ordnance, were in that manner crost. The Generall, for a third resolution, determined to assaile the great Island of Banda on both sides, that is, on the inner side of the Land with sixe Companies, and on the South side with ten Companies. That they on the inner side should land an houre before the others should land, by that meanes to draw the Enemy forth, and so to make place on the other side, while a Companie of chosen men should land on the North side, to climbe up upon the Hills, and others in other places of the Land should also bee in a readinesse, being three hundred and thirtie persons, whereof one hundred and fiftie were Musketiers, appointed for the manning and assuring of thirtie boats, which the said Companie would bring on the South side of the Island.

This was effected upon the eleuenth of March, and accordingly sixe Companies by breake of day, went on land betweene Comber and Ortatten. Captaine Voghel with certaine chosen Souldiers marching forward, who climbing up upon the Hills, found such resistance, that all their powder being spent, they were in great danger to be spoyled, but being well followed and seconded by the rest, the Enemy was forced to retire: and while this skirmish continued, the other ten Companies landing out of the said thirtie boats, went on shoare upon the South side of Banda, in a small Bay, some with Ladders, and others without, climbing up upon the Cliffes; and being gotten up, they marched to the backside of Lantore, without any resistance, but onely those that set upon the first Troopes, being some ten or twentie Musketiers, by whom one of our men was slaine, and foure or siue hurt, whereby Lantore was taken on the South side by the said ten Companies, while the other siue Companies skirmished with those of Banda upon the Hills, and as soone as Lantore was taken, those of Madiangi, Luchny, Ortatten, and Sammer, presently forsooke their Townes in the said Island. When they of Banda saw the aforesaid thirtie boats, they thought wee would haue sayled round about the Land, as wee had done three times before, whereupon making no reckoning of our landing, they were sodainly surprized by breake of day.

As soone as Lantore with the rest of the places aforesaid were won, the rest of them of Banda, namely Slamma, Comber, Owendender, Wayer, and those of the Islands of Rosinging, and Poolaroone, made composition with vs, which we granted upon condition, that they should breake downe their Forts and Walls, and giue vs their Shot, Peeces and Muskets, &c. Which by them being done, all of them together, according to their Contract and promises, yeilded to hold their Countries and Lands, of the Lords the generall States of the united Netherland Prouinces, promising to doe whatsoeuer they should be commanded, and acknowledge the said Lords the generall States for their Soueraignes, notwithstanding their former Oathes taken unto any others.

Those of Lantore and others being first overcome and vanquished, and that saued themselves among others of Banda, also asked pardon and sought for Peace, which was granted unto them upon the condition aforesaid, though they hardly held the same, and secretly sought to begin a new rebellion, and were commanded by the Generall to shew themselves all together upon the Strand, that they might be appointed in some other conuenient place to liue as fellow Citizens freely together, without the losse of their goods which they then had. Whereunto some of them obeyed, but the greatest part fled upon the high Mountaines in the great Island of Banda, to whom also many other Townes resorted, and slew a Netherland Merchant, one other, and a boy, where they were enclosed and hindred from victuals by our men.

By this meanes all the Townes and Places in Banda were won, and made sure, onely Poolarooke, which was not medled withall, because they of Banda therein behaved themselves peaceably, for the ayde, or rather the service of those of Poolarooke. The Englishmen planted nine Peeces of Ordnance upon a small Island in Poolarooke, having intrenched the same: and when those of Poolarooke, according to the composition, were to yeeld up their Armes, and disarm themselves, as they willingly did; yet our Generall did not once speake of those nine Peeces of Ordnance standing in the said small Island, because the Englishmen should have no cause to make any question, that our men had done any thing against their Fort or men.

The English Commander, Humfrey Fitz-Herbert, with his ship called the Exchange, lying before the Castle of Amboina, and having intelligence of the Generall of the Netherlands victorie in Banda, shot off fourteene Peeces of Ordnance for Ioy thereof. 10

This that is formerly declared, is the true state and proceedings of that, which hath beene done now lately, and before in the Island of Banda, wherein nothing hath beene done, but that which (according to the Law of Nations, and the aforesaid Contract, made, and promised to be holden, and without any wrong done to the Liberties of the English Companie, agreed upon with the Companie of the Netherland) might and ought to have beene done.

§. II.

An Answer to the Hollanders Declaration concerning the occurrents of the East India, contracted somewhat briefer then in the former Impression. 20

Here was of late two Currents published, bearing date: the one, the eight of Februarie: the other, the eight and twentieth. In these two Currents sundrie, both incredible and intolerable wrongs and grievances were made knowne, which the Hollanders of the East Indies had inflicted and enforced vpon the English Companie of the East Indies. Since the printing of these two Currents, the Hollanders haue published a Pamphlet, entituled, A declaration of the Affaires of the East Indies. This declaration was published (as by the discourse may appeare) in answer of the two Currents aboue mentioned, for the whole scope of the declaration tendeth to no other end, but to iustifie their owne right in the East Indies, and thereupon to charge the English with wrongs done to them, that thereby the world might be made belecue, that whatsoever extremities or hard measures they offered to the English, they were vrge and prouoked thereunto by the vniust dealing of the English, and the wrongs first offered by them: howsoever the English prouoked the Hollanders in India, the Hollanders by this Declaration, doe vrge and prouoke the English to defend themselves against so false and fabulous slanders imposed vpon them. Is it not too much that the Hollanders most vniustly oppressed vs in India, but that they must proceed further to slander vs in England. Maiores sunt fama & fidei damna, quam quae sarciri possunt: The losse of a good name, the losse of trust and credite are losses irrecoverable. But thanks be to Almighty God, who doth alwayes protect the innocent. This Declaration of the Hollanders intended and published for our vtter vndoing and disgrace, offereth vnto vs, in two respects, both hope and helpe, thanks be to Almighty God, who hath conuerted Hamon his Galhouse intended against Mordochus, to his owne confusion, like as he hath suffered you to publish a Declaration to cut your owne throats. What could you deuise to write and publish, more opposite to what you intended; more to disgrace your selues, in conuincing you of fallhood; more to honour, acquit, and cleere the English, then this Declaration? All which shall manifestly appeare in the examination of your Declaration, which followeth.

To begin with the very first lines and page; you affirme, That all the Ilands of Banda, from the tenth of August, 1609. were by a speciall Treatie and agreement made with the Orankayas the Magistrates of the Ilands, put vnder the protection of the States of the Netherlands: how vntrue this is, let all men iudge; when as you confesse in the latter end of the first page, * and in the beginning of the second, were afterward broken and violated; and that the Ilanders with-held their Fruits and Spices, that they enforced and robbed their Ware-houses, murdered at sundrie times and places, diuers of the principall Officers, Committies, and Seruants of the Netherlands companie, taking away their ships and prouision, what could the Hollanders say lesse then to pretend an agreement? and what or how could alledge and proue more directly to conuince themselves of vntruth then so plainly and largely confesse the recited hostilities, practised by the Bandanese against them: what an agreement could this be, where there was so great an auersion of the Ilanders minds, declared by the hostile deeds which they practised against the Hollanders; they might perhaps say there was a Treatie, but such hostile practices manifestly proue there could be no Agreement. 50

The Hollanders proceed further, from the yeere 1609. to the yeere 1616. where they speake of

of another Agreement concluded in May, by one of the Netherlanders Commanders called Lam. And another Agreement made by their Gouernour generall called Reall, in the yeere 1617. which they confesse were both shortly after broken by the Bandanefes: but how? Heere cometh in the maine matter; The Bandanefes rebelled through the animating of the English, who did openly ayde and assist them with Victuals, Munition, great Ordnance, Men, and Ships. It were necessarie that the Hollanders should set down the causes which moued the English to ioyne so farre with the Bandanefes, for the causes doe either lessen or aggravate the charge imposed vpon the English: they must either say, the English ayded the Bandanefes directly against the Hollanders without further respect, which they cannot proue; or they must alledge, which themselves in their Declaration doe proue, that the English did endeauor to defend them with whom they had free trade and trafficke; who louingly and with free consent sold to the English their Spices, &c. who put themselves vnder the protection of the English; who yeelded the Ilands of Poolaway, Poolaroon, and Lantore, vnder the obeysance of the King of England: which if they would they cannot denie, for they confesse that the English had mounted Ordnance vpon all these Ilands: why should the English plant their Ordnance vpon these Ilands, but to defend their Right; how could the English plant their Ordnance vpon the Ilands, but with free consent of the Bandanefes; at what time did the English plant their Ordnance in these Ilands of Banda? The Hollanders confesse, before they came to the Ilands; for they found them in the Ilands: now, where is the wrong that the English haue done the Hollanders? and in what? because the English did hinder the agreements so often made betwixt the Hollanders and the Bandanefes, why for eleuen yeeres the Hollanders confesse there was neuer any, as in the third page they say: In this wilfulnesse did the Bandanefes continue till in Iune, 1620. Thus hitherto it is plainly acknowledged, the Hollanders neuer had any landing, any Castle or Fort, any trading in the Ilands of Banda, but what was gotten by force and absolute constraint: If the Hollanders could proue so much for themselves, as they doe for the English; the English then might haue blushed for shame. In all this time that the Hollanders maintayned hostilitie with the Bandanefes, there is no mention made, that the Bandanefes euer offered any opposition against the English, or once denied them their Spices, but that they had trade and trafficke with them freely and friendly: now, if consent and prescription of time be the best claime the Hollanders would haue for the Ilands of Banda, why the Englishmen goe farre beyond them; the Bandanefes did neuer violate any agreement made with the English; they neuer kept any pretended agreement made with the Hollanders; the Englishmen in eleuen yeeres were neuer expelled; the Hollanders in all that time were neuer entertayned, but in all hostile manner; the Englishmen had offer at all times of Nutmegs and Mace; so had the Hollanders neuer at any time, but what they got by violence and compulsion; all which is acknowledged in the third page, and the beginning of the fourth. We passe ouer many acknowledgements and confessions of the Hollanders, because they all tend but to two ends; to iustifie themselves, and condemne the English; and because there is sufficient obseruation giuen, that in iustifying themselves, they disgrace themselves; and in practising to disgrace the English, they doe them great honour. But to deale plainly and truly, not to abuse the world with vntruths, nor to wrong the Hollanders without cause, we doe confesse; The Bandanefes made one famous agreement with the Hollanders, which we well remember, euen in that yeere in which they report they had made agreement with the Bandanefes. In Iune, 1609. after they had by force taken from them a Towne called Neara, and making them flee to the backside or the Coast, to a place which they called Nassaw: Van Hooft the Generall made shew of loue and friendship with the Bandanefes; which they perceiuing, and desirous to reuenge the wrongs and cruelties offered vnto them by the Hollanders, did dissemble their intents, entertayning Van Hooft with vaine hopes, promising him to come to some agreement; by which meanes they drew Van Hooft with threelcore or more of his Commanders and Souldiours, vnto a place in which the Bandanefes had aduantage. Now instead of agreement, in warlike manner they set vpon Van Hooft, and slew him and almost his Companie. This is the best agreement that wee euer knew or heard the Bandanefes euer made with the Hollanders, during eleuen or twelue yeeres. Presently after this, in Iuly after, Captaine Bitter who among all the Commanders escaped, when Van Hooft was slaine, attempted to surprize another Towne called Slamma; he was fought withall by the Bandanefes, and wounded in the thigh, of which wound he shortly died.

Where is now any wrong which the English hath done the Hollanders, except it bee a wrong to maintaine them, who with free and generall consent put themselves vnder the protection of the King of England? or a wrong to defend them, who willingly trafficke and trade with the English; or a wrong to maintaine that right which the Hollanders acknowledge the English had in the Iland of Banda: These bee all the wrongs which the Hollanders doe or can charge the English withall.

But now on the other side, what extreme wrongs doe the English charge vpon the Hollanders? In two Currents printed the eight of Februarie, and the twentieth eight, 1622. the Hollanders are charged with most barbarous and inhumane wrongs done to the English, all which they they passe ouer in their Declaration without any answer at all, whereby in silence they cannot but pleade guiltie : to confesse them they are ashamed, and to denie them they cannot, but in their accustomed pollicie they seeke to auoyd them by way of insinuation, that the English deserued them in ayding and assisting the Bandanefes against them.

There were two Orators of Athens very great and inward friends, before the Iudges ; the one did accule, the other defend a Magistrate of Athens, whereupon the one Orator did challenge the other that he had dealt very vnkindly with him to defend his mortall enemy ; and thou as vnkindly with me, quoth the other, to accule my dearest friend.

This is iust the like challenge betwixt the Hollanders and the English : Why doe you say the Hollanders defend our greatest enemies ? And why doe you say the English oppose against our dearest friends ? Yet in this challenge there is a difference : for the English haue more cause to defend their friends, then the Hollanders haue cause to oppose against their enemies ; Englishmen haue a right by consent, Hollanders haue nothing but by constraint. Iust defence is more honest and honourable then vniust opposition is, either by Lawes of God or man warrantable.

To proceed on with the cruell and inhumane wrongs, done by the Hollanders to the English, by so much more barbarous and inhumane, by how much the English of all Nations in the world, did least deserue it. What, deserue any hard measures from the Hollanders ? To what Nation vnder the Coape of Heauen, are they so much bound as to the English ? Who hath fostered and nursed them vp to this greatnesse, but the English ? What Nation hath shed so much blood, lost the liues of so many gallant Captaines, Commanders, and Souldiers, to ayde and defend them as the English ?

What Nation hath lent them, and spent vpon them so much money and treasure, as the English haue done, when they were in their extremest weaknesse and pouertie ? When, and where did the English euer fayle them ? If for these causes, the English haue deserued at the Hollanders hands, to haue their ships taken, and made prize, their goods confiscate, and conuerted to their owne vses ; their Captaines, Souldiers, Factors, and Mariners, taken prisoners, held in miserable seruitude, clogged with yrons, kept in stockes, bound hand and foot, tied to stakes, haling and pulling them with ropes about their neckes, spurning them like dogs, throwing them headlong downe rockes and cliffs, killing, murthering, staruing, and pining them to death, enforcing them to carrie lime and stone for their buildings. Landing them amongst the Pagan people, without all prouision whatsoever, exposing them to the mercie of Miscreants, of whom notwithstanding they found better vsage then of the Hollanders. When as the Hollanders robbed and spoyled other Nations vnder the English Colours, pretending (to disgrace the English) that they were Englishmen, counterfeiting the Coyne of other Nations, charging the English with the same. Laying the English whom they held as prisoners aboue hatches, where the Sunne scorched them in the day, and where their ordures and pisse fell vpon them in the night ; till they grew more lothsome and filthie then Lepers, barring the English, as much as in them lay, from all commerce and trade in the Indies. As all these particulars are directly to be proued by men yet liuing, who either indured, or their eyes saw what is here reported, and will be ready vpon all occasions, either with their liues or oathes to iustifie for truth, what they haue indured, and what they haue seene with their eyes.

Let all the world iudge, whether Englishmen haue deserued these vsages at the Hollanders hands : Whereas some people either affected to the Hollanders, or thinking it too strange and monstrous, that Christians should domineere ouer Christians with such inhumane and barbarous cruelty, rather tyrannie, except the English had prouoked them heauily thereunto.

Let all such who harbour any such conceits, read and consider what is before answered to such obiections : the Hollanders in their Declaration being charged in the two first Currents, with many of these extreme wrongs inflicted vpon the English, they make no deniall of them : make a challenge that the English did ayde and assist the Bandanefes against them ; it hath formerly bene alleaged, and sufficiently proued, by their owne confession, that the English did not maintaine the Hollanders, by way of opposing the Hollanders ; but they did as much as in them lay, to defend the right of the King of England, they did defend that right which they had by consent ; they did defend that People, who did so freely and friendly trade and trafficke with them ; other causes then their so honest, so iust, agreeing with the Lawes of God, of Nature, and Nations, they neither doe nor can alledge any.

Some other inconsiderate people, who enuie the prosperitie of the East Indian Merchants will further say, to close with the Hollanders, that these extremities were offered in India onely, and no where else to the English ; for prooffe of the contrarie, wee of the East Indian Companie doe challenge all the Merchants which trauaile or trafficke East, West, North, or South, to deliuer their knowledge, what indignities they haue indured from the Hollanders, in Turkey, in the Straights, in Musconie, in Groynland, at New-found-land, and where not ; so that not onely the East Indian Companie hath onely cause to complaine : yea, they wrong Englishmen in their owne Seas at home, as is generally knowne. Now, because Hollanders may say, that they are charged with generalities without particular instances ; generall speeches being a common cause to aggravate causes, and be auoyded except the Generall bee proued by particulars, because they shall find that we cannot want of particulars out of infinite, there shall bee here following deliuered, some by men yet liuing, who haue both seene them, and endured them.

Relations and Depositions touching the Hollanders brutish and cruell vsage of the English.

IN the Roade of Patany in the East Indies, the seuenteenth of Iuly, 1619. the two ships called the Samson and the Hound, riding there at Anchor, three ships of the Netherlands set vpon them with might and mayne, after five houres fight, eleuen of the men in the Samson were slaine out-right, and five and thirtie men of the same ship were wounded, maymed and dismembred, at this time Captaine Iordan was Captaine of the Samson, and did hang vp a flagge of Truce, and withall sent Thomas Hackwell, Master of the Samson to the Netherlanders to parlee about a peace.

The Examination of Thomas Hackwell, the five and twentieth of Ianuary, 1621.

Thomas Hackwell being sworne and examined vpon certaine Articles ministred on the behalfe of the Right Worshipfull, the English Company of Merchants, trading to the East India aforesaid, saith and deposeth thereto, as followeth.

TO the first of the said Articles he saith, & deposeth by charge of his oath, that in the road of Patany in the East India, vpon the seuenteenth day of Iuly, 1619. last past, the Samson, whereof this Examinant was Master, and the Hound belonging to the English Company, were forcibly assaulted by three ships of the Hollanders (viz.) The Angell, the Morning Starre, and the Burgarboate, whereof Hendricke Iohnson was Commander, and after five Glasses fight two houres and a halfe, eleuen of the said ship the Samson, her men beeing slaine out-right, five dismembred, and about thirtie otherwise wounded, Captaine Iordane being then in the said ship, the Samson, and Commander of her, caused a flagge of truce to be hung out; and sent this Examinant in the Samsons Boate aboard the Flemmings, to treat with them for a peace, and at the hanging out of the said flagge of truce, and when this Examinant left the said Captaine Iordane to goe aboard the Flemmings, he was well; but aboue halfe an houre after the said flagge of truce was so hung out, and this Examinant was in parlee with the Flemmings about the said peace, Captaine Iordane not expecting any violence from the Flemmings during the said parlee, shewed himselfe aboard the Samson before the maine Mast vpon the gratings, where the Flemmings espying him, most treacherously and cruelly shot at him with a Musket, and shot him into the bodie neere the heart, of which wound hee dyed within halfe an houre after. And this he saith by charge of his Oath.

To the second he saith, That after the said ships, the Samson and the Hound were surprised by the Hollanders in the said fight at Patany, as aforesaid, the greatest part of their men, by the command of the Dutch, were brought aboard the Angell their Admirall: and there notwithstanding, diuers of them in the said fight were much burnt with Gun-powder, and wounded with splinters, and thereby suffered miserable torment, yet they the said Dutch most vnchristianly and inhumanely caused and forced them to put their legges downe through the gratings, and so seized them, and tyed them to the Capsten Barres, insomuch that still as any man had occasion to goe and ease himselfe, his legges were so swelled by reason of the extraordinary hard tying of them, that the Carpenter was alwayes fetched to make bigger the holes, at which they were put downe to get out their legges againe. And this hee saith by charge of his Oath is most true.

To the third he saith, That he knoweth that the Dutch at Iacatra, doe cause all China men, residing and bartering there, to pay monethly fixe shillings vpon a head. or else you shall not sell any commoditie there to the English, and this he hath seene diuers of China men pay at Iacatra.

To the fourth he saith, That vpon the third day of March last was twelue moneth, aboard the new Zealand then riding in Bantam Roade, this Examinant, with three or foure others, did heare one Clase Derickson, then vpper steersman of the Dutch ship called the Southern-Indraught say, that the States in Holland had beene plotting that Warre betweene the English and the Dutch in the Indie seuen yeares before.

The Deposition of Bartholomew Churchman.

I doe affirme, that they haue many times termed vs slaues to the King of Holland, and that we should all be sent to the Moluccas to rowe in their Gallies, and so bee kept bond-slaues vnder them during our liues.

More I affirme, that they haue kept twelue of vs in a Dungeon at Pooloway; and foure and twentie at Amboyna, by the command of Laurence Riall then Generall, but now returned into Holland, where they pist and ( ) vpon our heads, and in this manner we lay, vntill such time as we were broken out from top to toe like Leapers, hauing nothing to eat but durtie Rice, and stinking raine-water, insomuch as if it had not beene for a Dutch woman, named Mistris Cane, and some poore Blacks that brought vs a little fruit, we had all starued in that place, as many of our Company did, besides the extremitie which they vsed to many others which they had in Prison at other Ilands wher they perished, leauing their Wiues and Children heere in England readie to starue for want of maintenance.

The names of the ten men which lay in Pooloway, are these:

Bartholomew Churchman. Jacob Lane. Kellam Throgmorton. Matthew Willis. William Burris. Cassarian David. George Iackson. George Pettice. Walter Stacy. Richard Phillips.

At Amboyna, Richard Swanley, William Brookes, and twelue more, whose names I well know not, nor cannot remember, put into a Dungeon, with fortie Indians all in a hole, hauing no place to eate themselves.

The last of October, 1617. John Tucker affirmeth: That the Dutchmen tooke the Dragon, the Expedition, the Beare, and the Rose, and deliuered onely the Rose, and that there being in the Dragon a Present from the King of Achen for the King of England, called by them a Creeze, (that is to say) a Dagger, which they doe detainne to this houre.

This is true, I vnder-written doe affirme, and testifie that it was not done by base Rogues (as they terme it) but some of the principall Commanders.

After the taking of these ships, there were about three hundred and fiftie men set out of the foure ships which were on shoare, exposed vnto the mercie of the Indians, where they found more courtesie then of the Hollanders, otherwise they had all perished.

That all these abuses, and many more which wee haue formerly receiued by them, are true, we will maintayne vpon our oathes, and with our liues against any of their Nation, or others that shall gain-say this truth. Yet notwithstanding all this being (by the goodnesse of Almighty God) returned into our owne Country, we haue no satisfaction for these intollerable iniuries, nor any consideration for two thirds of our wages most barbarously kept from vs.

Articles of abuses done by the Hollanders at the Iland of Moluccas, and other places of the East Indies, as well against our Soueraigne Lord the Kings Maiestie; as also against vs, and other Englishmen, since the yeare of our Lord 1616, not only before the Peace, but also since, vntill the moneth of March 1620. that we came out of the Indies, in the good Ship called the Iames.

The second day of the moneth of February, in the yeare of the Lord, 1616. the Swanne was surprized and taken by the Hollanders, at the Ilands of Banda, and her men kept Prisoners till the eight and twentieth of Aprill following. At which time the Hollanders carryed five and twentie of the English to the Moluccas, where they were very hardly and inhumanely vsed, being fettered and shackled in the day time, and close locked vp a nights. And from the moneth of May, vntill the end of September, they were compelled to carrie stone and lime for the building of Forts there; which if any refused to doe, they were kept in Stockes and Irons till they would worke; and were notwithstanding also very hardly vsed for their victuals, insomuch that the one halfe of them dyed through their hard vsage.

When we were first taken, we were possessed of diuers goods, prouisions and meanes, wherewith to relieue our selues, which they presently tooke from vs, and left vs not so much as wherewith to couer our bodies.

Whereof when we complayned to John Elias, who was Lieutenant to one Garret Derickson in the Trow, hoping that he would haue had some commiseration of our miseries, and long lying in Irons, bad vsage for want of meate, drinke, lodging, and other things: The said Elias and the therest of his Company did thereupon, and many other times say vnto vs, That hee cared not for vs, nor for any of our Countrey men; and that if they should take vs and hang vs vp, wee had our deserts: Yea, they vsed other grosse and base speeches, not fit to be spoken off.

We affirme, that the said John Elias and his Companie said, that they had little need of Englishmen; for they in Holland were able of a sudden to make and furnish twentie foure thousand of flat-bottomed Boates, such as Parma would haue landed vpon the English shoare in eightie eight. And also said, that they had of their owne Nation and Countrey men, at the least fortie thousand strong in England, that presently, vpon the least occasion, would rise in Armes, and bend their forces speedily againt vs in our owne Countrey.

10 We affirme, that Laurence Riall, who was their Generall, caused Grates and Cages to bee made in their ship, and did put vs therein, and carryed vs in them bound in Irons from Port to Port amongst the Indians, and thus in scornfull and deriding manner and sort spake vnto the Indians as followeth: Behold and see, heere is the people of that Nation, whose King you care so much for. But now you may hereby plainly behold how kindly wee vse his Subiects; making them beleue that Englishmen were their Vassals and Slaues.

Besides all this, they kept many of vs fast bound and fettered in Irons, in most loathsome and darke stinking Dungeons, and gaue vs no sustenance, but a little durtie Rice to eate, and a little stinking raine-water to drinke. So that many of our English fainting in their sights, for want of competent sustenance or other lodging at their hands: for want whereof many dyed, who were fetcht out of the Dungeons, and so basely buried, more like Dogges then Christians.

20 About the fift of May, in the yeare of our Lord 1619. we hauing ouer-passed many hungrie dayes, and cold nights Lodging, in cold Irons and darke Dungeons, and thinking it not possibly able for vs to endure those miseries any longer, made meanes that some of vs came to John Peter Socoma, their Generall that now is, and desired his Lordship (which Title hee duly looks for in the East Indies) that he would consider of our extreame wants and miseries, and helpe vs to some better sustenance. And further we desired him, that he would be so much our friend, as to ease vs of our Irons but for the day time: Whereupon the said Generall most wickedly replied with base speeches, and bade vs bee gone, and trouble him no more; for if wee did, hee would cause vs all to be hanged speedily. So that we were forced to returne from whence wee came with heauie hearts, hauing no hope but in the Almighty, to whom wee prayed to turne their hearts, and to release vs of our miseries.

30 Vpon the thirteenth of May, in the yeare of our Lord 1619. the Dutch went ashore at Iapara; and there they wickedly and maliciously burnt downe the Towne and the English House there, and from thence forcibly tooke away the English Flagge, and in great disclaime of our Countrey trayled our Flagge after them in the dirt through the Towne, and towed it aboard their ship at their Boats sterne; but what they did with it afterwards, we know not.

Vpon the eighteenth day of the moneth of Nouember, and in the yeare of our Lord God, 1619. they tooke one Bartholomew Churchman, and clapt him vp in Irons, and set him where he sate in the raine and cold stormes of the night, and in the day time where the hot Sunne shone vpon him, and scorched him, without any shelter at all: and this they did to him, only because hee stricke a base fellow that spake such words against our late Queene Annes Maiestie, as are not fit to be repeated: which words, as also diuers other which they spake against our dread Soueraigne, we dare not relate, as being too odious to be vsed in a subiects mouth touching his Prince: Howbeit, might licence and freedome of speech bee granted vs, to make knowne the base slanderous and detracting speeches of that Nation against our King and Countrey, that wee might not incurre any danger of his Maiesties displeasure by the repeating them, it would sufficiently make knowne the pride and crueltie of that people, who did not then let to say that they made no account of our King, nor any of his subiects.

The seuenteenth day of the moneth of March, and in the yeare of our Lord God euerlasting, 1619. their Gouvernour of the Moluccas gaue order for the release of the English there, and appointed thirtie of them to be carried to Amboynas, from thence to be sent into England or Holland. But the Gouvernour of Amboynas, perceiuing them to bee arriued, hee vtterly refused to discharge them, and forced them to serue in their three ships, that went to the Manelees as men of warre, which if any refused to doe, they were to rowe in their Gallies chained like vnto slaues; in which Voyage to the Manelees, fourteene of our men went in the Saint Michael, which were lost, and neuer since heard on, whose names doe follow: Geroge Trigges, John Edwards, James Welch, John Crocket, William Nichols, Robert Gilbert, Matthew Gilbert, Giles Lipscombe, Arthur Tap, Edward Parker, William Vese, John King, John Ouer, and William Smith Chirurgion.

60 We affirme, that they hauing Arrian Ellis, Edward Reade, and William Powell, three Englishmen Prisoners, in their ship called the Bantam, they chained them in Irons, and layed them in the Beake-head, straitly prohibiting all others to come neere them, to giue them any other food then their allowance, which was so small that meere hunger compelled those three Prisoners to throw the Dice who should cut each others throat; and so they did throw the Dice to that that end, but were disclosed before any of them were slaine, so that they were thereupon sundred, and sent into other ships.

10. They haue taken our men, and without any cause haue stripped and whipped them openly in the Market place; they haue also beaten vp their Drumme, and called the Blackes together to see it done.

11. They will not suffer vs to weare or spread in our English houses, in those parts where they haue any command, any Colours that are our Kings Colours.

The Copie of a Letter sent vnto the Dutch in the East Indies, from their English 10
Captiues at the Iland of Monoboca, the nineteenth day of March, 1618.
and deliuered vnto Captaine William Iohnson Commander of the Angell.

Consideration in things of difficultie is requisite: and therefore much requisite in these our unchristian-like miseries. But because this hath beene but sleightly respected, wee are now resolved to tell you of all your perfidiousnesse. First, Grippe got aduantage to surprize our ships, and made a vow, not to touch life nor goods in any sort. But since the contrarie hath beene so much proued, that Grippe and his confederates are now seene to be forsworne, as shortly after their actions did shew, in taking away euen those things, which with their consent we did saue, and bring aboard your ship called the Trow. 20

At that time we being indunged at Pooloway, (besides all the Pagan-like vsage of that cruell man, Laurence Riall) we were by Van Hoofe kept in such extreme miserie, with stinking water, and Rice halfe full of stones and dirt (scarce able to keepe life and soule together) that had not Derickson van Lam granted the English at Poolaroon free access to Pooloway to bring vs reliefe, wee had beene all ere this time starued for want. But we passed away that time in expectation of better fortunes, which you haue all from time to time promised: yet now againe our miseries are thrice redoubled, for since we came to this place, you haue not onely vsed vs most basely in other things, but also haue taken away from vs euen that poore sustenance, which we bought with our moneys: and this hath beene done by that enuious man the Master, whom your Commanders doe suffer to be their Commander, rather then their Inferiour. If you consider all his actions, the refreshing which we haue bought hath beene but small, that is to say, foure small Hennes and Cockes, and euen them hath the Master taken away, and eaten them in the great Cabbin, which dealing of his, if it be Christian-like, we referre it to your owne discretion: and now at last, for a small cause or nothing at all, to be thus handled, is a ten times worse affliction, then euer was inflicted upon vs, for to chaine vs up like so many Dogs, and to let vs lie in the raine and storms of the night, without any shelter, which is also brought to passe by the Master. For (Commander) we considering your gentlenesse, so that you can dispense with rigour: Therefore that miserie that we indure is not by your meanes, but by the Masters, and theirs that bee of his mind: and this is of a truth, that euen your Hogs after their kind, lye a-nights dryer then we after our kind, being Christians: and our griefe is the more, because your men of the Blacke Lion, being taken by our English, were vsed like men, and we like abiects of the world, to be thus vsed like dogs, being Subiects to the Kings Maestie of England, and in good respect with our Employers. But GOD that is aboue all, knowes all, and in his good time will remedie all. Thus much we haue thought good to certifie vnto you, not in the way of imprecation, for that we see is vaine, but only that you may know, we now neuer looke to come alieue out of your hands: for by all manifest appearance, you seeke to take euen our liues from vs: and this shall be a true argument of our griued hearts, witnessing to all men, how unchristian-like we haue beene and are vsed by you: for in all this we haue not expressed the tenth part of your cruelty; yet we hope, that for this time it shall be a sufficient light vnto you, for that which hath beene from time to time practised by you against the English. Vpon the receipt of this Letter, wee three afore-named were layed in yrons for eightene moneths following, with such barbarous vsage as is not to bee imagined to bee vsed amongst Christians.

Vpon the newes of the taking of our two ships called the Samson and the Hound in Parania Road, Hendricke Ianson the Commander of three ships, viz. the Angell, the Morning Starre, and the Burger-boat, sent a Letter by the vpper Steref-man of the Starre, (who had but one arme) to their Generall Iohn Peter Sacone then at Iacatra, of the taking of our two ships; He, the said Sacone then said, you haue now, Hendricke Ianson, giuen me good satisfaction, in that Captaine Iordayne is dead: and at his returne thither gratified him with foureene hundred Guilders in a chaine of gold, putting it himselfe about his necke, not leauing any one vnrewarded, that had beene at the taking of our two ships, and one hundred Pieces of eight to him that shot him, not.

notwithstanding our Flag of truce was hung out. Wee affirme also that the said Generall John Peter Sacone, vpon the newes brought him by a ship called the Hart, from the Coast of Carmandele, of the death of Sir Thomas Dale, then said; Dale is dead, and Iordaynes blood I haue, if I had George Cockins life to, I were then satisfied.

An Answer to obiections made by the Hollanders, that the English were the cause of the first breach in the East Indies.

10 WHereas the Hollanders affirme that Sir Thomas Dale, and Captaine Iordayne were the prime cause of all the differences betwixt the two Companies. This wee affirme and can prooue, that both Sir Thomas Dale, and Captaine Iordayne were both in England when the Defence and the Swan were taken; and also that very inhumanly they tooke the Defence*, when for reliefe being put from their Anchor at Poolaroon in a storm, they came into one of their Harbours for succour. They tooke the ship, and detayned her men prisoners; likewise in rescue, we following, they tooke a Pinasse of ours called the Speed-well; going to Iacatra, one of our men they flew, and the rest they layed in Irons as prisoners, amongst which one Richard Tayler Carpenter of the said Pinasse, who at that time had the bloody fluxe, who dying in their hands in Irons, they tooke the dead carkasse of the said deceased, and put him into a bush, with his head downward, and his heeles vpward, and said in most barbarous manner, that there was a 20 Stert-man, (that is, a man with a tayle) with his heeles vpward; and there his carkasse rotted in the bush.

I would demand of them where Sir Thomas Dale, and Captaine Iordayne were, when they tooke the Salomon and the Attendance, it is to be proued, they were then comming out of England, hardly cleere of the Coast, when they tooke both these ships, vpon faire terms of Composition; namely, with promise to giue vs our liues, goods, and libertie. They robbed vs of all our goods, and kept vs in lamentable manner in Irons, some of vs three yeers, some more, some leile: in which wofull miserie many of our Companie ended their dayes lamentably; for in trueti, they neuer kept any faith, oath, or promise with vs at all, but most proudly, disdainfully, and cruelly demeaned themselues towards vs.

A pithie Description of the chiefe Islands of Banda and Moluccas, by Captaine HUMPHREY FITZ-HERBERT in a Letter to the Companie.

Right Worshipfull,

40 It remaineth that before I leaue these Easterne parts, I note vnto you some particulars obserued this Voyage in Banda, Amboyna, and the Moluccas: which although I easily belecue are well knowne vnto you alreadie, yet as of the letters of the Alphabet well knowne to all men, many vknowne words be composed; so these noted things, either in respect of the time, the matter, or the manner of the deliuerie, may bring some thing againe to your necessarie remembrance, to your wise fore-knowledge, or to your further consideration. Leauing Iapparra and Maccassar, I will betake my selfe to the barrenest place of the Iles of Banda, that is, to Gonah-pee, at the top yeelding nothing but cinders, fire, and smoake; on the surface below, woods without water or fruit for the sustenance of the life of man: neuertheless being seuered from 50 the Iland Nero but by a very small channell, they together with Lantore on the other side doe make a very faire and spacious Harbour. This Iland is very subiect to Earthquakes, which doe trouble all other the Ilands also, and make the ships in the Road to totter and tremble againe. Since the surprizall of Nero by the Dutch, there being a fearefull Earthquake, the said Hill cast forth such hideous flames, such store of cinders, and huge steames, that it destroyed, burnt, and brake downe all the thicke woods and mightie trees, ouerwhelming them as it were her owne vomiting, so that a greene leafe could not be seene in all that part of the Iland: nor did Nero escape these hellish blasts, which blew these steames and cinders into the Cattle and 60 Countrey neere adioyning, in such abundance, that it inuited all men that saw it to her funeral, burnt vp all the fruit trees, and couered all the Countrey about it, and had like to haue sunke the ships in the road. It is credibly reported by those that saw it, the violence was so great, that it carried stones of three or foure tunnes weight from the one Iland into the other, and into the Road.

The

Nera.

The Castle Nera standeth close on the water-side in the plaine, it is faire, large, and strongly built; but weakly situate, by reason of the rising of the hill to the landward: within lesse then Musket shot it hath a hillocke higher then it by at the least twentie fathome, which doth command it at pleasure. To preuent which mischiefe, the Dutch haue built thereon a small Fort, but in vain, the same being vnder command of another, aswell as the former. The Castle is a matter of great charge, both in respect of it selfe, as also in respect of the Souldiers; and altogether vn-necessarie, but for dwelling houses and Magazines; the other Fort being great enough, and strong enough for the defence of this place. Here is in this Castle about fortie Peeces of Ordnance; in the other, some eight or ten, the most of brasse. The Dutch haue not receiued the fruit of this Iland since their comming thither, being alwayes ouer-mastered by the Blacks, both by sea and land: but the gayning of Lantore hath made all things quiet now. I pray God make it profitable hereafter.

Cast's weakly situate.

Lantore.

Lantore is the greatest and richest Iland of all the Iles of Banda, strong, and almost inaccessible, as it were a Castle: there is scarce a tree on the Iland but beareth fruit. The Bandanefes left it for want of militarie pollicie: but he must haue a pollicicke pate (I beleue) that gayneth it againe. The Towne is situate on the brow of a sharpe hill, the ascent as difficult as by a ladder: while they stood peeuisly to the defence thereof to the Roadwards, the Dutch landed with much adoe on the other side of the Iland, and surpris'd them at vnawares. Right ouer the Towne the Dutch haue built a Fort on the top of the hill to preuent the like inconueniences, as also to keepe the same in better subiection. It is but small, and while I was there, the foundation scarcely finished. If the English had come thither a moneth or fixe weekes before the Dutch made this spitefull expedition, I dare auouch it, they might haue neere laden the best ship your Worships haue in India with Nutmegs and Mace from these Ilands.

Coriat*, sup. l. 4. c. 17. or with some of the long-styled Emperours. Besides these Ilands of Banda here named, are reckoned Resing, P. Maon, P. Capal, *P. Raritie in Nature.

Strange Spring.

Pooloway is the Paradise of all the rest, entermitting pleasure with profit. There is not a tree on that Iland but the Nutmeg, and other delicate Fruits of superfluitie; and withall, full of pleasant walkes, so that the whole Countrey seemes a contriued Orchard with varieties. They haue none but raine-water, which they keepe in Iarres and Cisternes, or fetch it from the abouenamed Ilands, which is their onely defect. The sea shoare is so steepe, that it seemeth, Nature meant to reserue this Iland particularly to her selfe. There is but one place about the whole Iland for a ship to anchor in; and that so dangerous, that he that letteth fall his Anchor seldom seeth the weighing of it againe: besides hee incurreth the imminent dangers of his ship. How this Iland was won by Derrick Lam, or lost by Capitaine Castleton, I cannot well relate. It hath on the Easterne side a faire and strong Castle, a regular Pentagonon well fortified, and furnished with all manner of prouisions and Souldiers, and is held to bee the strongest Castle the Dutch haue in the Indies, and the most pleasant residence.

Poolaroone (in imitation of her sisters the other Ilands) is turned Dutch. There was in her neither pleasure nor profit, yet the ambitious King Coen hath made a conquest of her chastitie. The Ciuill Law denieth a violent rape to be incontinencie, because although the bodie be forced, the minde may yet bee free. Recall her againe, and right this vnciuill outrage by your wife and ciuill censure: although the benefit (which is not to be contemned) bee diuided into shares, yet we hope, your Worships will keepe and enioy to your selues the disposing and distributing alwayes of your owne.

Amboyna sitteth as Queene betweene the Iles of Banda and the Moluccas; shee is beautified with the fruits of seuerall Factories, and dearly beloued of the Dutch: which the better to declare, they say they would giue thirtie millions there were no Cloues but on that Iland onely. Neptune is her darling, and entertayned in her very bosome, it seemeth that the Water and the Earth are agreed together in vnitie: for at the bottome of the Bay, with one hundred Pioners in seuen dayes, of one Iland it may be made two. It is not about a Flights shot from full sea marke on the one side, to full sea marke on the other side: nor is the sandie Plaine raised a fathome about the of the horizon; insomuch they glide their Prawes and Coracories by maine force from one sea to the other. It is plentifully stored with Fruit, Fish, and fresh water: nor is there any great want of Flesh. Their Vines both of Banda, Amboyna, and the Moluccas, are pruned thrice a yeere, and euery pruning hath his vintage. A raritie it seemeth to me, in nature, I saw in the Woods of this Iland a Plant, or Tree, or neither, or whether I shall call it, I know not, in substance much like to the bodie of our Iuie, in forme like a halser of five or six inches, in length five or six fathoms, bare without sprig or sprout, the one end fast in the ground, the other fixed to the limbe of a great Tree, a fathome and better distant from the bodie thereof, and so perpendicular, that it is very disputable whether it growes vp from the ground, or from the limbe of the Tree to the ground: this rope is of firme solid wood without any concauitie, and yet it yeeldeth excellent good, faire and sweet water, and as fresh as from the Fountaine; nor doth it herein admit any distinction or difference, vnlesse it be the more delicate, according to your companies cut more or lesse thereof, distributing euery one the quantitie of two foot or thereabouts, and they shall haue sufficient; for euery piece will runne to the value of a pinte or thereabouts, and that in an instant; a strange refreshing to those that trauaile those high and drie mounmountaines, as my selfe did find by good experience, the Castle of Amboyna is quadrangular, The Castle well moted and fortified with men and munition, and hath in it about Peeces of Ordnance. The Dutch have reduced into order the two rebellious Factories, and the people begin to plant anew, insomuch that they expect within these few yeeres the fruit will be to th at it is at present. Your Worships shall herewith receiue the Draught of this Iland, and the adioyning Factories set out at large after the Dutch fashion, which maketh not mole-hills of Mountaines.

10 Bachan is accounted amongst the Ilands which are more properly called the Moluccas, and is the greatest of them all; it is called great Bachan, there is another neere adioyning called old Bachan. In great Bachan the Dutch haue a Factorie and Castle, which venting some Commodities doth yeeld them Boords, Planks, and Masts for any ship whatsoever; it is the fruitfullest of all the Ilands of all the Moluccas, and the cheapest. The King keepeth neere the Castle without about three hundred persons, the rest being fled to themountains & other Ilands. The Dutch Merchant and others told me for certain, that for want of people the Clones lye on the ground three or foure inches thicke in some places: so as it may be truly said of this place, the Haruest is great and the gatherers few; nor doe I thinke that the Dutch doe desire many. The Castle is but small yet strong enough for this place, and contayneth fourteene Peeces of Iron Ordnance, small and great, &c. This is a very good Harbour.

Great Bachan.

Old Bachan.

The Castle.

20 Machan the next in order, mounteth her tops about the Cloudes in manner of a Cone, and admits no plaines within the circuit of her Confines. It is a very fertile Iland, and yeeldeth to the Dutch the greatest Reuenue of all the rest of the Moluccas Ilands. It hath three Factories with their Forts in Triangle position; the chiefeest is Noffaquia which yeeldeth most Spice, but venteth lesse Merchandize. The second is Taffajobo, which venteth more Merchandize, and receiueh lesse Spice. The third is Tabbalolo, which yeeldeth lesse Spice, and venteth lesse Merchandize. The Road where the ships take in their goods is at Noffaquia; at the other places there is no riding: this Castle also is the strongest; they are all seated high about the water, and the way vnto them is steepe and difficult, and therefore to the Sea-wards very strong, but to the Land-wards are commanded euery way.

Machan.

Noffaquia.

Taffajobo.

Tabbalolo.

30 There is in this Iland a Cloue Tree differing from all other in its fruit; which is called The Kings Cloue, much esteemed by the Countrey people both for the varietie, as also for the goodness; nor is there any other but this in all the Moluccas; they are not to be bought for any money, but are giuen abroad to friends by handfuls and halfe handfuls: what fell to my lot your Worships shall receiue together with an exact draught of all the Dutch Castles in the Moluccas.

Strange Cloue Trees.

Moty makes haste to follow Machan, in forme, height, and fruitfulness; but not in her Reuenues: nor is shee equall to her in greatness. The Dutch hath one onely Factorie vpon this Iland, which is called by the same name, it yeeldeth but little fruit, and venteth lesse Merchandize: here Venus and Voluptuousnesse haue their habitation through idlenesse. Thus much by the report of others, for I was not there to see it my selfe.

Moty.

Oria stollas pte

Tydore.

40 Tydore doth taxe the Dutch for leauing her wholly to the Spaniards, and destroying the Fort called the Marieca. This Iland is great and rich in Spice as any, but because I had not landed here, I referre you to the Draught thereof, and of Ternate, herewith sent to your Worships for further notice.

Ternate.

Ternate, the greatest of these Ilands is the seat of Dissention betweene the Spaniard and the Dutch. The chiefeest place for the Dutch is Malaijo, neere vnto which is Tallooko, and on the Northside of the Iland is Tycoome, which should haue bene destroyed with the rest. Gamolamo, Dangile and Saint Lucie are the Spanish Forts, betweene which is Calamasca seated as a Frontier Fort of the Dutch, which should also haue bene destroyed; the whole both concerning the Iland and those Forts will better appeare by the Draught thereof, herewith sent your Worships inclosed in a Bamboo, &c.

Your Worships to command,

Humfrey Fitz-herbert.

Because the Authour calleth Coen an ambitious King, you may see the occasion of it in the Titles which hee assumeth, and are imposed on him; as I haue seene them written: intituled by himselfe in his Proclamation for censing or imposing of Customes at Iacatra, in this manner, viz.

Iohn Peeterfon Coen Gouvernour Generall ouer all the Lands, Ilands, Townes, Forts, Places, Factories, Ships, Pinnasses, Shallops, and Men, as also of the whole Trade and Commerce in India, on the behalfe of the High and Mightie Lords the States generall, his Princely Excellencie, and others the priuiledged Committees of the vnitied Netherlands East India Company. To all those to whom this present Writing shall come, greeting. We taking into our consideration, after the Conquest of the Kingdome of Iacatra, &c.

The great, strong, and mightie King of Iacatra, and of twelue Castles; Commander of all the Seas vnder the Winds, Iohn Peeterfon Coen.

If I had beene able to haue giuen thee also those Draughts, Reader, thou shouldest haue had them. But such as I haue, giue I vnto thee; namely, this of Hondius, meane and obscure enough, 20

CHAP. XIII.

Three severall Surrenders of certaine of the Banda Ilands made to the Kings Maiestie of England, faithfully translated out of Malahan into English; with a Voyage also annexed of Sir HENRY MIDDLETON.

10 The Contents of the Surrender of the Ilands of Pooloway, and Poolaroone, in Banda, to His MAIESTIE.

His Writing is for the agreement betweene all the Orankayas of Pooloway, and Poolaroone also, and the English in manner as followeth, That whereas in the time that Pooloway was not yet surprized by the Hollanders, the people of Poolo- way and Poolaroone had surrendred the two foresaid Ilands vnto the King of England, and had giuen ground to Richard Hunt Merchant there, withall setting vp the King of England his Flagge vpon the Castle of Pooloway, and shooting three Peeces of Ordnance in token of the Couenant of the men of Pooloway and Poolaroone, betweene the English and them, when they did surrender the two foresaid Ilands to the King 20 of England, and had giuen ground to the English, being done before the surprize of Pooloway, eight dayes: and after that, it was taken by the Hollanders. And whereas at that time there were but two Englishmen vpon Pooloway, of weake defence, who beeing not able to doe the Countrey any good, went away to Poolaroone, together with the men of Pooloway in one small Praw, who had brought away with them Earth and Writings for the establishing of Couenants betwixt them and the men of Poolaroone: Therefore now the two foresaid Ilands are in the hands of the King of England only according to our Surrender. But whereas at this time through the Assaults of the Hollanders, Pooloway is fallen into their hands and Possession, if it shall please his Maiestie to recouer it vnto himselfe againe, hee shall doe therein nought but Iustice, because the Inhabitants thereof haue absolutely surrendred it vnto Him: and if his Maiesties pleasure 30 be to the contrary, let it be as shall seeme best in his Highnesse iudgement. But this is sure that we the men of Pooloway and Poolaroone, haue surrendred the two foresaid Ilands vnto his Maiesties power and cannot goe from, or reuolt our word againe, euen to the last day, and hauing linked our selues with the English in one bond to liue and dye together. Furthermore all the men of Pooloway and Poolaroone doe couenant to send euery yeere to the King of England a branch of Nutmegs, in token of their designs, desiring that this offer of all the Orankayas of Pooloway and Poolaroone, being once offered out of their true loue vnto the King of England, bee not had in oblivion or reiected.

And whereas King James by the grace of God is King of England, Scotland, France and Ire- land, is also now by the mercy of God King of Pooloway and Poolaroone. Moreouer, wee doe all of vs make an agreement that the Commodities in the two foresaid Ilands, namely, Mace and 40 Nutmegs, we cannot nor will sell to any other Nation, but only to the King of England his subiects, according to the true meaning of our Couenants and surrendring of the two foresaid I-lands to his Maistie, with all that is (in) them to be solely at his disposing, which is and shall be the reason that we cannot trade with any others. And whereas all the Orankayas of the two foresaid Ilands haue made this agreement, let it be credited that it was not made in madnesse or loosely as the breathing of the wind, but because it was concluded vpon in their hearts, they cannot reuolt or swerue from the same againe. Moreouer, all we together doe desire of his Maiestie that such thing as are not fitting in our Religion, as vnreuerent vsage of women, mayntayning of Swine in our Countrey, forceable taking away of mens goods, misse-vsing of our 50 men, or any such like that are excepted against in our Lawes, that they be not put in practice, being out of our vse and custome; that they may not proue a blemish vnto our Religion, and that we may receiue no occasion to deale vnkindly with the English. Furthermore, if any Eng- lishman will become of our Religion, wee will accept of him vpon counsell: or if any of our people will become a Christian, he shall bee so likewise vpon like counsell, desiring this promise that such things be not done in such manner as may breed discontent betwixt vs and the English, which we doe very earnestly desire of his Maiestie. Finally, at this time all the Oran- kayas of Pooloway and Poolaroone, doe againe make a Couenant with Nathaniel Courtisop, Captaine of the two ships riding here, Sophon Cozocke, and Thomas Spurway giuing ground and sur-60 rendring the two foresaid Ilands vnto the King of England, being alreadie partly in the hands of Nathaniel Courtisop, Sophon Cozocke and Thomas Spurway, and that not only now, but as being done long since when Captaine Castleton went from Pooloway with foure ships, all the Oran- kayas of the two foresaid Ilands, hauing agreed with Richard Hunt Merchant of Pooloway, with all hauing set the King of England his Flagge vpon the Castle of Pooloway, and shot off two peeces of Ordnance in token of the Couenant betwenne the Orankayes of Pooloway, and Poolaroone, and the English: and as it hath beene done heeretofore, so at this time we doe renew it with Nathaniel Courthop, Sophon Cozocke, and Thomas Spurway.

The Surrender of Rofinging and Wayre to his Maiestie.

THis writing is for the agreement betweene all the Orankayes of the Countrey of Wayre, and of the Iland of Rofinging, and the English Nation in manner as followeth, viz. That whereas, in the time that the Countrey of Banda was in trouble, by reason of their enemies, so that they were no longer able to withstand them, they therefore agreed with Nathaniel Courthop, Sophonie Cozock, and Thomas Spurway; thus much in effect, that is, that they doe surrender the Countrey of Wayre and the Iland of Rofinging, unto the King of England in respect that they are not able any more to stand for themselves against their enemies: that now the sayd Countrey of Wayre, and the Iland of Rofinging is onely in the power of the King of England. And whereas the agreements is once made, we the aforesaid Orankayes cannot in our Consciences dissolve it againe, but that it shall last for euer untill the last day of doome: And that the English shall be as the men of the Countrey of Wayre in all Priuiledges. Furthermore, the men of the aforesaid Countrey of Wayre, and the Iland of Rofinging, doe promise and agree to send unto the King of England, one branch of Nutmegges as a token of there foresaid agreement of all vs the aforesaid Orankayes: on condition that the said token of our agreement be not out of memory nor dissolved, nor we dis-esteemed. And we doe wish that Almighty God would vouchsafe to giue prosperitie to the King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland: and now by the grace and mercy of God, the King of the Countrey of Wayre, and the Iland of Rofinging, and that more, we will stoop to no other King or Potentate, but onely unto his Maiestie: and after him to all his posteritie. Furthermore, as concerning our trade, we doe all truely agree, not to sell any of the Nuts or Mace, which the aforesaid Countreyes, do afford to any other but onely to the King of England his subiects, because we haue wholly unto him surrendered the foresaid two Countreys of Wayre and Rofinging, with all that therein is, or whatsoever it doth, or shall yeeld, it is the King of England his owne; and this shall stand for a reason that we cannot trade with any other Nation. Moreover, we intreat the Kings Maiestie of England in earnest manner, that such things as are not besitting to our Religion, as unmannerly vsage of our women, maintaining of Swine in our Countrey, beating and abusing of our men, or taking away of them perforce against their wils, as if they were their own slaues, or any other such like attempts, that are held unbeseeing in our lawes (we say) that we doe intreat his Highnesse that none of these or such like be put in practise by his subiects, because they are things disallowable in our lawes, and so being committed, will redound to the ouerthrow thereof; and we thereby might be forced to deale unkindly with the English therefore. Moreover, if any of the English hereafter shall haue an affection to be circumcised, and become as one of vs, it shall be done vpon sufficient Counsell betweene the rest of the English and vs, or if any of vs will become a Christian in that cause, the like counsell shall be held, and this shall not be done for any misde-meanour of the partie willing so to turne: because that may breed a discention betweene the English and vs. And whereas this agreement was made in the presence, and by the consent of the King & Sabander, of Wayre, the Sabander of Rofinging, Emmon Hattib, and all the rest of the Orankayes, of the Countreyes of Wayre, and the Ilands of Rofinging: This shall be for a testimony that it is not done in madnesse, or in the manner of the breathing of wind; but that it was also aswell thought in our hearts, as spoken with our mouthes, and therefore we cannot, nor will goe from it againe, but that it shall so stand untill the dissolution of the world; Neither shall there any doubts rise in our hearts of any other, but that we the men of Wayre and Rofinging, are onely the Kings Maiesties of England his subiects: and if any trouble hereafter doe happen in the foresaid Countreys, we will be contented aswell to die, as to line together with the English, because we will be subiect to one King, and this shall stand for a reason, that any being in league with vs, shall also be in league with the English, & percontra, be that is neere the English, shall be neere vs, because we will by no meanes againe, diuorce our selues one from the other. Finally, at the time this agreement was made, all the Orankayes of Pooloway and Poolaroone were witneses thereunto; all the Orankayes of Pooloway and Rofinging haue unto the aforesaid Premisses set their hands.

*Translation of the Surrender of Lantore,

In the yeere of the Prophet Mahomed 1028. in the tenth day of the Moone Maharran being Saturday, the yeere is called Aleph. And in the yeere of of Iesus, 1620. in the Moneth of Nouember the 24. day.

10 This is the writing of the agreement of the Sabandar of Lantore, and the Cap. of Lantore, all the Orankayes within the Countrey of Lantore, with Robert Hayes, after the losse of Captaine Courthop; That we of Lantore do surrender the land of Lantore unto the Kings Maiestie of England with all that is therein: So that all the Nuts and Mace within the Countrey of Lantore, we promise to sell to no other people, other then to the subjects of the Kings Maiestie of England only. Furthermore, we the Orankayes of Lantore, doe promise euery yeere to send to the Kings Maiestie of England a bough of a Nutmeg tree, for the acknowledging of the homage of vs the men of Lantore, to the Kings Maiestie of England. To the intent that this agreement of Surrender betwixt vs be not forgotten, to 20 the end of the world: and to the intent their be no difference or falling out betwixt vs. Furthermore, we doe craue of his Maiestie of England, concerning such things as doe not agree with our Religion, that they may not be done in the Countrey of Bandan, to the end that such things being restrained, there be no offence giuen betweene the Bandanezes and the Englishmen: As to enforce our Women, our Wiues or Daughters, or to strike any of vs, or violently to take any thing from vs, or to let swine loose in our Countrey, or any such like thing as doth not agree with our Religion. These things we onely except (because those things tend to the destroying of our Religion) to the intent there be no falling out betwixt 30 the Bandanezes and the English, unto the end of the world. And whereas it pleaseth God that James is King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland; so now also he is King of the Countrey of Banda: so then the Countrey of Banda is in subiection to no other King then to the Kings Maiestie of England onely in this world, excepting our Religion. For our Religion of Islam doth not agree with the Christian Religion, neither doth the Christian Religion agree with our Religion of Islam; and this is the purport of our agreement. Further, if it shall happen any English to runne to vs, or any Banda man to runne to the English, it may not be tolerated without the consent of the chiefe of the English and vs of Banda; because such things are contrary to our Religion, and tend onely to falling out and 40 brabbles betwixt the Bandamen and the Englishmen. At this time we were together in consultation, all the Orankayes of Lantore, and the Orankayes of Labetacke, and the Orankayes of Nero Pooloway and Poolaroone, and haue put 100 our hands, and this is the intent of this writing.

50 The Voyage of Master Henry Middleton to the Moluccas, (hauing sent Captaine Colthurst in the Ascension to Banda) with letters of the Kings of those parts to his Maiestie.

Hauing taken leaue of the Company, being furnished with all things necessary, we departed from Grauesend the five and twentieth of March, 1604. and about the twentieth of December following, after many various accidents, we arriued (our men being very weake) in Bantam Roade; where after many complementall salutations betweene vs and the Hollanders, with interchange of great Ordnance on both parts, the Generall of the Hollanders dining the 60 last of December aboard our Generall: The day following, our Generall went on shoare with a letter from the Kings Maiestie of England, to the King of Bantam, which with a present sent, was by him receiued with great ceremonie, he being but of thirteene yeeres of age, and gouerned by a Protector. The sixteenth of the said moneth, our Generall came aboard from Bantam to proceed on his voyage for the Moluccas, appointing Master Surfleet to goe home in the *He-

Etor. The seuenth of Ianuary following 1605. we anchored vnder the Shore of Veranula, a people that deadly hate the Portugals, and therefore had sent to the Hollanders for ayde against them, promising to become subiect vnto them, if they expeld the Portugals; in summe, the Hollanders prepared to assault the Castle of Amboyna, and the Portugals to defend it, the one purposing to recouer, the other to hold it; The Hollanders summoning them in the Prince of Orange his name to deliuer it that day by two of the clocke, and the Portugals denying it. Yet in the end after many attempts and defences, it was yeelded to the Hollanders by composition, wherevpon the Gouvernour of the Towne, after the surrender of the Castle, bard vs of all trade by the command of the Hollanders.

The warre continuig betweene the Tarnatans and Tydorians, the first assisted by the Hollanders, the other by the Portugals, shortly after we got vnder the land of Tydore, where we might espie betweene Pulocanally and Tydore, two Gallies of Tarnata making great speed towards vs, weauing vnto vs with a white flagge to strike sayle and to tarry for them. At the same time came seuen Gallies of Tydore, rowing betwixt vs and the shore to assault the Tarnatans, our Generall seeing the danger they were in, lay by the lee to know what the matter was; The foremost of these Gallies or Coracoras, wherein the King of Tarnata with diuers of his Nobles, and three Dutch Merchants were, being full of feare, desired our Generall for Gods sake to saue them from their enemies the Tydorians, from whom they looked for no mercy if he did not help them, & withall, that he would be pleased to rescue their other Coracora that came after, wherein there were diuers Dutchmen who were to expect nothing but death, if he did not releue them.

Whereupon our Generall commanded his Gunner to shoote at the Tydore Gallies, yet they resisted not but boarded them within shot of our Ordnance, and put them all to the sword, but three that saued themselues by swimming, and were taken vp by our men into their boat. Our Generall being determined to goe for Tydore, the Dutch desired him that he would not let the King of Tarnata and them fall into their enemies hands, from whom he had so lately deliuered them, promising mountaines of Cloues and other Commodities at Tarnata and Makau, but performing Mole-hills, (verifying the prouerbe, The danger escaped, the Saint is deceiued.) One thing I may not forget, the King of Tarnata comming aboard the Generall, trembled for feare, which the Generall supposing to be for cold, put a blacke Damaske gowne laid with gold lace, and lined with vnshorne Veluet, on his backe, which at his departure, he had not the manners to restore, but kept it as his owne: But see how this kindnesse was shortly after recompensed by these vnthankfull men. Our Generall arriuing at the Portugals towne in Tydore; the Gouvernour of the Fort sent one Thomas de Torres, and others with a letter, the effect whereof was, that the King of Tarnata and the Hollanders reported, that there was nothing but treason and villany to be expected at our hands, but that he conceiued better of vs, beleeuing their reports to be nothing but malice. To second this, not long after, our Generall arriuing at the Kings towne, sent Master Graue aboard the Dutch Admirall, who found but could entertainement at their hands, affirming that we had assisted the Portugals in the last warres against the King of Tarnata and them, with Ordnance and other Munition, which our Generall proued to the contrary by some Portugals that were taken prisoners by them in that conflict; & then being ashamed of the slander, the Generall affirmed he had it from a Renegado Gussarat, but did not thinke it to be true.

To fill vp full measure, not long after the King of Tarnata seeming to affect our Nation, they threaned him that they would forsake him and ioyne with the deadly enemy the King of Tydore, if he suffered the English either to haue a Factory, or any trade with them, affirming that the English were theeues and robbers, and no other he should find them, and that the King of Holland was stronger by Sea, then all Christendome besides, with many other disgracefull speeches of our Nation, and all other Christian Princes (a iust consideration for all Nations to thinke what this insolent frothy * Nation will doe, if they attaine to the possession of the East Indies) To which insolent speeches our General replied: That what Hollander soeuer he were that so reported, he lyed like a traitor, and that he would make it good against any one that should report; affirming that if the Queenes Maiestie of England had not taken pittie of them, they had bene vtterly ruined by the King of Spaine, and branded for slaues and traitors. The particular wrongs done by them to our Nation, if they were laid open, would fill volumnes, and amaze the world to heare. I will conclude, to shew the esteeme had of our Nation in the East India, with the true Copies of sundry letters seni by their Kings to his Maiestie of Great Brittain, and first of the King of Tarnata.

The King of Tarnata Letter to the King.

Hearing of the good reports of your Maiestie by the comming of the great Captaine Sir Francis Drake, in the time of my father, which was about some thirtie yeeres past: by the which Captaine my predeceſſor did ſend a Ring vnto the Queene of England, as a token of remembrance betweene vs : Fame of Sir Francis Drake. which if the aforeſaid Drake had bin lining, he could haue informed your Maieſtie of the great loue and friendſhip of either ſide : he in the behalfe of the Queene, my Father for him and his ſucceſſors : ſince which time of the departure of the aforeſaid Captaine, we haue dayly expected his returne ; my Father lining many yeeres after, and dayly expecting his returne. And I after the death of my Father, haue lined in the ſame hope, till I was father of eleuen children : In which time, I haue bene informed that the Engliſhmen were men of a bad diſpoſition, and that they came not as peaceable Merchants, but to diſpoſſeſſe vs of our kingdomes ; which by the comming of the bearer hereof, we haue found to the contrary : which we greatly reioyce at. Quis tulerit Gracchos de ſeditione querentes ? And after many yeeres of our expectation of ſome Engliſh forces, by the promiſe of 10 Captaine Drake, here arrived certaine ſhips, which we well hoped had bin Engliſhmen, but finding them contrary, and being out of all hope of ſuccour of the Engliſh Nation, wee were enforced to write to the Prince of Holland, to craue aide and ſuccour againſt our ancient enemies the Portugals ; and according to our requeſt, he hath ſent hither his forces which haue expelled the Portugals out of all the Forts which they held at Amboyna and Tydore. And whereas your Maieſtie hath ſent to me a moſt kind and friendly letter by your ſervant Captaine Henry Middleton ; that doth not a little reioyce vs : and whereas Captaine Henry Middleton was deſirous to leaue a factorie heere, we were very willing thereunto ; which the Captaine of the Hollanders underſtanding, he came to challenge me of a former promiſe, which I had writtent to the Prince of Holland : That if he would ſend me ſuch ſuccours, as ſhould expell the Portugals out of theſe parts, that no other Nation ſhould haue trade there, but only they : ſo that we were enforced

20 againſt our likings, to yeeld vnto the Holland Captaines requeſt for this time, whereof we craue pardon of your Highneſſe : and if any of your Nation come hereafter, they ſhall be welcome. And whereas the chiefe Captaine of the Hollanders doth ſolitic vs not to hold any friendſhip with your Nation, nor to giue eare to your Highneſſe Letters, yet for all their ſuit, if you pleaſe to ſend hither againe, you ſhall be welcome : And in token of our friendſhip which we deſire of your Maieſtie, we haue ſent you a ſmall remembrance, a Bahar of Cloues, our Country being poore, and yeelding no better commodity ; which we pray your Highneſſe to accept in good part.

Tarnata.

30 The King of Tydores Letter to the Kings Maieſtie of England.

THis writing of the King of Tydore to the King of England, is to let your Highneſſe underſtand, that the King of Holland hath ſent hither into theſe parts, a Fleete of ſhips, to ioine with our ancient enemy the King of Tarnata, and they jointly together, haue ouer-run and ſpoiled part of our Countrey, and determined to deſtroy both vs and our ſubiects. Now underſtanding by the bearer hereof, Captaine Henry Middleton, that your Highneſſe is in friendſhip with the King of Spaine, we deſire your Maieſtie that you would take pittie of vs, that we may not be deſtroyed by the King of Holland and Tarnata, to whom we haue offered no wrong : but they by forcible meanes, ſecke to bereaue vs of our Kingdome. And as great Kings vpon the earth are ordained by God, to ſuccour all them that be wrongfully 40 oppreſſed ; So I appeale vnto your Maieſtie for ſuccour againſt my enemies ; not doubting but to finde reliefe at your Maieſties hands : And if your Maieſtie ſend hither, I humbly intreat that it may bee Captaine Henry Middleton or his brother, with whom I am well acquainted. God enlarge your Kingdomes, bleſſe you and all your Counſels.

The King of Bantam to the King of England.

50 A Letter giuen by your friend the King of Bantam, to the King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland : deſiring God to preſerue your health, and to exalt you more and more, and all your Counſell. And whereas your Maieſtie hath ſent a Generall, Henry Middleton, he came to me in health. I did heare that your Maieſtie was come to the Crowne of England, which doth greatly reioyce my heart : now England and Bantam are both as one. I haue alſo receiued a Preſent from your Maieſtie : the which I giue you many thanks for. I doe ſend your Maieſtie two Bezar ſtones, the one weighing ſourteene maſſes, the other three : and ſo God haue you in his keeping.

The Dutch Navigations to the East Indies, out of their owne Journals and other Histories.

Ras much as Banda hath beene almost the bane, and as it were the Troiane Horse to our Indian Ilium, whence an Iliade of miseries and mischiefs haue issued to that Societie; whereby their wonted gaines haue beene suspended (with a Xanthē retro propera) their reputation staynd, their shippes and goods taken and stayed, the persons of many Christians, Brethren in Armes, Arts, and Religion; exposed to the basest of contumelies, and cruellest of deaths, as the premisses declare; and that amongst the Infidels, whom by word and example of life they should haue sought to conuert; whose states also are hereby subuerted, and their faith farther peruerted (Iborow you, the wrong-doers in this case, is my Name blasphemed amongst the Gentiles) I haue thought good to set downe the true case briefly, as out of diuers Witnesses, Christian and Heathen, English and Dutch, I haue gathered it; no whit seeking the dishonour of either Nation (for what Nation hath not some sicke, some rotten members :) but as an Historian ought to deliuer the truth: which haply the industrious out of the formall materials can see to doe without helpe, but the vulgar will need Spectacles. And herein for the more honor of the Dutch Nation, we wil begin with the beginnings of their Indian Nauigations, and by brieft steps descend into these broyles: wherein if the Merchants haue proued Martiall, if some of their Commanders haue beene insolent, if others of the baser Rascalitie with Pot-froth or Sea-froth, transported to blaspheme Kings and higher Powers: & that Dutch-Indian disease hath lately grown Epidemical in those parts, & turned into a general Contagion wherewith their greatest numbers there haue beene infected: yet the head and heart here at home (I doubt not) are sound, and will soone (my hope tels me) purge these malignant humours from those remoter members: will soone? nay! my faith runnes faster, they are euen now a doing it: herein also my charitie checks it, as too thort-breathed, and saith (it is others fault if I lye) they haue already * done it. For who can suppose that they will make others wrong deeds theirs by conniueance or countenance? that their Iustice will not doe that which is iust? that their wisdom doth not reason in season? that their mature forwardnesse hath not done already that to, and for the English there, which came thither and about the World by English helpe; by their examples in Drake and Candish instigated; by their Pilots, notes and instructions, as before appeareth in Melis, Adams, Davis, and others not a little furthered; and by their support at home enabled to looke abroad: so many gallant English spirits exhaled, so much English Treasure exhaust, in defence of that Belgian libertie: wherein the Hollander of all men will not take it to see their vertue imitated by the Bandanezes, who likewise there affected it by seeking English protection, and effected by surrendring themselues in subiection to the English Crowne? And as for their freedome then when they offered it, I am not willing to make a comparatiue quare betwixt the Dutch and them * whether were freer States: whether more obliged, these to the Dutch themselues by any act of former subiection, or to the pretended title of Ternate, (in both which, the Dutch owne Historiographers, as heere will appeare, free them) or the other to. But I will to my Historie, or rather to theirs, both in respect of the subject and authors, and occasioned by the euill of some, will honour the worthier spirits of that Nation, out of their owne Iournals and Relations, deliuering a brieft of their Marine Exploits.

WHen * the King of Spaine had made many yeeres warres vpon the Hollanders with exceeding expence and force, permitting meane whiles the Hollanders ships neuertheless to trade on his Coasts, he was at last counsell'd to bring them to subiection, by hindering their Nauigation and intercepting their ships by arrest. Thus were they prohibited the shoares of Spaine and Portugall, some put into their Gallies, their goods confiscate, and the Hollanders began to thinke of other Trade, and to make tryall of the Indies. And first began those of Amsterdam to set forth eight ships by consent of the States and Prince Maurice: foure of which were to goe the wonted way (by the Cape of Good Hope) to seeke and settle Trade in those parts especially of the Indies, where the Spanish Power was not admitted; The other foure (of which two were of Amsterdam, the other two of Zeland and Enckhusen) attempted by the North to discover a passage to China, Cathay and the Moluccas, as by a farre shorter cut; this way from Holland to Iapan being not aboue one thousand two hundred thirtie fise Dutch miles, whereas by the Portugall way it was two thousand nine hundred thirtie two. Of their Northern Expeditions * elsewhere: the other foure ships by a safer and more frequented way set forth in the same yeare 1595. and laid foundation of that which since is reputed by them a miraculous structure, and taking occasion from being forbidden Spaine, to make themselves way first to the East, and since enterprizing also the West Indies. The ships were the Maurice, the Holland, the Amsterdam, and a Pinnasse, the persons two hundred fortie nine: the Societie called, De Compagnie van verre: the whole charge was two hundred and ninetie thousand Florens, of which one hundred thousand was in readie money and Merchandize. The Maurice and the Holland were of two hundred and eightie lasts, the Amsterdam one hundred and eightie, the Pinnasse twentie. The Captaine of the first Bernard Heijnc; Cape Merchant, Cornelius Houtman; John Miller Master, &c.

The second of Aprill, they set saile from the Tessell. The second of August, they had sight of the Cape of Good Hope. The two and twentieth of September, they set two men on shoare for mutinie. On the five and twentieth, they came to Saint Augustines Bay in the Ile of Saint Laurence. The tenth of February, to Anton Gill.

In May they came to Dampin in Sumatra, in Iune to the Straits of Sunda, where certaine Portugals from Bantam visited them. On the three and twentieth and foure and twentieth, diuers Chinois, Malabars, and men of other Nations came to them, some of which had beene in Constantinople, Venice and Rome, and one of them said, hee had foure monethes past seene their Lad and God (meaning the Pope) whom they answered that they were Christians, and cared not for the Pope. On the sixe and twentieth of Iune, Captaine Heijnc dyed of the Flix. On the nine and twentieth, the Pangram or Vice King came aboard the Mauritius. The first of Iuly, the Pirncies Letters (written in Arabecke and Portugall) were read, and Couenants confirmed by Oath on both sides.

On the sixt of Iuly, they were warned by their Interpreter, from the Vice-roy or Protector, to take heed of the Portugals, which (notwithstanding coloured friendship) sought their ruine, and had agreed with Cesar (whose father had ruled all Iana, but he himselfe was brought into straites, and enjoyed little but a name, hauing also a Portugall Wife) that he should inuite all the principall Hollanders to a Feast, and the Portugals, meane-while, with fiftie Souldiers and others of Cesar's Household should inuade their ships, Cesar to haue the spoyle, and the Portugals to giue him three thousand Ducats for the ships. This Cesar was so called by the Portugals, of the people Raya Dauina: but the men of Bantam reiected his Dominion because he had liued at Malacca, and fauoured the Portugals, to whom they feared lest he should bring them in subiecti-
on. Yet was he acknowledged of many, euen Kings themselues speaking to him with their hands infolded one in the other (the gesture of Slaues) hee had also beene aboard with his children on the second of Iuly. He told them also that the Portugals sought to perswade the Vice-Roy to the like, and besought and bribed his followers thereunto, affirming, that they were not Merchants but Pirats, and if they had accesse now in ten or twelue yeares they would returne and subdue their Countrey: and this sparke, if now vnquenched would set the whole East on fire. Moreouer, they were enemies to the King of Spaine, whose enmitie would by their entertainment be procured: and that they were but Spies. The Hollanders sent one of their Captaines into the Towne to search the truth by conference with the Protector or Vice-Roy, who further counselled them to shoot into the Towne when Cesar went aboard the ships, promising to reueale all things to them: He found also in the Sabanders house Gun-powder and other hostile prouision. They sent Cesar a Costlet and other Presents, and he accordingly sent to inuite all their chiefe men and Musicians: but now by their Present seemed to bee wonne to better thoughts, blaming the Portugals.

After this Cesar went to Iacatra, and the Protector and Hollanders agreed about taking a house for their better Traffique, which was done, and Rainer van Hell was appointed chiefe, who yet found nothing but fraudes and shifts in the Protector and Bantameses. As for the Portugals they murdered Peter Tayda a Mestizo of Portugall originall and dwelling at Bantam, for holding familiaritie with the Dutch, by the sollicitation of their Priest. The Inhabitants were by Proclamation inhibited to sell Rice to the Hollander, and presently after they were told of an assault, should be made on their ships: and when some of their Companie had gotten aboard, the rest were detayned: which when by no intercession they could recouer, they assailed the towne with their ships, and tooke three Iunckes; a fourth was set on fire by the Portugals to preuent taking.

At night Houtman the chiefe on shoare writ to them that they had halters about their neckes, and were presently all of them adiudged to dye, if they continued further battery and spoyle. A dayes truce followed, and after that the Warre renewed, which continued aboue a moneth, and peace was concluded. As for Houtman and his fellowes, they were sentenced to dye, but the various opinions of the meanes protracted their liues. Perswaded by the Portugals who had sent purposely thither from Malacca, * the Bantamians after a little space broke off Trade againe, which the Hollanders supplied by taking their Iunckes. After this they were assaulted by a ship of Indians, with poysoned Arrowes, the venom whereof could not be cured but by cutting out the affected part: this ship also the Hollanders tooke. The Portugals expostulated with the Protector that so little had beene done, and they both grew to hot words, the fuell of a great fire, Hereby appeareth the discord betwixt Cesar and the Bantamians as farre as they durst.

* This Messenger is said to haue giuen 10000 Rials to deliuer him the Hollanders, or to prohibit them Trade.

fire; the Portugals seizing on some China Iunckes for their satisfaction, which the Protector a while dissembled but afterwards reuenged with the destruction of the Portugals; vnder colour of a great Marriage at Iacatra, setting forth a Fleet, wherewith he invaded the Portugall Gallies, slue the men and diuided the spoyle, the other Portugals slipping their Anchors and fleeing to Malacca.

The Hollanders came to Iacatra the thirteenth of Nouember, and were receiued with much kindnesse, whence hauing furnished themselves with necessaries, they set sayle, the Amsterdam running with full sayles on a Rocke before they had sayled a Dutch mile. On the third of December, they came to Tuban and Cydaia, where they bought Nutmegs and Cloues, and the Sabandar gaue them a great Fowle called Eme, aboue foure foot in height, somewhat like an Ostrich, sauing that the feete were not clouen. Here vnder colour of friendship the Cydayans (set on, as they learned after, by the Portugals and Bantamians, with sixe great Prawes assailed the Amsterdam and the Pinnasse: where they slue in the Amsterdam twelue, and wounded two, but the other ships comming in, they fled, losing an hundred and fiftie of the Iauans. The Hollanders departed thence to Madura. Here the King would needs haue leaue to come aboard, which he was permitted if he came with sixe followers, and to one of the greater ships: But hee comming with one hundred, and to the Amsterdam, was slaine, with the Priest and most of his Companie: his young sonne and others taken: by whom they learned the ill intent that the Madurians had to take their ship Amsterdam, which themselves soone after fired, taking out of her what they found vlesfull. And now hauing lost many of their Chieffes they consulted about retorne, and by force of winds were put into Ballabua, and the ship Holland entring the Riuer of Baly an Ile nine leagues off, was put back with the violence of the streame. The King of Passarnan a Mahumetan had married and slaine the daughter of the King of Balabua a Gentile, and now held him besieged to inforce him to exchange his faithlesse faith. The King of Baly assisted the Gentile, but his Captaine being slaine, the rest returned. These told of a ship there ten yeares before, which was thought to be Master Candishes, the old King, then supposed one hundred and fiftie to be still liuing. Baly they called Hollandiola, for the fertilitie; there they watered.

They sent to the King, who accompanied the Messenger to the shoare in a Chariot drawne with Buffals, holding the Whip in his owne hands, hauing three hundred followers, some with flame-formed Crises and long Speares, Bowes of Canes with poysoned Arrowes. Hee was feasted in Dishes of solid Gold. The Land is an equall and fertile plaine to the West, watered with many little Riuers (some made by hand) and so peopled that the King is able to bring into the field * three hundred thousand foot, and one hundred thousand horsemen. Their horse are little like Islanders, their men blacke and vsing little Merchandize, but with Cotton Cloth in Prawes. The Iland is in compasse about twelue Germane miles. Their Religion is Ethnike, ordered by the Brachmanes or Bramenes, in whose Disciplines the King is trayned vp. They haue also Banians, which weare about their neckes a stone as bigge as an Egge with a hole in it, whence hang forth three threds; they call it Tambarene, and thinke the Deitie thereby represented: they abstaine from flesh and fish, but not (as the Iauan Pythagoreans) from Marriage. Once they may marry, and when they dye their Wiues are buried quicke with them. Euery seuenth day they keepe holy, and many other Holidayes in the yeare besides with solempne Ceremonies. Their Wiues burne with their dead Husbands. Here they heard of Captaine Drakes being there eightene yeares before, and called one Strait by his name. The King obserueth state, is spoken too with hands folded, by the best. The Quillon hath power there as the Chancellor in Poland. Two of their companie forsooke them and stayed on the Iland. And of two hundred fortie nine there were now left but ninetie. In February they began their retorne. The foure and twentieth of April, 1597. they came in sight of Terra de Natal. and the five and twentieth of May, of Saint Helena, where foure Carracks made them afraid to aduenture. The eleuenth of August they entred the Tessell: the ship Holland hauing not men left to weigh their Anchor, and forced therefore in a storme to cut their Mast ouer-boord.

The second Voyage.

Although the gaine of this Expedition were losse of men and perhaps also of money and wealth, yet did it encourage with the strange Noueltie and hopefull probabilitie many Aduenturers, both of the Hollanders and of English also that way affected, aduenturing with them. This we haue obserued in the Voyages of Master Danis, * Pilot with Houtman, with two ships; and of Master Adams with Iaques Mayhay, in a Fleete of five ships, and of Melis * with Oliuer Noort, in a Fleete of foure ships, these two last sayling by the Magellan Streights to the Indies, following the Sunne to see his rising and seeking the East Indies by the West: all were set forth in the yeare after the others retorne. Anno 1598. The same yeare was by the Indian Societie of Holland set forth a Fleet of eight ships, the Holland, the Zealand, the Frisland, the Gelderland, the Vrick, the Ouer-Issell, or the Doue, the Maurice, and the Amsterdam, furnished nished with five hundred and sixtie men, James Neccius Admirall in the Maurice, Wibrand Warwicke (whom we before haue honoured for his loue and honour to the English) Vice-Admirall in the Amsterdam, and seuen Commissioners adioyned. On May-day they set forth from the Tessell, and kept together till they came to the hopefull Promontorie, where they by ignorance and foule weather parted, the Holland, Maurice and Ouer-issell, holding their way to the Ile of Saint Marie: the other five to the Iland De Cerne, by them named of Prince Mauritius, about twenty degrees South latitude, neere to Madagascar, mountainous, full of tall trees of blacke, red and yellow Ebonie, and Palmities, hauing a good ayre, Tortoises able to goe with foure men on their backes, and to hold ten men sitting on the inside of the shell, (vnkind Guests eating their Host, non hospes ab hospite tutus) store of Fowles, desolate and dis-habited by man or beast: they left there Hennes, and sowed a certaine Plaine with diuers seeds. The other three ships hauing watered at Saint Maries, (able to yeeld little elle) came to Bantam, in the end of the yeere, who suspected them to be the same which formerly had beene there, and refused Trade; till they sent Abdol a Chinois (carried into Holland by the former Fleet) with Presents to the King then an Infant, and Cephate the Protector, and procured Trafficke. Foure weekes after came in the other five ships, many of them sicke, and thirtie five dead. The Bantameses hauing eielected the Portugals, now brought them store of prouision, vsed them kindly, admired their Pewter, and for one Spooone gaue as much food as would serue a man a weeke. But Abdols telling of the other ships to come raised the price of Pepper. Foure ships being laden were sent home, and arriued at the Tessell, the nineteenth of Iuly, 1599. The other resolued for the Moluccas, and Neccius being returned, Warwicke was their Admirall.

led many, whose heads in disgrace of Labetacke they fastned on their boats, and at their returne, with their swords yet bloudie, made glorious muster of themselves foure or five dayes together. They brought some women captiues; one of which they cut asunder. Yet did they after burie the heads in cotton clothes. The Zeland receiued in her last lading on the nine and twentieth of Iune: and the Gelderland on the first of Iuly. On the second, the Vice-Admirall intreated good vsage to those he should leave behind him in a house built by them, and hauing giuen gifts to the Sabander and the Orankayes, he tooke leaue: (Regem nullum agnoscunt) for the Bandanefes acknowledge no King, sed suis institutis viuentes, ad Seniorum Cœtus, ubi consultatione opus est, res referunt: they are ruled by their owne States or Orankayes. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans and very deuout, that they begin nothing, neither Diuine nor Humane, before they haue prayed in their manner. They are a collectitious Nation of many Peoples compounded. The Ilands are diuers, Banda the chiefe, in which are fixe or seuen Townes continually disagreeing. The chiefe is Nera, to which Labetacke, Comber, and Wayre are enemies: Lantore (on the other side of the Iland) and the two Ilands of Pooloway and Poolaroon are friends to Nera. The cause of these Iarres and Warres is; the casting downe of certaine trees many yeeres since, in the territorie of Nera, by the men of Labetacke: whence they still kill one another like Dogs. Their banquets publicke, Meskit ceremonies, and foot-ball tennise, I omit. They are nimble, and some very aged vnto one hundred and thirtie yeeres. The worke in dressing their Nutmegs, Mace, and otherwise, is the womens burthen.

On the fourth of Iuly, they set sayle from Banda, and on the fixe and twentieth came to Iacatra. On the eight of August to Bantam, from whence they set sayle on the nineteenth; and the twentieth of Aprill, 1600. arriued in the Tessel. The two other ships, Amsterdam and Utricke, after two moneths stay at Ambayna, set sayle thence the eighth of May for the Moluccas; and on the two and twentieth, cast Anchor neere Ternate. Here they held trade with the Kings leaue and loue, till the nineteenth of August; and then leauing some in Factorie they departed. The nineteenth of December, they came to Bantam, whence they set sayle the one and twentieth of Ianuarie. The sixteenth of Februarie, John Peters an Englishman their Treasurer died. The thirtieth of May, they had sight of the Ascension, from whence the next day they made haste homewards, much pressed with defect of victuall, and safely arriued at Amsterdam.

BVt before the returne of any of these ships, in the yeere 1599. the Dutch Indian Companie set forth another Fleet of three ships, vnder the command of Stephen van Hagen, the fourth of May. Likewise the foure ships of the former Fleet, which had made so speedy a Voyage, were sent againe forthwith vnder the command of James Williams. And besides the former Companie, a new Companie of Amsterdam and Brabant sent forth a Nauie of foure ships vnder Peter Bot. These set sayle from the Tessel the one and twentieth of December, 1599. which returned two yeeres after richly laden. Also this last Society prepared two other ships, A. 1600. to which the former Companie added fixe other of five hundred tunnes the piece, vnder the command of Neccius, which making happie returns, meane whiles the Zelanders entertayned the businesse. And in the yeere 1601. thirteene ships departed from Amsterdam, on the three and twentieth of Aprill, vnder the command of James Heemskirck, foure; and foure vnder John Grenier, and foure vnder Wolphard Harminius. Against these the Spaniard set forth a strong Armada of thirteene Sayle, which encountred eight ships of the Dutch, before the rest were come to them; a fight followed, wherein a small Hollander Pinnasse was so battered, that they tooke out her wares, and sent her backe.

How Houtman was slaine at Achen, is elsewhere deliuered. This King being by Portugall wiles further instigated, did giue good entertainment notwithstanding, this yeere 1601. to some Zeland ships vnder the command of Laurence Bicker, as also to George Spilberg. He sent his Ambassadors also to Prince Maurice, with Bicker, one of which died at Middleborough, whose Epitaph in greater letters hath, *Hic situs est Abdur Zamiat Princeps Legationis à Rege Taprobana seu Sumatra Soltan Alciden Raietra Lillo Labe Felalam missa: ad Illustriss. But when as it happened by the diuersitie of Stockes and Companies, that great losse ensued to the Aduenturers, it was by common consent concluded, that all these seuerall Companies should be vnited, and by Proclamation forbidden to all but this Society to aduenture to the Indies for one and twentie yeeres space: and that Amsterdam should in the expeditions of new Fleets, beare halfe the charge; Middleborough a fourth part; Delfe, Rotterdam, Horne, and Enchusen each a sixteenth, &c. Presently after, this vnited Companie made readie a Fleet of foure- teene ships according to these proportions vnder the command of Stephen van Hagen. The capitall Summe or common Stocke brought into the Treasurie, exceeded fixe Millions of Florens. The Portugals which alone before enjoyed the Indian Trade, did much enrich the Dutch by their opposition, which while they sought to make prize of the Hollanders, were often surprized, zed, the Portugall decaying in those parts vnto this day. Wolphard Harminius before named Admirall of five ships in the Straights of Sunda,<sup>a</sup> was told by a China Junke that Bantam was besieged of a Portugall Armada; vnder the command of Andreas Fortado Mendoza,<sup>b</sup> consisting of eight great ships and neere twentie Frigats, seeking to cause the Bantameses to haue nothing to doe with the Dutch. Wolphard tooke counsell and aduentured on the Portugals, of whom hee tooke two Frigats and three Ships, some he sunke; others they set fire on themselves; the rest departed to Amboyna, and there slew diuers of the Inhabitants, for holding trade with the Dutch, and (as hauing an euill eye at Natures good eye, and angrie with the very Elements) cut downe their Cloue trees, which the Moors had neere done in their most despitefull opposition to the Portugall proceedings in the East.

Wolphard after gratulations of the Bantameses, and some time there spent, directed his course for Ternata and Banda, and hearing that the Portugals were gone to Tydore, where they had a Fortresse; they diuided their Fleet, two for Banda, three for Ternata, where they found Francis Verdufins (whom the Dutch had left there) in the great fauour of the King. And hauing well furnished their ships at Ternata, they set saile for Banda to the rest of their Fleet, where Veniti their Factor was well, and had provided store of Mace and Nutmegs, so that they presently sent home three ships laden; the other two stayed there till Cloues were ripe.

20 H Eemskirk with two ships tooke a Portugall Carricke of Macao valued at diuers millions of Florens: she was of foueteene hundred tunnes, had eight hundred men (one hundred whereof were women) her lading Silke, Sugar, Cotton, Alaske, Tintinago, her name Saint Katherine, which first hung forth a bloudie Banner, but being shot betwixt wind and water, exchanged it into a white: seuentie men were slaine, the rest according to composition set on shoare. Hee returned, 1604.

S Pilberg returned the same yeere. He had fought with three Portugall Carauels at Cape Verde. In Zeilan he receiued of the King honourable entertainment with libertie of trade, first with the King of Batecoli, and after with the King of Candes, invited by him and accommodated with an Elephant to carrie him by the King of Batecoli, met by the King of Candes. his Elephants a dayes journey on the way, and a Litter with costly furniture of Arras, and after that with more honourable accoutrement and attendance of the Captaine (graced with Banners and Colours taken from the Portugals, their professed enemies) to the Citie. For after the death of Darma King of Zeilan, this Fimala of Candes (educated with the Portugals in the Fortresse Columbo, and baptised by the name of Iohn de Austria) by the helpe of his friends made him- selfe King, and expelled the Portugals. There remayned a daughter of the deceased King, baptised by the name Catharina, whom the Portugals intended to make Queene, and to marrie her to Peter Lopes de Sofa Gouverneur of Malacca, and with a great Armie brought her to Candes, and made Iohn de Austria hide himselfe in the woods, who did beleager the wayes mean while, that no prouision might come to the Citie, slaying the Portugals which came in his reach. 40 Whereupon Lopes was constrained to take the field, and trie it by battell, Anno 1590. in which he was slaine, and Catharina then nine or ten yeeres old was married to Fimala; who subuerted the Portugall Forts, and euery way fortified himselfe against them.

This King, the next day after Spilbergs arriual sent him Horses to come to the Court, which went thither with some Presents, Prince Maurice his Letters and Picture, and the Portraiture of the Battell at Newport.

The King questioned much of these parts, saying, hee had thought that there had beene no white men but the Portugals. Hee feasted him in a roome furnished with Arras Hangings, Chaires, a long Table, and other furniture like the Portugals. And as for league, he said that he and the Queene with his Nobles were readie to carrie mortar on their shoulders, and stones to erect a Fortresse in his Kingdome, where and whensoever the States and Prince Maurice pleased. 50 Spilberg also to gratifie the King, tooke three Portugall ships not tarre off, burned the Vessels and gaue the Captiues to the King. Hee gaue him two Musicians also, because he saw him therewith delighted; wherewith he was so pleased, that he made one of them his Secretarie, would needs learne the Dutch Language, and haue his Kingdome called New Holland. Spilberg brought thence first Cynamon and Precious-stones, amongst which a Pyropus (a kind of Carbuncle) so great as had not beene here scene, weighing foure hundred Carats. This Iland from North to South is two hundred and fiftie miles, broad one hundred and fortie, fertile of fruits and odoriferous plants, abundance of Cynamon, gemmes, both by sea and mynes, and Elephants. It is diuided into seuen Kingdomes, one whereof is principall, the chiefe Citie Columbo, now wholly possessed by Fimala, except the Fortresses of the Portugals. For the Readers further delight, and because I find little Trade of our English on this Iland, I haue borrowed hither Hunda Map of Zeilan.

IAmes Neccius before mentioned, setting sayle the eight and twentieth of Iune, 1601. in the end of March came to Bantam, where he found Paulus à Carden. He spake with the Gouver-nour, who willed him to beware of the Portugals, telling that one had beene with him from the King of Tuban, Ragiebella a Portugall borne, to sollicite for leaue to assault the Dutch in Harbor, 40 for which purpose they had a Fleet of fortie sayle at Iacatra. The second of Aprill, he departed from Bantam for the Moluccas. Here at Ternata he found Verdusius aforesaid, and Peter Lindius the Captaine of a Fleet which had passed the Magellane Straights, which here at Ternata had bilged his ship on a Rocke, but saued her goods. By these Neccius heard of a ship of Mabus Fleet at Tidore taken by the Portugals, or betrayed rather, and their Captaine treacherously slaine with all his Company, except five. They had also belabored the King of Ternata against the Hollanders, saying, they were impious, perfidious, without God or goodnesse, Sodomites, of whom for their loue to the King, they gaue him faire warning, promising also rewards. The Hollanders in reuenge set vpon the Portugals at Tidore, where Neccius was wounded on his right hand, eight or 50 nine of his Companie lost, and the Dutch going by the worst, retired. Some of his Companie he left at Ternata, and after festiuall entertainment for want of merchandize, he was forced to seeke Trade in China, or elsewhere.

This King of Ternata was called Scipidine, Lord of Ternate, Machian, Motir, Amboni, Gulolo, &c. he stileth himselfe also King of Celebes, although he possleth nothing there but some forced places: and in Mindanao, Sokent, Menos, and other Ilands.

Neccius came to Coyo one of the Philippine in eleuen degrees, tributarie to the Spaniard, where they had kind entertainment. After that they came to Mendare not farre from the Bay of Manilla, and eight dayes together were endangered among the Rockes. The twentieth of September, they came to a Land vknowne, and then were encountered with a terrible tempest. 60
This was one of the Ilands before Canton. When they thought themselues twelue or fiftene leagues from Macao, they proceeded three or foure leagues, and saw buildings at the foot of a hill, and certaine boats with one man and one woman, besides children, in each of them, as if they offered his Kingdome to the Queene of England. See Sir Fr. Drake. Macao. Hollanders lost there.

they

- they had beene so many Families dwelling therein. They questioned with them (for none would come aboard) of Macao, and they pointed to the mountaine: but they not thinking it so neere, set some ashore, whom when they could not see returne at night; they misdoubted and found too late that it was Macao, and their men there detayned. Seeing seven and thirty little Islands before them, they sent the Master to see if he could find any sure harbour by sounding, who was also intercepted with boats from the towne, together with his consorts. Thus were twenty men lost, amongst whom the Treasurer and the Captaine of the souldiers, which was also Master. They thought to write, but could get no carrier, and staying two dayes at Sanchona without hope of effecting any thing, the third of October they departed, and the next day were
- 10 carried on the shelve of Pulo Cynon, and in danger to be carried vpon Cauchin China. Pulo Cynon.
- After that endangered with tempest and the shelues, and the swiftnesse of the Current to the South, they came to Quami, where finding nothing but Woods, Deserts, and Buffals footings, they passed to Anarella Talca in eleuen Degrees, and thirtie Minutes. Heere the Generall with
- twelue others going on shoare, came to an open field, encompassed with goodly trees; where he found many Buffals feeding, and store of Birds, but they could get none. Finding then the tract of a cart, they followed it to spacious woods and fields, footings of men and beasts, but no habitation, which made them thinke that they liued like the Tartars. They called the place
- Sotternim* of a distraction which they got by eating a certaine fruit, euery man distracted for a time with a madnesse answering his proper humour, seeing angels, deuils, serpents, all things,
- 20 and nothing. The one and twentieth of October they passed by Polo Condor, the next day by Sangora, and the seuenth of Nouember arriued at Barane, where they had excellent entertainement; procured trade and a house, and by the Queenes fauour left there eight in factory. Thi-Trade at Patania.

ther also came Heemskirke, who told them of his taking the Portugall Caricke, and therein of a letter that Don Paulo had hanged fiftene of the Hollanders taken at Macao; the Quester and Master were sent to Goa; which act before they attributed to the Chinois, now saw it to be the *Por-

- In Patania they vte the Malayan, Syan and China language: the Malayan writing like the *Aright hand but downewards. Adultery is punished with death inflicted by their parents in hold seruice by day, and other offices at night. Some of the Syanites weare two or three siluer balles (or of other mettall) in their yeards, inserted betwixt the skinne and flesh, as big sometimes as a Tennis ball. The Countrey is fruitfull and wholesome. Their Geese and Duckes lay twice a day: the woods are stored with wild beasts; there are Turtles with faire feathers like Parrets. They take wild Elephants in fight with a tame, put into the woods of purpose, whiles both are fastned by the teeth, some men behind with ropes captiuing the wild. They arriued at

- IN the yeere 1602. a Fleet of fourteene saile were sent out vnder the command of Wibrand
- 40 Warwicke Admirall, and Sebalt de Wert Vice-admirall: the Maurice of foure hundreth tunnes, the Holland three hundreth and fiftie, the Nassau three hundreth and fortie, the Sunne two hundreth and eightie, the Moone two hundreth and fiftie, the Starre one hundreth and eightie, the Parret a Pinnasse of fise and twentie; all by Amsterdam. Three Zelanders, one of foure hun-dreth, the Flushing two hundreth and fiftie, the Goose one hundreth and fourtie: by the Enchuseners two, the Hedge two hundreth and twentie, the Virgin one hundreth seuentie and fise: by the Roterdamians two, the Erasmus two hundred and fiftie, and Roterdam eightie. It was determined that the three Zelanders should goe for Zeilon and Achen, the Maurice and Moone to the Moluccas, the Nassau and Erasmus to China the Holland, Hedge and Starre to Achen, the Sun, Virgin, &c. to Bantam. In the Hedge, Herman de Brez was Cape Merchant. These ail, (but the 50 three Zelanders which went three monthes before (set out from the Tessell the seuenteenth of Iune, 1602. The tenth of March they came to Achen. There they found the three Zelanders, and Spilbergs two ships. Sebalt de Wert the Vice-admirall, the eight and twentie of Nouember, 1603. came to Zeilon, & went with fixe Elephants fourtie leagues iourney to Candes or Candy, & had beene honourably entertained with his fiftene followers. He was brought into the City as if he had beene a King, the Citizens and Souldiers making a rancke halfe a * mile long on both sides the way, and such a thundering of Ordnance, and sound of trumpets, that none could bee heard speake. To the Court he was had with like pompe, where he saw the Royall Counsell, & Prince Maurice his picture, with a stately Carpet before it to receiue his Presents. The King stood in a place by himselfe with his children, beore whom he fell on his knees, and was taken 60 vp presently, and demanded what Countreiman he was, and wherefore he came: who answered, of Holland, gouerned by that Prince there pourtraied; whereat they all reioyced, hauing placed it there to trie whether he knew it, and the truth of Spilbergs relation. He added that he came for trade of Merchandize. The King protested much his hatred to the Portugall: and after asked how he durst without pledge or any assurance, aduenture so farre into that Countrey: hee answered.

answered, because the Portugals were hated alike of both their Princes; whereat they laughed. In more priuate conference, he promised with twenty thousand men to besiege the Portugall Castle Columbo, if the Hollanders would preuent helpe from Goa: and would giue the Hollanders all their Castles which he should take, and would reserue his Merchandizing for them. The next day he feasted him, gaue him before a golden tooth-picke, now a bowle of gold wherein he made his little daughter to drinke to him: and if his sonne were old enough, said, he would send him to Prince Maurice to be instructed in Martiall discipline. At his departure he gaue him twenty five Quintals of Cynamon, and sixteene of Pepper, and honourable conuoy to his ships.

He notified these things to his fellowes at Achen, and counselled them to embrace these oportune promises. For they could not easily be prouided of Merchandize. They had heard of two French ships, one shipwrecked at the Maldana, the other returned with a small victory: as also the state of the English there, which had taken * a prize, and built a store-house at Achen. Thus sixe ships with a Pinnasse, set forth the third of Aprill, not a little heartned by the old and young King of Achen, who sent an Embassadour with them to Zeilon. They lost many in the calmes betwixt the sixteenth and one and twentieth of Aprill. On the foure and twentieth they arriued, and marched in battell array on the sixe and twentieth to Motecaló. The king there entertained them well: but their Religion prohibiting to eat Beeues and Buffals, whereof they had great plenty; they would not sell any to the Hollanders. They were disquieted with Flies also and Gnats which would not suffer them to sleepe; against which the Natiues make fire and smoake all the night the place where they sleepe. Some vnruely persons caused great disturbance by killing of certaine Kine, and could not appease them with offering satisfaction: and seeking to make the King intercessor for them to the owners, he also tooke it to heart, and said the Portugals had neuer offered such indignitie, neither could he any longer tolerate such wrongs: some forsooth, imagined that the soules of the oxen (had themselves any?) thus slaine were precipitated to hell. Yet at last vpon promise of better abearing, he was intreated.

The thirteenth of May, they had answere of their letter to the King of Candy, now encamped at Manacrawari, desiring the Hollanders to come with their ships to Punto di Gallo, promising to besiege it first, and to giue the Hollanders that which he had promised, and one thousand Quintals of Cynamon, and as much Pepper for tribute, that being wonne. He desired also the Vice-admirall to meet him at Vintane, halfe way betwixt Matecaló and Candy. Meane while the Hollanders tooke three Portugall ships, two of two hundreth tunnes, the third of seuentie, and after that a fourth of eightie, but the goods not worth the while, except to gratifie the King of Candy: two of them they sent away with the Prisoners according to promise, which was very distastefull to the King. The first of Iune, two hundred choise men were set on shoare to meet the King in best array: but he desired the Vice-admirall to stay with him and send his men aboard, to come in like manner the next day. Thus they which made speed, saued their liues; the rest doubting no euill, were most of them slaine. The next day they vnderstood by a letter from the King of the death of the Vice-admirall with his retinue, pretending his insolence, and offering good termes or warre, as they pleased.

The sixteenth, they had letters againe by a Germane of Candy from the King, swearing all kindness before promised, if they would helpe him take Gallo and Columbo: to which they answered, they were ready to trade at shoare, but for the fortresses their ships were, some gone, and they vnfit at present for that which might in fitter time be done. Many messages passed betwixt them, but little trust or trade. The nine and twentieth of Iuly they departed. These Zeilonians worship Pagodes, of which the Hollanders saw some in Candy of five or sixe fathoms, representing Adam, as the inhabitants affirmed, proportioned by artificiall symmetry to the foot-print of Adam in a mountaine neere. The Kings of Panane, Matecaló and Poligamme, acknowledging the King of Candy their superiour, who is thus reported to haue attained * the Scepter. A certaine King of Sitabague fiftene leagues from Candy, about thirty yeeres before had taken Candy, the King whereof with this his sonne and daughter fled to the Portugals, who at Goa baptized him by the name of John of Austria, (as is before said) and brought him vp in Columbo. But Candy rebelling against the other King, the Portugals sent him after that Kings death to Candy, where he was acknowledged King, and then followed that which before you had of the Kings daughter, (of Sitabague.) To returne to the Dutch, they returned to Achen, and thence againe to the Ile of Daru neere Sumatra, and thence after diuers Portugall prizes taken to Macassar. They learned of an Island called Ende, famous with a Vulcano or burning hill called Gunapi. At last, they (not knowing whether to goe) came to Ior, where they helped the King against the Portugall Fleet. Thence they went to Patane, whether they came the first of Nouember, 1603. Here they heard of the Erasmus and Nassau, there taking a rich ship sayling to Japan neere to Macao: after they had pillaged her, they burnt her. After trade here they returne to Bantam and home.

Venas Voyage. C Ornelius de Vena in another ship of that Fleet, saith, they came the twentieth one of Iune to Pulo Timon, on the three and twentieth to Paban, where the King receiued them kindly, on the

the first of Iuly to Patani, and agreeing with a Chinese to conduct them to Canton, then set saile on the eleuenth, and found no matter of great note till the thirtieth, when they came to Macao, and tooke a Portugall ship bound for Iapan, the Portugals fleeing and leauing them their ship with the goods and twentie Blacks; these they set on shoare, and hauing lighted the ship on the tenth of August fired it, and set saile for Bantam. On the eighteenth of September, they encountered a great Iuncke which they supposed to be Portugals, and after a hot fight forced her, found them Chineses, and were sorrie that they had ignorantly hurt their friends; seuentie of which perished, one the Captaine, whose valour lost himselfe and them: they let them depart with their goods in friendship. The sixteenth of December, they arriued at Bantam, and the 10 thirtieth of August, 1604. at the Tessell.

IN the yeare, 1603. twelue ships were sent vnder the command of Stephen Verhagen. They set saile the eighteenth of December. On the seuen and twentieth of Iune, they came to Mosambique and anchored without the Castle, in sight and spight whereof they tooke a Portugall ship in the Harbour, and after that diuers other Vessels. But not able to doe any thing memorable against the Iland; On the five and twentieth of August, they departed, and the sixteenth of September, came before Goa, but found the Portugals so provided that they imagined themselves before betrayed, and their designe bewrayed in Europe.

On the fourteenth of October, they therefore departed for Cananor, whither they came on the sixe and twentieth, but by in excession of the King they remooued to Calecut, where they tooke a Portugall ship with Powder and Prouision bound for Zeilan.

Cananor. Calecut.

The third of Nouember, they had fight with nine Portugall ships in which many were slaine, none taken. The eighth of Nouember, they entred league with the Samorine, ratified by Oath and Instrument in writing.

It was ordered that the Zeland and Enchusen should goe for Cambaya, the rest to Cochin, before which they came on the fourteenth, but attempted nothing. On the two and twentieth, they sailed before Columbo, and shot at the Castle.

Cambaya. Cochin.

The second of Ianuary they came to Bantam, the Delffe staying at Achen to returne their Embassador. On the seuenteenth, they departed for the Moluccas. The one and twentieth of February, they came to Amboyna, and assailed the Castle, which without further adoe was deliuered on composition of free passage for such Portugals as would, and such as would to stay, the Castle and Ordnance left to the Hollanders, which presently receiued the Dutch Colours: forty sixe married Portugals staying and swearing allegiance to the States, sixe hundred others departing.

Amboyna. Castle taken. See Sir H. Mid. of this whom they slander for assisting the Port. Castle of Tidore wonne, and the Portugals diuen out of the Moluccas: see the later state in Capr. Savin, l. 4. c. 1. & Spilberg, p. 87.

Five ships were thence sent to Tidore, the Horne remayning here, and the Admirall going to Banda. Those five arriued at Tidore, on the second of May, 1605. On the fift, the Vice-Admirall summoned the Castle to yeeld, which the Portugals refused and manfully defended their honoer against the Assailants, till an vnfortunate fire, (how or whence vncertaine) lighting in their Powder blew vp a great part of their Castle with sixtie or seuentie of their men. This forced them to yeeld, and consequently, they were dispossessed of all the Moluccas, except Solor. The King of Ternate with fourteene Corocoras, contayning each one hundred and fortie Souldiers, aided the Hollanders, and held fast the King of Tidore, both proouing Spectators of the European Prize. They razed the Castle.

This yeare 1605. the King of Spaine had made a terrible Edict against the Hollanders, forbidding Trade with them vnder grieuous penalties. But prohibition without inhibition is vaine: and the Foxe the more he was cursed, thriued the better. For in the same yeare, they sent forth Cornelius Matelinius with twelue ships, foure of which were seuen hundred tunnes each. The next yeare Paulus à Caerden was set forth with eight other in May, 1606. Anno 1607. the Peace or Trace being in treatie, they set forth another Fleet of thirteene sayle vnder Peter Williamson 50 Verhues. Anno 1608. three ships returned laden with Spices, three hundred tunne of Cloues, one hundred of Nutmegs, fiftie of Mace, &c.

Matelinius hauing in charge to enter league with the Indian Kings against the Portugals, in the end of Aprill, 1606. sent to the King of Iortan to ayde him, who came with two thousand Blacks, and on the tenth of May, they both went on shoare against Malacca, and possessed the Suburbs. But continuing their siege to little purpose, and hearing of the Portugall Fleet comming, they arose & on the seuenteenth of August set saile to encounter the Armada consisting of fourteene great ships, and as many smaller. A terrible Sea-fight followed, in which the Hollanders were forced to forsake the Mauritius one of their best ships, and Mateliff himselfe was in great distresse by three Portugall shippes (together with the Middleborough) till others comming into his helpe with fierie shot, hee freed himselfe: but the Middleborough with two Portugall ships fastened to it were burnt together, the men sauing themselves in the boats (as well as they could) of other ships. The Hollanders diuerted to their confederate Kings, the Portugals going to Malacca, where hauing left seuen of their ships, the rest returned. The Dutch hauing having now repayed themselves tooke this oportunitie, and made an vnexpected returne, took one of the Portugall ships, slue the men, fired the Vessell; two others fighting with the Dutch Vice-Admirall, fell both on fire and were consumed in both Elements, Anger: a fourth also yeelded; the rest were fired by the Portugals at Malacca, being before disarmed, lest they should fall into the Enemies power.

I omit Admirall Peter Both, sent with a notable Fleet, Anno 1609. with Garison Souldiers, with women also and families sent to inhabit; and a ship that returned from Japan, 1610. where she had the Emperous license of Trade and had left a Factorie: and another shippe sent thither, 1611. and the fortie tunnes of Gold which that Japan ship and another are said to have brought backe. I have done sufficient in this Treasure of Navigations, to shew the beginnings as of the Spanish and Portugall before, so here also of the Dutch Plantations in the Indies, and in the course of our English Voyages we have many of theirs interlarded, thus many Rivers bringing vs into an immense Sea of their present Trade. But because Banda was the banefull and banned occasion of this digression, you may see in diuers of ours, also Relations of the Dutch doings and sufferings there, as 1606. some of their men slaine whiles they sought Trade, and of the quarrels betwixt the Ilanders and them continuing long after: and I haue thought good briefly to adde the Historie of their forcible possession thereof by Verhuf, out of their owne Relations.

Verhuf with a Nauie of nine ships and foure Pinnasses, the three and twentieth of December, 1607. set saile from the Tessell. The thirteenth of Iuly, 1608. they saw the Land of Sofala: on the eight and twentieth, they came to Mazambique, where they tooke a ship vnder the Castle most of the Portugals hauing runne away, very rich, but casually or by the Portugals set on fire the next night whereby great part of the goods were lost. They tooke also two Pinnasses. A thousand men they set on shoare in sixe Bands, commanded by Captaine Buter, on the nine and twentieth, but found none in the Towne but five or sixe Portugals, and a few olde folkes, children and Blacke slaues, three hundred with fiftie Turkes, whom they set at libertie and set on shoare in safer places. The Towne they found great, with conuenient houses, wals, two Churches and Monasteries. The Merchants had conueyed themselves into the Castle, but left much goods behind to the Dutch prey.

The first of August, they began to batter the Castle. On the tenth, they went into the continent and destroyed two Villages. But the Monlon being neere, they rayled their siege the eighteenth, fortie of them being slaine, and an hundred wounded; and hauing burned a Towne and Monasterie in an adioyning Iland they departed. They tooke a Portugall ship called the Bo Jesus, on the one and twentieth whereby they vnderstood that nine Gallions and five other great ships had beene sent from Lisbone, towards the East Indies, of which Company this ship was separated from her consorts by foule weather. They fought with the Dutch nine heures, who found in her remayning, one hundred and fortie Souldiers of one hundred and ninetie:

On the eighteenth of September, they anchored before Goa. On the sixe and twentieth, they sent the Arnold to Coromandel where they had great trading. The fift of October, they sayled along the Malabar Coast to refresh themselves neere Cananor, and on the eight towards Calicut. On the eleuenth, the Admirall with two hundred men visited the Samorine, who on the thirteenth and fourteenth sent out Hunters which killed about fortie great Boares, and gaue to the Hollanders. He deliuered to the Samorine the Captaine and Cape Merchant of the Bo Jesus; the ship they had before sunke. On the sixteenth he set saile, on the two and twentieth came before Zeilon. The two and twentieth of Nouember, they came before Malacca, where they tooke a Portugall ship, and fired it, the goods beeing by the Inhabitants before carried away.

On the foure and twentieth, they sent to the King of Ior to acquaint him with their purpose to besiege and take the Towne and Castle of Malacca. On the six and twentieth, they set men on shoare in the little Iland of Saint Peter, where the next day the Portugals set on them and lost their Admirall with three Captaines and sixe prime Officers, besides many of the meener. Of the Hollanders seuen were slaine and three taken. On the eight and twentieth, fiftene Frigats of Blacke Pirats adioyned themselves to the Hollanders. But the King of Ior could afford no helpe, his Fleet being then abroad. Some Vessels being taken and their three men recovered by exchange of Prisoners, they departed on the nine and twentieth.

The tenth of Ianuary they went to Ior, and the King with his Sonne and Brother with twelue Frigats came to the Fleet on the fourteenth. His name is Ratissont: he had on a white Cotton Wastcote to his knees with a fringe hanging to the feet, silken Sandals, a blacke Shash on his head, three Gold Chaines about his necke, with many Iewels annexed, two thicke gold Rings on his left ar ne and one on his right, sixe on his fingers, a Crisse very artificiall in sheath of solid Gold set with many Diamonds, Saphires, Carbuncles (valued at fiftie thousand Florens) of meane stature, comely shape, moderate speech, whitish complexion, hauing with him thirtie Wiues; his Frigat adorned gallantly with a Tent, borne vp with foure golden Pillars. His seat is in New Ior.

The

The fourteenth of February, they came to Bantam. On the second of April, 1609. they came to Teralta twenty foure leagues, from which is a Rocke burning in the Sea, halfe an houres iourney in circuit, with a huge opening in the top alway smoking. On the eight arriued at Banda. There he found Captaine Keeling in Trade for the English Company, with other Dutch ships for theirs (the English hauing begunne and continued Trade euer since the beginnings in manner of that Societie, Captaine Colthurst who went with Sir Henry Middleton, in the second Voyage, hauing spent one and twentie weekes in trading at Banda.) The Dutch ships belonged to the Fleet of Paul van Caerden.

10 These Ilands of Banda saith Verkius, the Author of this Iournall, and one of the chiefe Commanders, are seuen in number, about ten leagues in circuit, eightie leagues from the burning Rocke: the best Ilands in all the East, producing Mace and Nutmegs to serue the whole World.

The people in them are supposed ten or twelue thousand. Banda libera est Respub. saith Pontanus, in his Historie of Amsterdam: Banda is a free Common-wealth (as before, Regem nullum agnoscunt, they acknowledge no King, or in Dutch English, They are Free States) and for the King of Ternata, Isacius sleights it off as a trifle, quamuis Ternatensis partem aliquam territorij vindicare sibi videatur: Some seeming of some challenge of some part; that is, some nothing. Thus the Story of Amsterdam written and printed of, and at Amsterdam, purposely handling these Indian Affaires. Neither did Verbuef now challenge that or any right, or haue any of their Iournals which I haue seene published, so much as mentioned any such challenge or broken title, on that Kings part, or such acknowledgement on theirs, that any should now become redemptor
20 litium, or incurre a Writ of Champertie in his behalfe, which yet the English might best doe, as appears in Sir Francis Drakes Voyage. Their cruel warres which the Hollanders found betwixt them at their first comming before mentioned, shew that no Superiour interposed (as was iust cause) to command better abearing.

Verbuef on the ninth (as Keeling hath it, or after their Story, which I follow, all these Relations of the Dutch, and after their New stile, nineteene) went on shoare at Ortattan, where the Orankayas, or the States and Gouvernours assembled: Here he caused Prince Maurice his Letters to be carryed before him in a siluer Dish couered, and was met by an Orankaya, and conuayed vnder a great Tree, where were two hundred of the Chieffes sitting crosse-legged like Taylors (after their manner) and he conueniently set, and his Letters read in Portugall first, and after in Malayan. The Contents whereof were, that Prince Maurice vnderstanding that the Ilanders
30 had not kept promise with the Hollanders to haue Trade onely with them, who had now traded there sixe yeares and bene at great charges, and were often much abused; did therefore desire them to permit the Hollanders to build some Castle in some of those Ilands in place most fit for them, not thereby to en-
40 damage any way the Inhabitants, but to defend themselves and the whole Countrey from Portugals, which happily might come thither: the Hollanders being to satisfie them for the place and for stones and all appurtenances to the structure, and no way to be troublesome to the Inhabitants. These Letters being read, the people were in an vprore, and but for feare of their shipping would haue slaine the Hollanders, as after appeared. But consulting amongst themselves in present, answered, that he should depart aboard his ships, and they would communicate the businesse with the rest of the Ilands, and in three dayes giue him an answer; which was giuen on the two and twentieth, 40 and proued a flat Negatiue. Whereupon the Hollanders prouided themselves for fight, and some went on shoare and fought with them the same euening: One ship also and two Pinnasses they sent to Nera, that the ship Companies might forrage that Iland at pleasure.

See of this letter, pag. 199.
Here make no right of the Hollanders or Ternata pretended.
See also the Dutch allegation to Keeling, 202 & 203.
The Hollanders what they cannot get by intreatie, seeke to winne by force.

On the foure and twentieth, the Ilanders came to the Admirall and desired three dayes respite, which the Hollanders denied, but said, they would next day try by force their fortunes with them: which answer receiued, they soone returned with answer, that the Ilanders thought better to abstayne from battell and to permit them to build a Castle on Nera. On the five and twentieth, sixe Companies of Hollanders (each one hundred and fiftie) went to Nera and found the Inhabitants of it and Rato, fled to the other side of the Iland: wherefore they kept good watch.

50 The third of May, was a great Earthquake (not vnusuall in those parts) and the fourth they began their Castle in Nera, or Nero. On the one and twentieth, the Ilanders sent to the Admirall desiring him to appoint a place where they might meet and conferre. The next day hee went with one hundred and fiftie Souldiers to a place neere Rato, halfe an houres way distant from the New founded Castle: and the Fiscall went to the Ilanders to bid them send some with full power to treat. They sent to desire the Admirall that he would meete their Orankayas or State-Gouvernours in a Groue; for some of them feared his forces there where hee was, lest the Souldiers should offer them violence.

* The Banda neses still. bier Veruef b. le- nesse in crying at his death, which they thinke more childish than manly and braue.

60 The Admirall hereupon with his Militarie Councell, two Gunners and two Boyes went amongst them, commanding the Souldiers to looke to their Armes and expect his returne. But they within a quarter of an houre hearing a great cry * in the Wood, and two Peeeces discharged, sent Verkius to see what was the matter, with sixe Muskietiers, who had scarcely gone thirtie paces into the Wood, before they were incountred by a great company of Blacks, at whom they they discharging their peeces, the other souldiers came in and rescued them, putting the Blacks to flight, and in the chase found the Admirall and his Company flaine, whom they brought on their shoulders to their new founded Castle. Of the Hollanders were that day flaine in all forty two persons. On the three and twentieth, they slew the Dutch Fiscall with diuers others. On the thirtieth, the Hollanders with two Companies spoyled all they could in the Island. On the twelfth of Iune, the Dutch killed fiftie Blacks in a lunk, On the thirteenth, the Castle being well-nigh finished, was named Nassau, of James Bitter the Captaine;

On the three and twentieth of Iuly, the Hollanders attempted Slanga, a towne of the Blacks, but returned with the losse of thirtie, and one hundred hurt: Bitter himselfe hauing his legge broken, wherof he after died. On the fourteenth of August, the Hollanders sent to treat of a peace, saying, that though they had offended the Hollanders in killing the Admirall and chiefe men, yet they also should remember what harmes they had done to the Hollanders, in subuerting their Citties * and Temples, firing their Villages and Forts, with great slaughters euery where. The Hollanders answered, that they would grant peace, on condition they would sweare that they would thereafter haue trade with none other Nation * whatsoeuer it were, but sell all their Nuts and Mace to the Hollanders onely; who on the other side promised to defend them from their enemies, and to provide them of Rice and necessaries for food, with a reasonable price for their wares. On these conditions, peace was concluded, and by oath on the Alcaron confirmed, the fifteenth of August.

How brittle this forced peace was, appeareth before by the Iournalls of Captaine Keeling then there, and David Middleton soone after, and by the Dutch owne stories, which complaine of their trade with Captaine Middleton, their conspiracie also against the Hollanders, the Hollanders lacking of Comber, the Blacks killing diuers Hollanders in a wood, of a kinde of Siege of their Castle, bloody fight, the Castle almost famished, all in the same yeere that this peace was concluded. So little force is made of Force, when any euasion appeareth, especially when Mercury is turned to Mars, and men begging trade will force Forts vpon free States and Gouvernours. No maruaile if hereupon they found the Hollanders perpetuall worke, as you haue before read in Floris, and at last sent and obtained trade with the English, ratifying the same by refiguration of so many Ilands to his Maiestie: which Soueraignty the Dutch stories (by me traced, and faithfully followed in the former relations) doe no so much as mention by them sought in articles of treaty, or to them by the Hollanders offered. Hence the warres betwixt the English and Dutch: and the hatefull disasters before recited: the Hollanders making a bridge of English ships to get ouer English bodies and blood to these Ilands, .euen without denutation of warre, fore heard of.

Hauing now gathered this out of the Dutch owne Histories and Iournalls, I presume not to dispute (for euen they themselves and these their Historians being iudges) who seeth not the state of the case. But I haue thought good to adde for further illustration; this relation of their gaine by that trade, as one of that society hath lately published: after which I will giue you the testimony of the Priest of Poolarooone (a man there of great esteeme) touching the Banda case, a Discourse of mine owne added for illustration: and that men may not misconstrue these things, to the distaste of the Hollanders in generall, but rather of some of their Maiors or Commanders and Committees there (which you may vnderstand also in like differences with the Portugals) I haue added (to end this businesse) an extract of a little Booke translated out of Dutch, which as he speakes meanelly of their gaires by this trade; so hee imputeth the fault to the ill government and Gouvernours.

The gaires which the Hollanders had gotten by the East India trade, taken out of a Booke Translated out of the Dutch, perswading to a West Indie Trade.

Now to let you see how much we should be hindered, if we should leaue off the East Indian Trade, & the like hinderance, we should consequently also faile of touching the power and strength of these Countreyes. In the Records of the East Indian Company it appeareth, that from Anno 1595. to Anno 1601. included, they sent out fortie and sixe ships, whereof there arrived three and fortie againe in these Countreyes richly laden. Ships that brought for returne, (all charges deducted) two hundred and thirtie Tunnes of gold, cleare gaires for the Merchants of the said Company. Further, by the Records and Bookes of the said East Indian Company: it is also shewed, that for the space of eleuen yeeres we had still about thirtie ships continually in East India, with five thousand Sea-faring men, and that they expected to receiue from thence at least three hundred Tuns of gold in capitall, besides that which they had in the land. Now I refer it to your iudgement, what the said Company in the last ensuing tenne yeeres vntill this time hath gained? who within the time of sixe moneths, haue had a good returne of fortie Tuns of gold, I doubt not but you haue heard of the rich lading that the two ships brought hether, within the space of a moneth, being valued to be worth foure and twenty Tuns of gold, in such manner, that the particular partners from Anno Anno 1605. (every mans full aduerture being deliuered in) haue gained upon every hundred Guilders, unto this day, in ready money, the summe of two hundred Guilders; and whensoever any man will sell his stocke (which at this time he hath in the Company) which he may doe when he will, he may for every hundred haue two hundred and thirtie Guilders: whereunto add the Interest, which the partners (from the first money receiued) to this present haue gained, which also is halfe a capitall, there resteth to the partners particularly, upon every hundred, if they haue ventured and traded sixteene yeeres in the East Indian Company, in cleare gaires aboue foure hundred Guilders. I speake not this by report, but as a witness thereof, being one of the partners, that haue receiued my part of the gaine, and may haue the rest within eight dayes, if I will sell my stocke, which I may at all times doe.

10 Secondly, we may by the Trade vsed by the said Company, vntill the yeere 1614. included; declare and proue, that the custome houses of the Countrey, by meanes of conuoyes, licences, tolls, and customes, which the said East Indian Company haue, and pay, inward and outward, haue profited and receiued aboue five and thirtie Tunnes of gold, for the which the States of the land, haue at some times (as neede required) ayded the said Company towards their warres in India, with money and ships: partly to ease the said Company of some portion of their charge. Now, what they haue receiued in the custome-houses of the Countrey, from Anno 1614. to Anno 1621. without doubt it is a greater summe, and much more then the former, noting what a rich returne they haue made within these seuen yeeres. Now to shew what furtherance and benefit the common people haue had and gotten by this East Indian Trade, we must note, that a Fleet of twelue ships, doth cost in money and all other things thereunto belonging, about 20 eighteene Tunnes of gold, to set and send it forth: and commonly there is not aboue five or sixe Tunnes of gold in ready money sent out with it: all the rest is bought and prepared here in the land, to the great benefit and welfare of the Countrey, and gained by the Inhabitants, that sell and deliuer the same. And every ship that comes home againe, one with another, payeth aboue a Tunne of gold for monthly wages, whereby the Officers and Saylers also are enriched, which also is gotten and spent by and among the Inhabitants: whereby it is manifest, what the common people haue profited; besides, the great number of so many thousand people, that by meanes of this Trade aforesaid, are set on worke, and well paid for it, to the great comfort and benefit of many poore people.

30 Thirdly, to shew what the publike Common wealth hath yet further gotten by this Trade, you must understand, that the greatest profit of the Land consisteth in the most great hurt and damage which the enemy hath first and last endured, and yet endureth in East India: for since that we were prohibited to Trade and Trafficke in Spaine, and other of the Spanish territories (which notwithstanding against his will, by other Nations we doe continue with good profit) from Anno 1596. we haue overcome and spoyled eleuen of his great huge Carrackes, Gallies, and other great ships, and haue made about fortie of his ships vnserviceable; besides those, that in the last ten yeeres ensuing, we haue spoyled and taken: whereby our enemies trade there, hath bene greatly impaired, and ours, by Gods blessing (who onely is to be prayd therefore) to the admiration of the whole world, is greatly increased. In such manner, that the Staple of all manner of Spices, and other rich and costly Wares, which for the space of two hundred yeeres together was in Venice, (whereby the said Towne increased and became exceeding rich) and after that by meanes of their Navigation, was in Portugall, for the space of one hundred yeeres: and lastly, for 40 fine and twenty yeeres hath bene in Holland and Zeland, and since that by a good agreement made, the last yeere was also brought into England: in such sort, that the King of Spaines Merchants, were forced in the yeeres aforesaid (contrary to all mens expectations) to buy Nutmegs, Cloues and Mace of vs.

He reckoned the Kings losse yeerly aboue
one hundred tunne of gold, besides what the Portugalls
lose.

I will briefly declare, the present state of the said Company in East India. You must understand, that matter of Trafficke is in very good termes, which wee hope by Gods helpe and blessing, shall from yeere to yeere still be better and better, now the Englishmen (by meanes of a contract made with them a yeere since) ioine their forces with ours: and we for our parts haue in East India, that are coming home and here in the Countrey, aboue fiftie ships, double furnished with lusty Saylers, as also all other things fit for the War, and for so long a Voyage, and about ten strong Forts, whereof some we haue taken from the Enemy; the rest haue bene erected at the great cost and charges of the Company, and 50 made defensible, which for the securitie of our owne people and goods, as also for the defence of our confederates are sufficiently provided. Lastly, when they of Bantam began to lay an extraordinary toll upon our Nation, and caused vs to pay fiftie per cento custome, and yet we could not for all that obtaine licence of them, to build a Ware-house of stone and Morter, for the securitie of our Wares and Merchandizes, for that being of wood, it was twice burnt: we were constrained to transport our Trade in Bantam to another conuenient place, which is a firme Island, and hath many good and conuenient Hauens in it: for in my writings I finde, that siue yeeres past Mataram the great Emperour of Iaua, who is able to bring three hundred thousand men into the field, dwelling about one hundred miles distant from Bantam, had also sought to make some contract of alliance with vs, offering to deliuer vs Pepper toll free, and licence to 60 to build vs a Castle of Morter and Stone, with all things conuenient in Iapara, which was not well liked off by the King of Bantam and his Lieutenant. At last our Nation built a conuenient Towne about Iacatra, reasonably well fortified, and called it Batauia, where there are about one thousand houses of all Nations, there to Trafficke and deale in Merchandize, which is defended and governed by a Gouernour, Scout, and other Officers, for the maintenance of good gouernement and policy, and to administer Iustice vnto every one: and to the end that before all other things, Gods ser-

nice and honour might be maintained, whereby the blind Heathens might be brought out of their great darknesse, and young children taught the knowledge of the truth of Iesus Christ our Saviour: the Company diligently and carefully tooke order, to erect a Church and a Schoole therein, to the which end they sent thither certaine learned men, as at the first also they did, which with great benefit and increase, have taught the Heathens the Gospell of Christ in their owne language, as well as unto our men in their language: In such manner, that a King and a Prince of Amboyna, (where the Country people are much addicted unto deuillish and heathenish superstitions) sent two of their sonnes into these Countreys, with a Letter vnto the Prince of Orange, to haue them brought up at Schoole, and taught our language, and Christian Religion, that they might at their returne into East India, be a meane of planting the Church of Christ there in India, and learne how to defend their owne native Countrey.

The Relation of the Priest of Poolaroone, touching the beginnings and occasions of quarrells betwixt the Dutch and Bandanefes, written in the Malayan language with his owne hand, in a very faire Arabecke letter, and the sense rendred to me in English by M. Rob. Haies.

THis is the beginning of contentions betwixt the Hollanders and the Bandanefes. Two Hollanders ranne from them and turned Slammes or Mahumetans, and in the Priests house at Nero were slaine by three Hollanders, which in reuenge were slaine by the Natiues, who stayd not there, but in the fury slew other three Hollanders. This was ill done of them, to adde a double reuenge. Soone after the Generall of the Hollanders came thither with thirteene ships, and demanded satisfaction for the slaughter of his Countymen. The Bandanefes offered Diet (that is, the wonted satisfaction there vsed for man-slaughter, in money) for those last three. But the Generall answered, that he came not now to demand satisfaction, but to make peace and league with them, which was done. The next yeere came another Holland Generall, Peter williamson Verhucf, with fiftene ships into the Hauen of Nero, and asked leaue to set vp a Fort at Taniung Ratoe, or Ponit Ratoe, which the Bandanefes granted; but then he refused it, and demanded leaue to erect a Fort in another place at Taniung Minangis, which they refused. But he comming before the Castle of Nero, with his ship and Ordnance, terrified the inhabitants, which fled away, and he possessed the Castle, and fortified there. Then did the Bandanefes subtilly dissemble friendship, and shew the Generall, and fiftene Captaines, with others about one hundred men, in all.

A discourse of those warres, and the effects with their causes, briefly presented in a short Summarie.

See Fitzherberts Relation.

Gen. 6.

Hence the Warres betwixt the Dutch and Bandanefes: and hence the Warre so portentuous in the midst of peace (not betwixt the two Nations their Princes and States, which hold confederacie and amitie, but) betwixt our Merchants and theirs, our Mariners and theirs, our Sea-Commanders and theirs; the two Indian Companies in those parts (the guiltie of them) as it were growing fierce with infection of those fiercer Nations, changing their conditions more then their complexions, traueilling from themselves in so farre Navigations, putting off with their warmer clothes in that hotter Climate, their solid vertues, putting on Heathenish qualities with their commerce; putting vp fierce ferity with their hot Spices, putting out in great part humanitie, ciuilitie, Christianitie, in those various Currents and diuersified Seas, Shoals, Islands. And who can but be amused and amazed with wonder at such prodigious transformations, that so neere Neighbours in Region, (parted with a narrow Channell) neerer yet in long societie of Armes, (sealed with so many liues and deaths against one enemy,) and neerer then all names of neerenesse, in the neerest, dearest, and sweetest of names, Religion (both professing in substance one Reformation,) that this threefold Cord hath bene so easily broken; their reformation in Religion become a deformation of Religion amongst unbeleuing Ethniks and misbeleeuing Papists: their following the same Armes by sea and land become a trayning to greater harmes to each other by sea and land: that propinquitie of dwelling should make remotenesse of Neighbourhood; and what neither Portugall policies, nor Infidell treacheries could doe, themselves might doe, to their owne undoing with their owne hands; and the hearts of both Nations at home might bee in danger of dis-ioyning, by the dis-ioynted parts and Factions abroad; the sparkes of that fire of Hell seeming to breake out at Goun Apee with that terrible Earthquake before mentioned, vnto a more terrible heart-quake, there to set that world on fire, and here to endanger this. Sphaeres haue bene hereby turned to Speares; Wares (with addition of a canine letter) to Warres; Words (with a new hissing sound from that old Serpent) into Swords; Ships charge of so many Tunnes in freight: to discharge of so many Gunnes in fight; Merchants to Martialists, exchanging their gayn-good (or gayn-god) Mercury, for those payn-gods or deuils Mars and Mors, or that wonted function which Poeticall Diuinitie ascribed to Mercury, of patronising Merchandise, for that other of conducting Soules to Hell. Hercules hath brought vp Cerberus that Hell-monster, and set him vncained on the Indian shoares, with the three Internall Furies crowning his triple head; and hence haue we had this Hell vpon Earth. Such is Warre, and especially when the sonnes of Peace make Warres, when vnchristian Christians warre together: when the sonnes of God see these faire daughters of men (the riches of Infidels) and take them them Wiues where they lust (will not woo with trafficke, but ransh by force, nor make their Voyage Gen. 6. but a Conquest) is it any marvell if the issue prooue Giants, and the Earth be filled with violence? (Euen the Poets also fabled their Giants to be Neptunes Sonnes.) Hence is Commerce Diuine and humane empayred, Peace blowne vp, Charitie blowne out, Rights of neighbourhood, and Rites of hospitalitie exiled; Merchandise in unlawfull copulation with Mars procreating, I know not how, many Bastards; such are Vsurpations, Oppressions, Insultations, Iealouies, Treacheries, Inualions, Lies, Force, Fraud; and the rest of that restless blacke Gard, hatefull to God and man: Which here I haue historically expressed, not delighting in Tragedies, but (forsan & hæc olim meminisse iuuabit) it will be delightfull to some to haue escaped such disasters as haue swallowed so many others, and profitable to posteritie, to preuent like mischiefs in the like beginnings.

10 The beginning of this quarrell was first a strangeness; whereof Syuerion a Dutch Captaine is charged to be the author, whose vnciuill conditions infected the rest, and made them withdraw their familiarity with our Nation, which before they had kindly used. When this Sunne of Charitie, shining in louing Society, was set in this cloud of strangeness, stormie weather followed, and darknesse, and it was night, wherein all the beasts of the Forrest crept forth, the young Lions roared after their prey; the ghastly ghosts walked abroad in the darke, and the Rulers of the darknesse of this world amongst the children of Night and of darknesse domineered at pleasure. This Strangeness, as the darknesse of Hell, opened a passage to those Hellish fires following, and was the Wombe of those Hell-bred Monsters (as priuation is a preparation to habite, and corruption to generation) which were indeed many, but their 20 three Captaines were Drunkenness, Couetousness, and Pride (this that threefold Head of Cerberus, and triple Crowne of Furies, before mentioned.) In the first, Bacchus made a new expedition into the Indies, with a band of Racke, Rackapee, and other hot drinckes, displaying the Colours of the Flesh, oppugning the Spirit of GOD, and expugning the Reason of Man: whence so many Frayes, Braules, and sometimes Blowes, and Wounds; this Wild-fire or Ignis Græcus burning most in moisture whiles men played the Greekes. After this Vant-gard of Bacchus and the Flesh, followed the Maine battell lead by the World, arranged under the Colours indeed of Couetousness, which finding some sweets of gayne, with an euill eye grudged at any partners; cohibited them by undermining wiles, lies, pretences; prohibited by open Proclamations; inhibited by confiscations and surprizals, attended with Chains, Fetters, Prisons, Tortures, Famine, and manifold Deaths. GOD helpe the man that comes under the 30 power of Couetousness: an ouer-drie, euer-thirstie fire of Hell, kindled from thence, and burning thuber, still flaming on the Altar and before the Idol of the golden Calfe, and kindling there (that is in the couetous mans heart) such zeale of that deuotion, that he knowes not, hates, persecutes, whatsoeuer stands in his way; and if he be able, answers all obiections with Ius in armis, like another Alexander, chopping that knot insunder by force, which neither wit, learning, nor Religion could vntye. After these battalions of the Flesh and the World, the Deuill followes in the Rere, (though as Generall of the Field, he generally infuseth himselfe, totamque infusa per artus Mens agitat molem & magno ie corpore miscet) His Standard is aduanced by Pride, which hauing cast Angels out of Heauen, and Man out of Paradise, would dispossesse Mankind of Humanitie, Christians of Societie, the iust Merchant of his Trade, and the World of Iustice. Hence inordinate confusions, and the confused confounding orders of 40 contentions, (onely by pride doe men make contention) combustions, supplantings, neglects, contempts, scornes, indignations, vexations, persecutions, exultations, insultations, insolencies, cruelties, hells. He that puts off himselfe in drunkenness, and puts on the world in couetousness, shall lose both, and find the Deuill, readily blowing these sparkes of Hell with the Bellowes of Pride (the diuisions of Ruben are great thoughts of heart) till both he and they are encompassed with the unquenchable flames of Hell. Drunkenness began with Bantam frayes, (search the Authors in the former storie,) Couetousness proceeded with prohibition of profitable Trade, wherefoener it could hinder; and with the helpe of Pride, raped Soueraigntie, and reaped an enforced Iurisdiction, violently exercising the same against all gain-sayers.

50 This, as in other places, so principally in Banda. There the Stage of this Tragedie, and out of that burning hill this burning hell of Diabolicall fires first (as is said) seemed to breake forth; the first originall beginning with Apostacie (as you haue heard) in some Dutch Fugitives, which perhaps to escape deserved punishment, denied that which they neuer had, Faith. Secondly, others in vniust Iustice punishing the same with murder (expressing Piety with oppressing Impiety, blind Zeale being a hell fire indeed, a burning fire without any shining light.) Thirdly, the Bandaneles in their supposed sanctitie of Religion profaned, and Sanctuarie of their Priests house violated, see no meane in reuenge, and repent at leisure what was done in hasty furie. Fourthly, this being somewhat composed, and peace made (when Reuenge is a sleepe) Couetousness awakes, and in cold blood, by force (which intreatie could not procure) erects a Fort (that is, a Prison to the Libertie, a Store-house for the Wealth, and a Gibbet for the neckes of the Inhabitants,) that I omit the supposed sacriledge and wrongs to their Meskits and Sepulchres. In the 60 fift place, they unable to reuenge by force, borrow helpe of treacherous fraud (dolus an virtus quis in hotte requirit?) and kill Verhuf and the Dutch. This being pursued by Warres, is sodored a little while by Peace, but (for ought is extant) neuer kept on either side, and the Dutch continued Masters in their Holds, the Natiues elsewhere. Which yet prouing burthensome to them (as the Dutch know, other Nations haue done) they sought protection of the English, and upon Composition surrendered them.

selues to his Maiestie. The English name before distasted, was now detested and contemned of the Dutch, (who before had growne strange, and with whom bralls and factions had not beene strange, towards ours, with hindrance of Trade and the like) they seize our ships, goods, men, and vse them as you haue heard.

After which the English pretend by iust force to recover what by uniuert force they had lost, and Sir Thomas Dale long after *, with Captaine Pring and others sought by offence to defend: wherein their prowesse at first succeeded, but their misfortunes after exceeded, in the casuall burning of the Blacke Lion, and in the death soone after of a more heroike Lion, Sir Thomas Dale (whose valour hauing shined in the Westerne, was set in the Easterne India; so farre as Death can be a solstice to Honour, whose losse the losse of the Sunne, at Engano seemed to presage) after which followed the surprizall of foure ships at Tecoo, two at Patania, another in the Straits. Egregiam vero laudem! may some say, for Men of Warre so prepared to take their opportunities of dispersed, busied, unprouided Merchants. I would I could not adde, spolia ampla refertis, except in another sense. But the Companies of both Nations, and their wiser Gouvernours at home came to a composition, and agreed on Articles of Peace, which was on both sides there (alreadie wearied) receiued with ioy, and published with approbation. All this notwithstanding, in the midst of this calme and faire weather, there arose a new storme at Banda, which as a beautifull and rich Bride was enuied to English Armes, and seemeth by the cryes on both sides, to haue beene lately ransished from her new Husband, unarmed, unarmed, I know not whither by greater force or fraud; or whither might cause greater indignation, the seizing on the English fellows and friends the Bandanefes, with their owne goods and bodies also, casting downe their Colours and Ordnance, and abusing their persons, in one place; or the letting stand in another, their Fort, as a Cage to be showne in derision, when the Bird was fled or stolne away. This now remaynes, that violent things remayne not and are not usually permanent; and (we doubt not) the bright beames of his Maiesties prudence and iustice, with the mature wisdom of Prince Maurice his Excellencie, and the Illustrious Lords Gouvernours of the vniued Prouinces, shining on those troubled Indian waters, will like the Great GOD out of darknesse bring light, and chastise the wrong-doers; nor will permit Personall quarrels to become Nationall, or Indian bralls of Merchants to become European broyles for Souldiers, but cause the remotest Members to communicate in the Heads amitie and soundnesse. This they will doe, this they doe; how soone? and it is done, and Amantium iræ amoris redintegratio. Nulla salus bello, pacem te polcimus omnes. Amen.

THat it may appeare that we doe not impute the former wrongs to the Holland Nation in generall, nor seeke to make a State-quarrell with the States, Lords, Gouvernours, and the estate of that Republike; but attribute the same to priuate spirits and mis-demeanure of some in authoritie and place of command in the Indies, I haue added a piece of a Booke translated out of the Dutch.

* The former part of the booke which proueth this I haue omitted, as lesse to our purpose.

Ill gouernment of the Dutch Indian Commanders.

Seeking their owne priuate benefit.

SO* as the Adventurers haue gained nothing neere the simple interest of sixe and a quarter per cent. per ann. and ordinary assurance. By this may be gathered what profits the Adventurers haue in-40

Now as concerning the gouernment, it is a thing certaine, that be it good or bad, the profits arise accordingly, for we daily see and find that by negligence and ill gouernment, a great estate is soone brought to nought: and on the contrary through a good diligent and prouident gouerning, great gaines arise out of a small stocke or meanes: whereas during all this Patent, so little profit ariseth, though great gaine is ord narily to be made in the East Indies, so as hereby may well be concluded that the same must be so, by reason of the directing or gouerning the same.

Now as concerning the well gouerning: First of all, is required a good vnderstanding and experience, which I perswade my selfe hath beene and is in many of the Maiors without all doubt, but that is not enough, except there be care & diligence withall. But what care and diligence can be expected from them, who are so continually employed in their publike Office and functions, besides their particular affaires, that they can scarce once or twice in a weeke, spend a few houres in this weightie businesse, which indeed hath need of a constant and continuing sale according as the greatnesse and importancie thereof requireth? &c. Further, is required in euery Maior that he by all meanes seeke to procure the common good of that which is committed to his charge, and not his particular: but how or wherein haue they hitherto sought the common good of the Companie, so long as they take a libertie to sell the Companies goods vnto themselues, in which sale they no doubt seeke their owne particular profit, and not the Companies. At sometimes one Maior buying the Companies goods of another Maior; and at another time it happeneth quite contrarie, viz. that he which was at first the buyer, is now become the seller to him that formerly was the seller himselfe: one may well coniecture how these things are thus carried, by such, who it may be are not so honest as they should be; what hindrance hereby befalleth the Adventurers, and what profits to the Maiors, one may well coniecture by the small profits which the Adventurers haue made, and the great wealth which the Maiors haue attained vnto. When as the Maiors haue bought great quantitie of the Companies goods for themselues, is to be imagined what kind of Aduise they will send to the Indies concerning such goods as themselves haue bought, & whether their aduise shal not tend to their particular profits, &c. For might one peruse their Bookes, no doubt thereby would be found, that many amongst them haue little or no aduventure at all with the Company, and it would plainly appeare; that their provision or factory concerns them neerer then the profit of the stocke they haue there to respect; and therefore doe readily resolue to the setting forth of great shipping or fleetes, when as fewer and smaller would haue beene sufficient for Conquest, and fewer for trade from Port to Port: whereof that fleet which went through the straight of Magellane was one, which fleet alone did charge the Company with more then a Capitall. It is likewise the practise of these kind of Maiors, (knowing the choice to be in their owne powers) to prefer their friends and kindred to the gouernment, & excluding those that are great Aduenturers, take oftentimes such as are none, but such as when they stand in nomination to be, doe then begin to buy conditionally so they are chosen, then their buying to stand: but if not, then the bargaine to be voyd: what good seruice the Company is to expect by such nimbling may well be coniectured. Besides, they oftentimes preferre their friends, to be sent as Committees and other Officers to the Indies, although very unfit thereto, whereas it highly concerneth the Company, to haue both honest and fit persons there, for hardly can it be imagined the great wrong which the Company haue sustained, thorow the hauing so basely vild, and proudly insolent Committees in the Indies. Further, what losse the Company is put vnto, by the building of so great and costly ships (each Chamber strining which shall make the greatest ship, and all for great stowage, to cause the greater returne to be brought into their chamber, thereby to procure to themselves the greater factory or provision) cannot well be imagined: for as well might it be done with lesser, and ships not so costly, and so the more stocke to be employed in Trade, or otherwise to free themselves of their interest money which great ships, are partly vied to carry wood and stone in the Indies for the building of the Fort Iacatra, some being worn and spent there, so as indeed one might haue done as well betwene this and the Indies, with halfe as many great ships. Also many summes of gold haue beene spent in the making of diuers costly Forts & Castles in the Indies, the wals being all of stone, being King-like works, whereas to haue made them of Earth, as they are here in our Countrey the Netherlands, had beene as usefull for keeping the Trade from other Committees of forraigne Lands: so had this needlesse charge beene employed in Trade, might haue aduanced the Company more then a Capitall. Also the Company hath freely indured some losse, by reason of the complaint of those persons, who hauing done the Companie good seruice, could obtaine little or no Salary for the same. Whereby is befallen that some haue put themselves into the seruice of other Companies of forraigne Lands, &c.

The Maiors haue little or no aduventure with the Company.

Extracts of a Iournall of a Voyage to Surat and to Iasques in the Persian Gulfe, set forth by the East India Societie of Merchants: wherein were employed foure new ships; the London, of eight hundred Tunnes, and therein ANDREW SHILLING chiefe Commander of the whole Fleet; WILLIAM BAEFIN Master; the Hart, of five hundred Tunnes, RICHARD BLITHE Master; the Roe Bucke, of three hundred, RICHARD SWAN Master; the Eagle, of two hundred and eightie, CHRISTOPHER BROWNE Master. Written by RICHARD SWAN.

THe sixe and twentieth of Februarie, 1619. all our Fleet set saile from Tilbury Hope. The twentieth of Aprill, 1620. about eight degrees North latitude, we begin to haue a taste of the Turnados. From the Downes hither we might alwayes haue carried a top gallant saile. The ninth of May, we crost the Equator. We would haue crossed it more Easterly, but the Current and Winds would not permit. The tenth of Iune, wee saw great store of Fowle. And on the three and twentieth, wee had sight of Soldania Road, and anchored there the next day. Here wee found the Lion homeward bound, and nine Dutch ships bound for Bantam, their Commander Nicholas van Baecum a Gentleman, which by report liued seuen yeeres in Oxford. After kind Sea-salutes, the next morning the Lion and the Dutch departed, each their way; and the same euening arriued the Schidam of Delph outward bound, which being suspected, by both Admiralls, the Master was sent for, his Commission examined, and good satisfaction giuen. The third of Iuly was made a solemne publication of his Maiesties Title to Soldania: and on the seuenth King Iames his Mount erected. The three and twentieth, I had a Cable of eleuen inches spoiled with other hurt, and the Hart had a great deliuerance, two of her best Anchors breaking at once: and the Eagle broke two Cables. The five and twentieth, we set saile.

From the eight and twentieth of September, to the first of October, we were hindred eleuen or twelue minutes euery day by a Current to the South latitude, from one to five degrees thirtie two minutes North. The seuenth of October, latitude nine degrees and fiftie minutes North. These foure and twentie houres, I haue come ouer the Iland Rasif (one of the Mamales) as it is placed in my Card. Note, that euery day since we were in sixe degrees North latitude, we haue seene land Fowles, as Castrells, Quailles, Martins, Butter-flyes, but not any Sea Fowle. The nineteenth, we were due West from Batecala sixe leagues off, depth two and twentie fathoms ozie sand. The twentieth, at sixe in the morning, wee were thwart of Goa foure leagues off, the latitude is fiftene degrees and thirtie minutes, rather lesse then more. The sixe and twentieth, we put into Dabul Road in seuentene degrees and thirtie foure minutes, and stayed till the second of Nouember, our men refreshed and recouered, and the two ships for Persia well provided. The sixt, the Hart and Eagle, eight leagues from the high Land of Saint Iohns, tooke their leaue of vs. The seuenth, latitude twentieth degrees sixteene minutes. Now are we truly West from Damon sixe leagues off, depth eightene fathoms. The ninth in the morning, we anchored in the outter road of Swally, where we found the Wappen van Zeland, a ship of one thousand Tunnes. At our comming shee tooke in her flage and saluted the London with three peeces, and the Roe Bucke with two. I was sent on shore and found Master Thomas Kerridge President, Master Iames and Master Hopkinson, whom I brought aboard. The next day, a consultation was holden for our speedie dispatch after the Hart and Eagle; foure Portugall Gallions attending at Ormuz or Iasques Road for their surprisall. The nineteenth, after businesse dispatched, we set saile towards Iasques. The one and twentieth we descried a ship, which yeelded without resistance; Her name, Nostra Sennora de Morces, neere two hundred Tunne, come from Muscatie, bound for Chaul, in her two and fortie Arabian Horses, being her principall lading (as built for that purpose) the residue Dates and Raisins: the Capitaines name Francisco Mirando.

HONDIVS his Map of Persia.

The fift of December, latitude foure and twentie degrees fiftie five minutes, we met the Hart and Eagle comming from Iasques towards Surat, not being sufficient to encounter the Portugall forces there attending, to ruine our Masters Persian Trade. Thus happily reioyned wee made haite towards Iasques to accomplish our designes. The eight, at their owne earnest sollicitation, we set all the Portugalls and Moores on land, except some Sea-men Moores whom we detayned for our seruice, and the Pilot which misdoubting hard measure, intreated to stay. The tenth, the Lords Supper was administred aboard the London. The twelfth, the men who voluntarily vnder-tooke to burne the Prize aboard the Portugalls Admirall, were put aboard her in the night. The thirteenth and fourteenth, the wind against vs. The fifteenth, we had sight of the East Point 10 of Land in Iasques Road, which hath vpon it a Tombe or an old square flat House, bearing West North-west, by Compasse twelue miles off. So then from Diu Head to this Point, I make the longitude by the plaine ordinarie Sea Chart, nine degrees fiftie five minutes and three fifth parts, and by Mercators proiection, ten degrees and one and fiftie minutes. From this place wee might discern the Portugall men of Warre set out from Lisbone; whose Fleet consisted of two Portugall Gallions one bigger then the London; and two Flemmish ships, one as bigge as the Hart; the other lesse then the Eagle: Their Generall Ruy Frere de Andrado, Iohn Borasio Vice-admirall, the Flemmings were commanded by Antonio Musquet and Baltazar de Chanes.

The sixteenth in the morning, our Admirall with the Masters of his Fleet went aboard the Prize, and carried two Barrells of powder, some Tarre, and other combustible prouisions, intending with her to lay the Portugall Admirall thwart the halse to burne together. Thus fitted, we 20 bore vp with the men of Warre, but it fell calme, and the Current set vs so neere them that they reached vs with their Ordnance. All night we kept vnder saile. And in the seuenteenth, being by reason of the Land-turne to leeward of them; they weighed and made towards our Fleet, which attended their comming, albeit they had and carefully kept the benefit of the wind. About nine the fight began, which continued nine houres without intermission. In the afternoone (a fine gentle Westerly Sea-wind blowing, and we to windward of them) their Admirall, whether of necessitie to repaire some defect about his Rudder, or of policy for some conceited stratagem, anchored; and to the Eastward of him, his Vice-Admirall and the greater Flemming, the lesser to leeward of all stopping his leakes. Now were wee in great hope of our fire designe, which yet being too soone fired and forsaken of those which had it in charge, prooued frustrate, driuing cleere of all their ships to their reioycing, our disgrace and our Employers losse.
 30 We seeing them abide at anchor, and keeping the wind of them, turning to and againe close ahead of them; raked them, especially their Admirall, thorow and thorow, fore and after, with all our broad sides, receiuing from them only their Prow and Bow Peeces. Out of whom as I passed to the North, two vnfortunate shots cut a-sunder the Robuckes weather-leech ropes of her foresaile and fore top-saile in the middle depth of both sailes, which renting we could not make her stay, but were inforced for reparation of our sailes to beare vp to leeward betwixt them & the shoare. In which time their three greatest ships played vpon vs with their whole broad sides, yet, God be prayfed, with lesse hurt then I could haue imagined. Thus hauing compassed the three last mentioned ships, and luffing to re-joyne with our owne Fleet (which all this while holding the benefit of the wind played vpon the Portugals with their great Ordnance, as fast 40 as with so many Muskets) I had gotten to wind-ward of the smaller Flemming: who standing off as I did, vntill he had brought the fired ship directly betweene him and me, then turned taile and steered with all the sailes he could make right afore the wind, alongst the shoare to the Eastward: whom to rescue, the other three set saile, now so gentle, that the Hart passing along their broad sides; receiued from some of them few, from others none, either great or small shot. But our Fleet at present reunited, desisted their further chase, the darknesse of the night, and the generall wearinesse, challenging a surcease from so toylsome a worke: and anchored after midnight in their (before) vsuall Road.

In this fight the London and Hart receiued very little hurt in their huls and tackling; lesse or none amongst their men. The Eagles mayne Mast was shot in five places, whereof foure quite 50 thorow: and one Iohn Banckes lost his right arme. I in the Robucke, had one Edward Browne slaine with a great shot thorow his head; a piece of whose skull together with some splinters of the same shot, wounded Master Thomas Waller one of my Mates in the fore-head to the losse of his left eye: also Iohn Phenix and Robert Hopworth lost the vse of their right hands. Neuer (God be pray fed) did I heare of so little hurt in so long a fight, as we had on our parts. I cannot truly particularise their hurts, by report of our Merchants, Iohn Borasio their Vice-Admirall and another Captaine were slaine; with thirtie or forty Portugals out of their Admirall (for Moores they account not in the number of their men) the rest vnknowne.

The eighteenth in the morning, wee had sight of the Portugals at anchor ten miles to the East 60 of vs: they had the wind faire to come to vs, but did not. Whereupon we had a generall conference, whether it might be fitter with the first of the Sea-turne (beginning vsuall about noon) to stand with them and try it out for the Mastery (before they could haue supply from Ormuz or Muskat, or expected ayde from Goa) or else to make saile for Iasques Road, there to land our monies and goods (for surprisall whereof they fought and we defended) and this later was concluded. Thither the London attayned that night: the rest rode a league without.

The two and twentieth, descrying the Port Galliones open of the Road, to come in as wee supposed with the Sea turne, we halted and stood off with them. They steered directly towards Ormuz, till they met with two or three Frigats from thence with supply of men and munition, which hauing shipped, they made toward vs but soone repented, and clapt vpon a tacke, and till the eight and twentieth, were either to windward, or so at anchor that without disadvantage wee could not attempt them. Wee tryed on Christmasse day, but were inforced backe with a present encounter of a gust, which made some Blackes aboard vs, say, that the Port had brought a Witch from Ormuz to serue them with faire winds. On Innocents day perceiuing the drift of our Fabius Cunctator, we took the oportunitie of an Easterly gale, weighed and put things in order for fight. The London and Hart next anchored within a Cables length and halfe from them vpon their broad sides, and so indured the hottest burthen of this second dayes fight. For no sooner were they at anchor, but it fell calme and so continued all day, insomuch that the Robucke and Eagle (who had steered neerer the shoare with intent to anchor, one vpon the Bow of the Port-Admirall, the other on the Bow of their Vice-Admirall) beeing Easterne, could not with any diligence come to doe any seruice in halfe an houres space. And no sooner were wee within the leuell range of our Ordnance from them, then (there beeing not a breath of wind, and the current against vs) we were driuen to anchor or driue further off. But our broad sides once brought vp, the great Ordnance from our whole Fleet playd so fast vpon them, that had our mens knowledge equalled their resolutions, not one of them had escaped vs. How euer, loth to receiue a Supper as hot as their Dinner, at three a clocke they cut their Cables and droue with the tyde (then setting Westerly) vntill they were out of our reach. Then came their Frigats to them (which the day before had domineered with their Musicke, pendants and flagges alongst the shoare, now with a fitter taske) to tow them away all mangled and torne. For their Admirall in the greatest fury of the fight, was inforced to heeld his ship to stop his leakes, his mayne-top-mast ouer-board, and the head of his mayne Mast. The greater Flemming had both his top-masts and part of his bow-sprit shot away: the lesse hauing neuer a shrowd standing, neuer a top-mast.

The Vice-Admirall (which both dayes did vs most hurt) escaped best, hauing commonly this day one or other of their ships twixt him and vs. We kept them company all night in hope the next morning to haue giuen them their pass-ports, but surueying our shot and finding small store left (notwithstanding that by some happy mistake, the Eagle had a double proportion) and considering the Voyage which we had to performe, we returned: and left them glad men, the two greater ships towing the two smaller at their sterne. Their slayne I heard not: Ours lost in the London slaine, Henry Crane, Iohn Gore; our Admirall and Peter Robinson dyed of their wounds afterwards. In the Hart, Walter Danie, William Hall, Iohn Muskat, and Edmund Okely were wounded but recovered. The great shot of seuerall sorts spent, in the London, one thousand three hundred eightie two. Hart, one thousand twentie foure. Robucke, eight hundred and fiftene. Eagle, eight hundred, in all foure thousand twentie one. Captaine Richard Blith according to the order (opening the white Boxe N<sup>o</sup> 1.) succeeded our worthy Admirall: my selfe removed into the Hart, Christopher Browne to the Robucke, and Thomas Taylor was made Master of the Eagle.

The fourteenth of Ianuary, hauing had for eight and fortie houres precedent continuall extremitie of raine (wind or raine being vsuall here for three or foure dayes at the change and full, otherwhiles faire weather) we set saile from Iasques, where we had dispatched our businesse, to Surat, where we arriued the first of February following: nothing in our passage occurring worth recitall, sauing that the seuen and twentieth of Ianuary, wee surprized betwixt Diu and the Sand heads, a small ship of warre called Nostra Seniors de Remedio, of burthen one hundred tunnes, Francisco de Sylua Captaine, with thirtie fine Portugals, and twentie fine Moores for Sailers set out by the Captaine of Diu to gard their small Merchants ships from the Malabars. The men were dismissed, and the shippe kept for our vse, and called the Andrew. Shee had in her neyther meate, money, nor commodities, and scarce so many poore sutes as backes.

The seuen and twentieth of February, we began to take in goods. The fift of March, the Eagle was sent downe to guard the Princes Iuncke, and to hinder her further lading, till free leaue and libertie should be granted for passage of Carts with goods, and other our prouisions, which haue beene restrayned fixe or seuen dayes by the grating Gouvernour of Ulpore: by which meanes no Cotton Wooll could come downe till our ship was full laden forward on. The sixteenth, vpon notice that the Agra Caffila was robbed by the Decan Armie, resolution was taken to seeke restitution vpon the ships of the said Decan Prince and his Confederates in the action; and the Red Sea intended for our ships wintering. The nineteenth, the Prince his Iuncke was dismissed, the Gouvernour of Surat hauing granted vnder his hand to supply our wants of Powder and shot for our money, with redresse for many other discourtesies.

Since

Since the five and twentieth of March, till the sixt of Aprill, 1621. the windes haue beene outwardly, viz. South and South South-west and West, and from noone till mid-night blowne so hard that the great stiffe by the shoare permitted no businesse to bee done, except on the last quarter ebbe and first after flood. The seuenth, we set sayle. The ninth, the Eagle and Dutch Pinnasse called the good Fortune, departed our Company, consigned for Achen and Bantam: the London, Hart, Robucke and Andrew intended for the Red Sea, if not too late.

The first of May, the Andrew and our Boats surprized the Saint Antonio a ship of two hundred tunnes, which we called the May-flower: her principall lading Rice taken in at Barcelor, whence she went to Goa, and the eight of Aprill, had set saile for Muscat and Ormuz. By these 10 we vnderstood that Ruy Frere de Andrado, was busie in repaying his foure ships at Ormuz: C. that Don Emanuell de Assaredo, is departed about fiftie dayes past from Goa in his succour with two Gallions; one whereof is the same in which the Vice-Roy was personally, when hee fought with Captaine Domtons Fleet. The seuenth, in a calme we surprized the Iacinta small ship built of a Frigate, from Mozambique bound for Goa: wee called her the Prim-rose. Thence to the thirteenth, winds variable, calmes, raines. The May-flower hindred vs much: and the Pilots either were malicious or blind: whereupon we resolved to trust to our owne endeauours to find an anchoring place, whence we might discouer some conuenient Road for our safe riding till the strength of the Monson were past, we resolved for Macera.

A Prize.

Macera.

The second of June, we descryed Land and anchored in seenteene fathomes three miles off 20 shoare: here we found in foure or five Pits, three quarters of a mile from the waters side, water in abundance. I had fortie tunne out of one Well, which we rolled downe in Hogheads: the people tractable, little other refreshing. The latitude twentie degrees twentie minutes, variation seenteene North-westing. The Date Trees by the watering place bare North-west by West, the other end of the Island North-east halfe East five leagues off.

The twelfth wee set saile for the North-east end of Macera, and in the afternoone anchored in seuen fathomes in a faire Bay, cleane ground, a fast blacke ozie sand, the North-east point bearing South halfe a league off: the landing place West South-west two miles off: the Norther part of the Bay North by West foure miles off. The latitude twentie degrees thirtie minutes, variation seenteene North-west. You may ride in this Bay from five to twelue, in what depth you 30 will: an excellent, hungry, cold and healthfull place: but a tumbling, rolling Sea for ships: fresh water enough to be had in Pits digged, but except at the vsuall landing place, very ill to boate: yeelding no better refreshing then the first, a few Goats and Lambes in trucke for Cannekeens.

Whiles the Hart and Robucke were here resolved to stay till the Monsons fury were past; on the nineteenth, we sent Abdelauie an inhabitant of Macera, with Letters in quest for the Admirall as farre as Soar, which returned the sixt of Iuly, with Letters of their being there at Soar, seuen leagues within Cape Rosalgate; their difficult watering at Tene, surprisall of Simons the Chirurgeon, and the Preachers Boy on Land by the Portugals and Moors, &c.

Cape Rosalgate or Rosahalt (so the Natiues
call it)

The sixt of August, the Hart and Robucke set saile from Macera: the eight in the euening we anchored by our Admirall: this Road differing from Macera, in beeing calme, vsuall cleere, 40 and by heat taking away the stomacke. The fifteenth set saile. The first of September a Boate of Chaul came aboard the Robucke, &c.

The one and twentieth of Nouember, our Fleet set saile from Swally, and anchored before the Barre of Surat. The seuen and twentieth at noone, in latitude twentie, and by iudgement twentie eight leagues from neereft Land: we tooke leaue of the Iasques Fleet, consisting of the London, Jonas, Whale, Dolphine, Lion, Rose, Shilling, Richard and Robert.

The Iasques Fleet of nine ships.

The first of Ianuary we found our selues betweene Iohanna and Mayotta. The nine and twentieth we anchored in Soldania Road: hauing beene from Surat hither nine weekes and three dayes, blessed be God for our safe and speedie passage. Heere wee watered, washed, fished in the Riuer, buried our Letters, bought three Cowes, one Calfe, foure sheepe, all vnsauourie meate.

The third of February, we set saile: the nineteenth, anchored at Saint Helena. Heere wee 50 found the Wappen and the Holland Dutch ships: this last fell on fire the two and twentieth, with her Cloues taken in Greene at Amboyna. There was another small Dutch ship. They arriued eleuen dayes before vs, and cannot in ten dayes more discharge and relade their damnified Cloues. The eight and twentieth, we set saile from Saint Helena: and the seuenth of Iune, 1622. anchored in the Downes.

For further satisfaction touching the fight, I haue added this Letter or Relation sent to the Company from the Chiefe of the Fleet.

Relation of the fight of foure English ships with foure Portugall ships, two Gallies, and ten Frigats in the Gulfe of Persia, in the Monethes of December and January, 1620.

THe London and the Robucke arriuing at Surat the ninth of December, there vnderstood that the Portugals had sent into the gulfe of Persia an Armado, purposely to attempt the English shipping at their comming thither, whereupon it was forth-with resolved by the English Factors at Surat, & the Commanders of the aboue-named two ships, that they should apply themselves to the gulfe of Persia, to re-ioyne themselves with two other English ships, namely, the Hart and the Eagle which parted from the London and Robucke, before their comming to Surat, and were gone directly toward Iasques in the said gulfe of Persia, and so the said London and Robucke set saile from Surat towards Iasques, the nineteenth day of Nouember, and the first day of December following, they met with the Hart and the Eagle, about eightie leagues short of Iasques, where all the foureships ioyning together, they receiued most certaine intelligence by a Portugall Frigat which they met, that the Portugall Armado consisting as aforesaid of foure Gallions, two Gallies and about tenne Frigats, were attending them at the Easter end of Iasques Road, where the English ships must come, and so went along towards the same, where the sixteenth day they found the said Portugall Armado, consisting in these particulars before named the Generall or chiefe Commander whereof is named Ruy Frere de Andrado, whom themselves call the Pride of Portugall, the Vice-Admirall Iohn Boralio, and Inhabitant of Ormuz, and late Admirall of those Seas, of the other two ships the Commanders were Anthony Musquet and Balthazar di Chanes, this day proued calme, so that it was night ere they came in shot one of another.

The seuenteenth of December, being the Lords day, wee intended to haue sanctified his seruice being vnder saile a league to Sea-board of them, but about eight of the clocke with the Land turne, they weighed anchor and bore vp with vs, for whom (albeit they had the winde) we shortned saile and stayed neere about nine of the clocke, we ioyned fight with them, which continued vntill the darknesse of the night iustly challenged an end to so long and weary a work, they (like a kind Host to Strangers) leauing vs their anchoring place to lodge in, and retired some ten or eleuen miles to the Eastward, there to amend and repaire themselves; wee cannot truly particulate vnto you their hurts and losses in this fight, saue by reports of our Merchants, that Iohn Boralio their Vice-admirall, and the Captaine of one of the other ships, were flaine, with some thirtie or fortie men out of their Admirall, the rest yet vnknowne. The losse or hurt of our men in your own ships, the inclosed Note of this seuenteenth present, will make manifest. Thus for a time we were not disturbed by our enemies, though by contrary winds we could not get into the vsuall Road before the twentieth current. The twentie one and twentie two, the most part of your goods was landed, and descrying the Portugall Gallions open of the Road, to come in, as we supposed, with the Sea-turne, we therefore set saile and stood off with them, but after some small shew of bearing vp with the Sea-wind, they clapt vpon a Lake, and were so fortunate vntill the eight and twentieth day, that either they being to windward we could not come at them, or else at anchor wee could not, without our great disadvantage, meddle with them.

The eight and twentieth, being Innocents day, both Fleets riding at the Easter Points of the Road, not a mile distant one from the other; we omitted no opportunitie to giue battell to our wary protracting enemies, who, as by his working appeared, if hee could haue auoyded fight, and by lingring delayes, and the benefit of his Frigats, haue hindred vs from the prosecution of your Persian designments, he attained vnto the full height and scope of his employments.

But about one of the clocke, the Lord sent vs a pretty gale, our Fleet weighed and put all things in order for to fight, the London and Hart next anchored within a Cables length from them vpon their broad sides, and so indured the hottest brunt of this two dayes fight, for no sooner were they at anchor but it fell calme and so continued all day, insomuch that the Roe Bucke and Eagle, who being somewhat a sterne and steering neerer the shoare, with intent to anchor one vpon the Bowe of the Portugall Admirall, and the other vpon the Bowe of the Vice-admirall, could not notwithstanding all diligence vsed, come to doe any seruice in halfe an houres space, but being come neere anchored, and all our ships so fitted to keepe our broad sides full vpon them. The great Ordnance out of our whole Fleet played so fast vpon them, that about three of the clocke in the afternoone, not willing to indure so hot entertainment, they cut their Cables and with the Tyde droue downe from vs, vntill being without reach of our Ordnance, their Frigats came and towed them away wonderfully mangled and torne, for their Admirall in the hottest of the fight was inforced to heeld their ship to stop his leakes, his mayne top-mast ouer board, and the head of his mayne mast; the third ship both his top-mast, mizon mast, and part of his bow sprit were shot away, the lesser ship had neuer a shroud left standing, nor neuer a top-mast; the Vice-admirall escaped best, for most commonly hee had one or other of their ships

- ships betweene him and vs. All this night we kept them companie; with hope the next morning to haue giuen them all, or some of them, their Passe-port; but surueying our shot and finding no great store left, and withall considering the great weight and import of the voyage we had to performe, we resolued our returne to Iasques, for the speedy dispatching of our buinesse in hand, thanking God for putting our enemies to flight before vs, of whom vnto the present writing hereof we haue heard no newes, neither are any of them arriued at Ormuz or Muscat, as our Merchants report, only it is rumored by some Cassaires, who by swimming escaped ashore, that Ruy Frere de Andrado was slaine. All your ships, prayes bee God, remayne seruiceable, and not aboue fūe men slaine on our part in these two long and great battailes, and not many wounded, as by the List of their names here inclosed will appeare. Amongst whom our worthy Admirall and kind Commander, receiued a great and grievous wound through his left shoulder with a great shot, which hurt hee with such courage and patience vnder-went, that gaue great hope to vs all of his much wished recouerie; but hauing besides his former wound two of his yppermost ribs on the left side broken; the sixt of Ianuarie, he departed this life, shewing himselfe (as euer before) a resolute Commander, so in his passage through the Gates of death, a most willing, humble, constant, and assured Christian, his body we intended to haue carried to Surat, and there according to his deserts to haue performed his last funerall rights, the Chyrurgians confidently promising by embalming and waxe-cloth to preserue him without annoyance thither, but notwithstanding this cost and their promise, his body, in regard of his great wound, prouing noysome, we were enforced to bury him at Iasques, which was effected the seuenth Current, with what respect, solemnitie, and decency the time required.

* This proved not true.

- 30 WHiles we are publishing these things there are late newes of English Persian occurrents, as namely, that nine English ships haue bene in those Persian Seas, and together with the Persian haue paid part of their Portugall debt: Chisman in three dayes being taken, the spoile diuided betwixt them. Also the Bassa of Xeras helped by the English both in setting ouer his men, and in beleagring the Towne, hath in two dayes taken the Towne of Ormuz, the Castle holding out; though little hope remayned of it, their water and all hope of helpe being taken from them. The English haue won much honour and reputation of valour: and if they take it, (besides sharing the spoile) are to haue the Castle committed to their keeping. They are said also to haue taken a rich ship, called the Mosambique.

- 40 Part of a Letter written from M<sup>r</sup>. Robert Smith to his brother Henrie Smith, relating of a rare attempt and exploit of a small English Pinnaffe, in taking a Portugall ship.

- 50 IN our passage from Ioanna to this place, we lost sight of the Rose and Richard, but within sixe dayes after, the Richard came to vs with a Portugall prize at her sterne, which shee had taken that night we lost her company. It is a wonder to tell it. The Richard being a Pinnaffe of about twentie Tunnes, manned with fourteene Men and Boyes, and hauing but two small Falconets in her, and the Portugall of two hundred and fiftie Tunnes, with two hundred and fiftie in her, whereof seuentie were Portugalls, the rest Mesticos and Slaves: the Richard comming up with them plyed her demi-Dogs so well, that in the shooting off twentie shot, it pleased God they killed their Captayne, which the rest perceiving stroke all their sailes amayne, and like tall men came aboard the Richard, sixe at a time, where the Master caused them to be bound: but fearing to haue too many aboard, though bound, he sent a terrible command to the rest aboard, that vpon their liues they should depart their ship into their great Boat, which they very valiantly performed, and left their ship to the utter disgrace of themselves and all their Nation, &c.

THe fourth of October last past, a yeere since my arriual at Spahan, your then Agent Master Thomas Barker was then aduising for England, mentioning of my arriual, and also of his appoint-appointment to resend me so soone as he heard of the safe arriual of your shippes, but it pleased the Lord in the meane-time to take him from vs by a sudden death. Whose appointment was the first cause I omitted to write to your Honors; the second, a long & tedious iourney by lets on the Volga, and also in this Land. The third cause, my Conuoy taken from me, and not suffered to passe but with the Kings Carauan of Boats, for that the report was, the Cossackes did purpose to make fight with the Carauan, which proued the contrary. It would be too long to trouble your patience to relate at large the accidents in this my iourney, wherein little happened worthy your notice or expectation, or my hopes to effect your desires. I will therefore briefly make relation thereof.

The eighth of May, 1619. I set off from Yeraslaue, and arriued at Astracan the sixteenth of June, from whence I purposed to take my iourney and passage for Turkie, and from thence by the Emperours Post to passe the Cherkasses Countrey, and so for Spahan by Land. This passage I could not proceed of, but with the Emperours Carauan of provisions which would not bee in twelue dayes: in the interim, I enquired when the Guilan Busses would goe. The Masters and Merchants promised fourteene dayes at furthest; so I resolved to passe in them.

The tenth of Iuly, I set off from Astracan, and by occasion of the Boats stay, to be cleered by the Searchers, it was the fifteenth dicto, our comming aboard the Busse.

No Compasse
vied in the Caspian Sea.

The eighteenth dicto, the Busse set sayle steering South till we made the Persian shoare, they vse no Compasse but direct their course by the Sunne, Moone and Stars.

Tempest.

The fixe and twentieth dicto, we made land, hauing great tempest of wind at North-east; the land lying South and West; at euening the wind came of the land still increasing: the next day the Busse lost her sayle from the yard, and for to succour her they hung vp figge baskets, couerlets and Cow hides, throwing great store of the lading ouer-board; the first all our prouision, after the goods: this night we had small rest, the next morning the wind was out of the Sea, and it pleased the Lord to bring vs in betweene a small lland and the mayne land, and both vs and the Vessell saued.

Callofshera.

The eight and twentieth, the Master and most of vs went on land, the place called Callofshera, no Inhabitants: the wind increased still, that vntill the first of August, the Boate could not row aboard the Busse. This day the Merchants vnladed their goods, and the fift dicto, wee procured Hories for Shomakee, and arriued there the ninth dicto.

Shomakee.
Bocka.
Guilan.
Ardeuil.
Spahan.

The Busse bound her selfe for a Port called Bocka, to lade Neftere she proceeded for Guilan, the nineteenth of August, I departed with the Cafala from Shomakee, & arriued at Ardeuil, the nine & twentieth of the same. The ninth of September, with the Cafala I departed Ardeuil, & arriued at Spahan, the fourth of October, 1619. thus in brieft you may please to vnderstand of my long iourney from Yeraslaue to Spahan in Persia, no lesse then fise monethes, which, no doubt, might be done in eleuen or twelue weekes, if no lets in the way, as in these subsequents I shall declare.

Three passages to Persia from Musco.

The first passage is at the opening the Riuer Volga, from Yeraslaue to Astracan, and so to Turkie by water, which may bee done in fise and twentie dayes, and from Turkie by the Emperours Conuoy to Derbent or Shomakee, Cities vnder this King, and from those Cities to Ardeuil and Casbin with Cafala, and from Casbin as they please to Spahan, the way cleere, and may bee effected, as abouesaid.

The second passage is to come off from Yeraslaue the first of Iune vntill the tenth dicto, and if no let may be at Astracan, in eightene or twentie dayes, in good time to take the first passage in the Guilan Busses for Leygoints, a league from Laigon, and from Resht, from whence this yeares Silke was taken seuen leagues, and from thence to Spahan, sixteene dayes iourney. This may proue the speedier passage, if it please God to lend fauourable wind to passe the Caspian Sea; from Astracan Sea passage is to be had in Iuly, August and September:

The third passage, which no doubt, may bee procured by your Honours Agent there, is to haue your Letters sent from Musco, by the Emperours Post to the Gouvernour of Astracan, to send the said Letters, if ouer land, to the Chan of Shomakee, to be sent to the English Nation at Spahan, by the Chans Post, if by Sea to Guilan to the Gouvernour of Resht, accordingly to be sent to the English at Spahan: the charge to be defrayed by your Honours Agents, and no doubt, so long as you haue here Trade, your Letters by these Gouvernours will bee safely deliuered: and for the better safetie of them, the Agent may at his next going to the King, procure two Firmans to those Gouvernours to that effect: and thus much for the needfull transport of your Letters from Musco to Spahan in Persia.

I will now retorne and speake something of the Trade at Astracan: the Mart beginneth at the arriual of the Boats which is in Iune; at which time the Persians come in, and bring dyed Silke, Dorogoes, Callicoes and other Persian stufes, which they sell by retayle and in barter. The Commodities they retorne are cloth, but no (great quantitie) Sables, Martens, redde Hides, Cuiare, Butter, the hinder-part of Horse Skinnes, for Leather, and olde Russe Money which they buy at fortie foure and fortie fixe d per robes for exchange. These are the Commodities likewise the Russe transports whereon he makes small profit the olde money failing, and your Honours Trade here will preiudice him much, if not quite ouerthrow his Trade.

In

In my Passage on the Volga, I held nothing worthy notice except the taking the Sturgeon, and the making the Caviare and Isinglas. The Riuer they pale in from banke to banke, that no Sturgeon passe vp or downe the Riuer, but they fall in the weeres. The Roe they lay in salt. Making of Caviare.

fourteene or fifteene dayes, then take and wash the salt of them, and packe them in the Fat. The fat Sturgeon hath a yellow Roe, which they packe vp as it cometh to hand, which Roe spoyleth all that lyeth neere it, and much hindreth the sale of the Caviare at our Markets. The Isinglas is made of the string taken out of the Sturgeons backs. This yeare the But of Caviare sold at five robles the hundred, and sixe robles. Isinglas.

Gentlemen, I am bound by Commission to aduize how many dayes from Arahs to the Caspian Sea and to Astracan. From Arahs to Derbent a Port Towne seuen dayes iourney. This Port lyeth opposite to the Riuer Volga, and may be sayled in five dayes. All other places where the Kings Silke is made, lye neere the Sea, as Rasht, Peomin, Shoft and Leyzon, in the Province of Guilan, the farthest eight leagues from the Ports. In Monzendroan, is the Plantation for the making of Silke, and this yeare a good quantitie made, of which as yet hath neuer prooffe beene made for his goodnesse. Thus much for nereenesse of the places where the Silke is made to the Caspian Sea, by which your Honours may perceiue how necessary the Silke doth lye for its transport by the way of the Volga, if passage might be procured from the Emperours of Masconia, whereas now they are carryed three moneths iourney by land to the Port, and not without great charges and trouble, as by the generall aduice you will well vnderstand, to which I humbly referre you. Arahs.
Derbent.
Rasht.
Peomin.
Shoft.
Leyzon.
Monzendroan.

Gentlemen, this your Persian Trade, as it is in her infancy hath many Enemies, the Turke, Arabian, Armenian, and the proud Portugall, whose lying tongue cealeth not to dishonour our Kingdome and Nation, but the Lord, I hope, will turne the dishonour upon his owne pate.

The ouerthrow of the three first Enemies must be by the presence of an Ambassadour heere, who, no doubt, would perswade and pull downe the Kings now loftie price of his Silke as you will well find in this yeares Silke receiued, and no abatement to bee expected, but by treatie of an Ambassadour, who hath beene expected and demanded for by this King: also to accord an agreement with the King for the Silke that is most in esteeme, and profitable for you: and as he is turned Merchant for sale of his Silke, so likewise to be your Merchant for the goods you shall yearely send into his Land, at such prices as may counteruaile the price he sets on his Silke. But I doubt, you will say I passe the bounds of my Commission or order in writing this briefe Relation, of which might be spoken at large. But doubtlesse, not more then your graue willesomes doe foresee, or the better experienced then my selfe doe aduise, to which I humbly referre your Honours, praying the successe may proue to your hearts desires.

Gentlemen, I am sorry, you thinke me not worthy to nominate me your seruant in your Letters, and more sorry you write me seuerall names and not mine owne name, for which cause I haue beene a daily table sport by some, which of these names they may take for your Honours Seruant, others wish me to returne and make my wages with you: and had I good occasion in your Honours employment I should bee very willing thereunto; but howsoeuer I referre mee to God and your Honours, not doubting, but you will deale as well with mee as others, and that I may not returne as promised I willingly remayne your Honours obliedged seruant readie to vndergoe any your Affaires, desiring your Honours will please to nominate mee a certaine yeerely stipend for the time I shall so spend vntill my returne to your Honours, for which I shall bee bound to pray for your Honours helpe and happinesse in this World, and in the World to come eternall rest.

Your Honours may please that yesterday we receiued a Letter from the Agent from Port Iasques. A second Letter directed to Master William Bell and the rest at Spahan, aduizing the truth as neere as they can be informed, the occasion of your Honours ships not arriual as yet; to which I humbly referre you. Being ordered also by the Agent that the Copie thereof should be dispeeded to your Honours, I haue fitted those former lines, long by you expected, of a briefe Relation of my Iourney from Yeraslane to Spahan in Persia, also the fittest time for transport of your Letters to haue speediest passage.

Since my arriual here at Mina with the last Casila of Silke, nothing hath happened worthy your Honours notice. We expect houely to heare the happy newes of the safe arriual of the ships at Port Iasques, that wee may proceed thither with your goods, which God of his mercie grant, to whose blessed tuition I euer commend your Honourrs, and rest,

Mina, the thirteenth of December, 1620.

Your Honours obliged Seruant,

CHAP. XVII.

A Discourse of Trade from England vnto the East Indies: Answering to diuers Obiections which are vsually made against the same.

Written by T. Mun.

He trade of Merchandise, is not onely that laudable practise whereby the entercourse of Nations is so worthily performed, but also (as I may terme it) the very Touchstone of a kingdomes prosperitie, when therein some certaine rules shall be diligently obserued. For, as in the estates of priuate persons, we may account that man to prosper and grow rich, who being possessed of reuenues more or lesse, doth accordingly proportion his expences; whereby he may yeerely aduance some maintenance for his posteritie. So doth it come to passe in those kingdomes, which with great care and warinesse do euer vent out more of their home commodities; then they import and vse of forraine wares; for so vndoubtedly the remainder must returne to them in treasure. But where a contrary course is taken, through wantonnesse and riot; to ouer-waste both forraine and domesticke wares; there must the money of necessity be exported, as the meanes to helpe to furnish such excesse; and so by the corruption of mens conditions and manners, many rich countreyes are made exceeding poore, whilst the people thereof, too much affecting their owne inormities, doe lay the fault in something else.

Wherefore, industry to encrease, and frugalitie to maintaine, are the true watchmen of a kingdomes treasury; euen when the force and feare of Princes prohibitions cannot possibly retaine the same.

And therefore, as it is most plaine, that proportion or quantitie, must euer be regarded in the importing of forraine wares; so must there also be a great respect of qualitie and vse; that so, the things most necessary sary to be first preferred; such as are foode, rayment, and munition for war and trade; which great blessings, when any Countrey doth sufficiently enjoy; the next to be procured are wares, fitting for health, and arts; the last, are those, which serue for our pleasures and ornament.

Now, forasmuch as by the providence of Almighty God, the kingdome of England, is endowed with such abundance of rich commodities, that it hath long enjoyed, not onely great plenty of the things before named, but also, through a superfluitie, hath beene much enriched with treasure brought in from forraine parts; which hath giuen life vnto so many worthy trades, amongst which that vnto the East India by name; the report whereof, although it is already spread so famous through the world: yet notwithstanding, here at home, the clamorous complaints against the same, are growne so loud and generall; that 10 (my selfe being one of the Society, it hath much troubled my private meditations, to conceiue the meanes or true grounds of this confusion. But at the last I resolved my selfe, that the greatest number of these exclaimers are led away in ignorance; not hauing as yet discerned the mysteries of such weighty affaires: Some haue beene transported with enuy, as not participating in the said Society, or being thereby hindred (as they conceiue) in some other trade; and others, wholly corrupted in their affections, who whilst they willingly runne into these errors, doe also labour diligently to seduce others; that so, this good and glory of the kingdome, might be subuerted by our selues, which by the policie and strength of Strangers, cannot so easily be abated; wherefore, it is now a fit time to meete with such iniurious courses, by a true Narration of the passages in the said East India Trade; answering to those seuerall obiections, which are so commonly made against the same: That so these misunderstandings and errors, may be made knowne vnto the 20 whole body of this Kingdome, which at this present time is most worthily represented to those noble assemblies of the high Courts of Parliament; where I hope the worth of this rich Trade, shall bee effectually inquired, and so in the end obtaine the credite of an honorable approbation.

The first Obiection.

It were a happie thing for Christendome (say many men) that the Navigation to the East Indies, by way of the Cape of Good Hope, had neuer been found out; For in the fleets of 30 shippes, which are sent thither yeerely out of England, Portugall, and the Low-countries; The Gold, Siluer, and Coyne of Christendome, and particularly of this Kingdome, is exhausted, to buy unnecessary wares.

The Answer.

The matter of this Obiection is very weighty, and therefore it ought to be answered fully; the which that I may the better performe, I will diuide the same into three parts. In the first, I will consider the necessary vse of the wares, which are vsually brought out of East India into Europe; namely, Drugges, Spices, Raw-silke, Indico, and Callicoos. In the second, I will imitate the manner and meanes by which the said wares haue beene heretofore, and now are brought into Europe. In the third and last, I will prooue, that the treasure of England is not consumed, but rather greatly to be increased, by the performance of the said Trade.

Touching the first, Who is so ignorant in any famous commonwealth, which will not consent to the moderate vse of wholesome Drugges and comfortable Spices? Which haue been so much desired in all times, and by so many Nations, not thereby to surfeit, or to please a lickorish taste (as it often happeneth, with many other fruites and wines) but rather as things most necessary to preserve their health, and to cure their diseases; euen as it is most notably set foorth by some 50 learned men, who haue vndertaken to write vpon this subject: and therefore it shall be altogether needlesse heere to discourse vpon their seuerall operations and vertues, seeing that he that listeth, may be well instructed therein; if hee will peruse the Volumes which are penned by the learned, for the benefit of all those who shall make vse thereof.

But if peraduenture it be yet further vrged, that diuers Nations liue without the vse of Drugges and Spices: the answer is, That either such people know not their vertue, and therefore suffer much by the want of wares so healthfull, or else they are most miserable, being without meanes to obtaine the things which they so much want: but sithence I intend to be briefe, I will insist no further vpon this point: For the Obiectors might aswell denie vs the vse of Sugers, Wines, Oyles, Raysons, Figges, Prunes, and Currands; and with farre more reason exclaime against 60 Tobacco, Cloth of Gold and Siluer, Lawnes, Cambricks, Gold and Siluer-lace, Veluets, Satens, Taffataes, and diuers other manufactures, yeerely brought into this Realme for an infinite value: all which as it is most true, that whilst we consume them, they likewise deuoure our wealth; yet neuertheles, the moderate vse of all these wares hath euer suited well with the riches and Maiestie of this Kingdome.

But I will come to the raw Silkes and Indico, this being so excellent for the dying of our woollen clothes, thereby so much esteemed in so many places of the world; that ornament, together with the great reliefe and maintenance of so many hundreds of poore people, who are continually employed, in the winding, twisting, and weauing of the same: Insomuch, that by the cherishing of this businesse (as his Maiestie for his part is graciously pleased to performe, in remitting the impost of Silke) it may well be hoped, that in short time, industrie will make the Art to flourish with no lesse happinesse to this Kingdome, then it hath done (through many ages) to diuers states in Italy, and lately also to the Kingdome of France, and to the vnited Prouinces of the Low-countreys.

Now as touching the Trade of Callicoes, of many sorts, into which the English lately made an entrance, although it cannot be truly said, that this commoditie is profitable, for the state of Christendome in generall (in respect they are the manufacture of Infidels, and in great part the weare of Christians) yet neuerthelesse, this commoditie likewise is of singular vse, for this common-wealth in particular; not onely therewith to increase the trade into forraigne parts, but also thereby greatly to abate the excessiue prices of Cambricks, Holland, and other sorts of Linnen cloth, which daily are brought into this Kingdome for a very great summe of money. And this shall suffice concerning the necessary vse of the Indian wares: In the next place, I will set forth the manner and meanes of their importing into Europe

It is an error in those men; who thinke that the trade of the East Indies into Europe had first entrance, by the discouerie of the Nauigation by the Cape of Good Hope. For many yeeres before that time, the trafficke of those parts had his ordinary course by shipping from diuers places in the Indies, yeerely resorting with their wares to Mocha in the Red-Sea, and Balsora in the Persian Gulfe: From both which places, the Merchandise (with great charges) were after transported ouer-land by the Turkes vpon Cammels, fiftie dayes iourney, vnto Aleppo in Soria, and to Alexandria in Egypt, (which are in the Mart Townes, from whence diuers Nations, as well Turkes as Christians doe continually disperse the said Wares by Sea into the parts of Europe:) by which course, the common enemy of Christendome (the Turke) was Master of the Trade, which did greatly impley, and enrich his Subiects, and also fill the Coffers of his owne Customes, which he exacted at very high rates; But by the prouidence of Almighty God, the discouerie of that Nauigation, to the East Indies by the Cape of Good Hope (now so much frequented by the English, Portugals, and Dutch; and also attempted by other Christian Kingdomes) hath not onely much decayed the great Commerce betweene the Indians and the Turkes in the Red Sea; and in the Persian Gulfe (to their infinite hurt, and to the great increase of Christian Trade,) but it hath also brought a further happinesse vnto Christendome in generall, and to the Realme of England in particular, for the venting of more English Commodities; and for exporting of a lesse quantitie of Siluer out of Europe vnto the Infidels, by many thousand pounds yeerely, then hath beene accustomed in former times; as I shall prooue most plainly by that which followeth.

And first, it will be necessarie to set downe the quantitie of Spices, Indico, and Persian raw Silke (which is yeerely consumed in Europe) and in them all to consider the cost with the charges to lade the same Commodities cleere aboard the ships from Aleppo; and the like of all the selfe same wares, as they haue beene vsually dispatched from the Ports of the East Indies; wherein will appeare that happinesse, which many doe so much oppose; especially our owne Countrey-men, vnder the gilded termes of the Common-wealth; whilst being indeed either ignorant, or ill affected, they doe not onely grossly erre themselves, but also cause others to hinder as much as in them lyeth, the glorie and well-fare of this Kingdome; but leauing them, I will set downe the said wares, in their quantitie and prices as followeth; and first,

At ALEPPO,

Sixe thousand thousand pounds of Pepper, cost with charges at two shillings the pound, six hundred thousand pound. Foure hundred fiftie thousand pounds of Cloues, at foure shillings nine pence the pound, cost one hundred sixe thousand eight hundredth seuentie five pound tenne shillings. One hundredth and fiftie thousand pounds of Mace at foure shillings nine pence the pound, cost there thirtie five thousand sixe hundred twentie sixe pound. Foure hundred thousand pounds of Nutmegs at two shillings foure pence the pound, cost fortie sixe thousand sixe hundred sixtie sixe pound thirteene shillings foure pence. Three hundred fiftie thousand of Indico, at foure shillings foure pence the pound, cost seuentie five thousand eight hundred thirtie three pound, sixe shillings eight pence. One thousand thousand of Persia raw Silke at twelue shillings the pound, come to sixe hundredth thousand pound. The whole summe of all is 1465001. pounds, ten shillings.

Now follow the same wares both for quantitie and qualitie at their seuerall prices, as they are to be bought and laden cleere of charges,

In the East INDIES,

Sixe thousand thousand pounds of Pepper, cost with charges at two pence halfe pennie the pound, sixtie two thousand five hundred pound. Foure hundred fiftie thousand pounds of Cloues Cloues at nine pence the pound, cost sixteene thousand eight hundred seuentie five pounds. One hundred and fittie thousand pounds of Mace, at eight pence the pound, cost five thousand pounds. Four hundred thousand pounds of Nutmegs, at four pence the pound, cost six thousand six hundred sixtie six pounds thirteene shillings four pence. Three hundred and fittie thousand pounds of Indico, at fourteene pence the pound, cost twentie thousand foure hundred and sixteene pounds twelue shillings four pence. Ten hundred thousand pounds Persia raw Silke, at eight shillings the pound, cost foure hundred thousand pounds. The whole summe of all is, 511458. pounds, 5. shillings, 8. pence.

The exportation of the value of 953543. l sterling out of Christendome into Turkey
yeerely saued.

So that by the substance, and summes of these accounts it doth plainly appeare, that the buy-10 ing of the said quantitie of raw Silkes, Indico, and Spices, may be performed in the Indies, for neere one third part of the readie moneys, which were accustomed to be sent into Turkey to pro-uide the same: So that there will be saued euery yeere the value of nine hundred fittie three thousand five hundred fortie three pounds foure shillings four pence sterling, of readie moneys, that heretofore hath beene exported out of Christendome into Turkey: which is a matter of such note and consequence, that it may seeme incredible, before the circumstance be duely considered; and therefore lest I should leaue the matter in doubt, it is requisite, that I doe make an explanation of some particulars.

And principally, it must not be conceiued, that this great aduantage which hath beene spoken of, is onely the Merchants gayne; for the Common-wealth of Christendome, hath a very great part thereof in the cheapnesse of the Wares, as shall be (God willing) proued hereafter in his due place.

20 Secondly, the time of the Merchants forbearance and interest is very long; his aduenture and assurance much dearer; his charges of Shipping, Victuals, Mariners, and Factors their wages, farre greater then by the voyage into Turkey for the same Wares: so that the former great difference must be vnderstood in these particulars: whereby we may perceiue to our comfort, that the materials of the Kingdome, and the employments of the Subiects (in lieu of readie moneys) becomes a very great part of the price which is payed for the said Indian Wares: which cannot hurt the State (as some erroneously suppose) but greatly helpe it, as I shall better proue in that which followeth.

First therefore, I shew for an vndoubted truth, That the Persians, Moors, and Indians, who trade with the Turkes at Aleppo, Mocha, and Alexandria, for raw Silkes, Drugs, Spices, Indico, 30 and Callicoes; haue alwayes made, and still doe make their returnes in readie money: for other Wares, there are but few which they desire from forraine parts; some Chamlets, Corral, wrought Silke, woollen Cloth, with some trifles, they doe yeerly vent in all, not for aboue fortie or fittie thousand pounds sterling; which is no valuable summe in respect of that wealth which is carried from Aleppo and Constantinople into Persia for raw Silkes; when least, five hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum: and from Mocha about sixe hundred thousand pounds sterling (likewise yeerely into India) for returne of Callicoes, Drugs, Sugar, Rice, Tobacco, and diuers other things. So here is stil a very great commerce maintayned betweene those Inhi-dels; not onely for the Callicoes of many sorts, and other Wares (which concerne their owne vie) but also for the raw Silkes of Persia, which are altogether transported into Christendome.

40 How worthie an enterprife is it therefore in the English East India Companie? by whose endeauours there is now good hope to turne a great part of this wealthie Trade into England, by shipping directly from the Persian Gulfe, whereby the employments, trafficke, and Customes of the Turkes, may be still more and more impaired, and the generall Treasure of Christendome much lesse consumed; as is already performed for the businesse of Spices and Indico.

And who shall then doubt our want of Siluer to maintaine the Trade? if by this way we doe obtaine the Silke, which with more aduantage and conueniencie will draw the money to this Mart, then it hath beene heretofore conueyed vnto those remote Dominions of the Turke.

And lest peraduenture it should be thought, that the trafficke in those parts by the Christians for the Persian Silke, is performed by change for other Wares, or by the money which procee-50 deth of the sales of many rich Commodities, which yeerely they sell at Aleppo, Alexandria, Constantinople, and these parts. The answer is, that neither the Venetians, French, nor Dutch, doe vent so much of their owne Countrie Commodities in those parts, as doe provide their necessarie wants of the proper Wares of Turkes: such as are the fine raw Silke made in Soria, Chamlets, Grograns, Cotten Wools, Cotten Yarne, Galls, Flax, Hempe, Fleece Wools, Rice, Hides, Waxe, and diuers other things; so that still the raw Silkes of Persia, must be bought with readie money. Onely the English haue more aduantage then any other Nation in this kind: for they vent so great a quantitie of Broad-clothes, Tinne, and other English Commodities, that the proceed thereof, doth not onely provide a sufficient quantitie of part of the said 60 Turkish Wares (which fit their vse) but also a proportion of about three hundred great Balls of Persia raw Silke yeerely.

And if in any yeere they chance to buy a greater quantitie of Silke, then must and doe they furnish the same in readie moneys from the Ports of Marcellis, Genouay, Ligorne, Venice, or the

The proceedings of some States in Italie for the maintenance of Arts.

The readie moneys which are yeerely carried from some States of Italie into Sicilia.

How Marcellis and Venice are furnished with ready moneys.

The Italian Merchants doe furnish the King of Spaine with money in Italie and Flanders.

The third part doth shew how the East India Trade doth enrich this Kingdome.

Netherlands. Neither are these the onely meanes, whereby the Empire of the Turke is so abundantly stored with Gold and Silver, to the performance of the Indian Trade. For, many are the Christian ships which yeerely lade with Corne for readie moneys in the Archipelago: great is the commerce from Poland, Hungarie, and Germanie; with Gold and Dollers, for Chamlets, Grograns, and other things: But that which is very remarkable, is the great quantitie of Gold, and some Silver coyned in Grand-Cairo, which by two severall Caravans (in bullion) is yeerely brought thither from the Abassens Countrey in Ethiopia, for returne of many rich Commodities, as Veluets, Satins, Cloth of Gold, Taffatas, wollen Cloth, polished Corral, and other things.

Thus by the coherence of the Turkish Trade with the Christians, Persians, and Indians, I have shewed both the manner and the meanes, whereby the East Indian Wares have beene heretofore, and yet are in part, procured into Christendome. But lest it should seeme incredible, that the Turke would let so great a masse of Treasure yeerely to passe his Dominions, to the Indians, and to the Persians his professed enemies; I will make the matter yet more plaine.

And first concerning the raw Silkes, it is already shewed, that he hath the money from the Christians, besides the benefit he reapeth in their Customes, with great employments also for his Subiects. And for Callicoes (his whole Empire having little or no other meanes for Linnen) he cannot possibly be without them, although it hath, and doth greatly exhaust his Treasure, neither doth he gayne any manufacture by the same, as the Christians have alwayes done by the raw Silke, to the great reliefe of innumerable poore people, so much provided for, by the policie of all well governed and flourishing Common-wealths; As by this occasion, and in a businesse of the like kind, I may instance the States of Genouay, Florence, and Luca; who for the maintenance of Arts and Trade, doe provide raw Silkes out of Sicilia for the value of five hundred thousand pounds sterling at least yeerly; and for the payment thereof they doe vent at Naples, Palermo, Messina, and those parts, a certaine quantitie of Florence Rashes, and some other Wares, for about one hundred and fiftie thousand pounds sterling per annum; so the rest, being three hundred and fiftie thousand pounds sterling, is supplied all in readie moneys: which treasure they doe willingly forsake to procure their Trade: for experience hath taught them that Trade is their employment, and doth returne them Treasure; for by those Silkes (being wrought, transported, and sold at Frankford and other Marts,) they have the better meanes to furnish their Contracts with the King of Spaine in Flanders; and so from Spaine the Silver must returne againe to Italie. But if I should runne out in this and other particulars (fitting our purpose) it would make me too tedious, and so carrie mee beyond my ayme, which is to be brieft.

Wherefore I will proceed to cleere some doubts in those men, who perhaps not having the knowledge of occurrents in forraigne parts, might thinke that neither Venice, nor Marcellis have the meanes or yet the minds, to export such great summes of readie moneyes yeerely out of those Dominions, especially Marcellis being a part of France, where neighbourhood doth daily tell vs, that Gold and Silver may not bee conveyed out of that Kingdome, for any valuable summe, more then is permitted for the necessarie use of Trauellers: yet neuertheless, experience hath likewise taught vs, that for the effecting of those Trades (whereof we now speake, and which they esteeme so much) there is a free extraction out of the said places, of moneyes both gold and silver; whereof with them there is no want; for, the said Wares doe procure it abundantly.

First, to Marcellis, it commeth not onely from Genouay, Ligorne, Cartagenia, Malliga, and many other Port Townes of Spaine and Italy, but also from Paris, Roan, Saint-Malloe, Toulouse, Rochell, Deepe, and other Cities of France; who want not meanes to have great store of Rials and Dollers from Spaine and Germanie.

And in the like manner, the Venetians dispersing the said raw Silkes, and other Wares into the severall States of Italie, Germanie, and Hungarie, (who have but few Commodities fitting their barter or exchange, but onely moneyes) are therewith abundantly served: for, the Mynes of Hungarie and Germanie afford good quantitie of Gold and Silver; and likewise the States of Italie, especially Genouay, Florence, and Millane, have ever store of Rials out of Spaine in satisfaction of many great disbursements, which those Merchants make for that King in his occasions of Italie and Flanders; of all which I might make a large discourse, but I conceiue I have said sufficient, to shew how the Trade of the East Indies hath beene, and now is brought into Christendome generally; what money is yeerely sent out, by whom, and the possibilitie or meanes which they have to performe it. I will therefore in the next place, satisfie the Obiectors, that it is not the East India Trade, which wasteth the Gold, and Silver, Coyne, or other treasure of this Kingdome in particular.

For first, who knoweth not that Gold in the East Indies hath no ratable price with Silver? Neither hath the Silver coyne of England any equall value with the Spanish Rials according to their severall prices here; besides that, his Maestie hath not authorized the East India Company, to send away any part of this Kingdoms Coyne, either Gold or Silver; but only a certain limited sum of forren silver yeerly; which as they dare not exceed, so neuer have they as yet accomplished plished the same. For it doth plainly appeare in their bookes, that from the originall and first foundation of the Trade in Anno 1601. vntill the moneth of Iuly, Anno 1620. they haue shipped away onely five hundred fortie eight thousand and ninety pounds sterling in Spanish Rials, and some Dollers; whereas by licence, they might haue exported in that time seven hundred and twentie thousand pounds sterling. Also they haue laden away in the same terme of nineteene yeeres, out of this Kingdome two hundred ninetie two thousand two hundred eightie six pounds sterling in Broad-clothes, Kersies, Lead, Tinne, with some other English and forraine Commodities; which is a good Addition, and vent of our Wares, into such remote places; where heretofore they haue had no vtterance at all.

How much money and wares the East India Companie haue sent forth euer since the beginning of this Trade.

10 And note, I pray you, how time and industrie hath bettered this Trade, when in the last three yeeres there hath bene sent more Wares to the Indies, then in the sixteene yeeres before; and yet our expectation is not at the highest; for those new borne Trades within the Red Sea, and in the Persian Gulfe, doe bid vs hope for better things, as lately by Letters from Spahan, we vnderstand of great quantitie of raw Silke prepared by the English Factors, which (by Gods assistance) wee may expect here about the moneth of August next, with encouragement also to vent our English Cloth, and Kersies in good quantities; the like of Iron, Tinne, and other things, whereof experience (of those already sold) hath giuen vs sufficient approbation of their validitie.

The vent of English Wares encreased in the Indies.

And now (omitting much matter which might be written touching the discoueries of other Trades from one Kingdome or Port to another in the Indies, with the Commodities thereof; 20 whereby the employment of our ships, together with the Stocke of money and goods which is sent out of England in them, may be much encreased) I will draw to a conclusion of the point in hand, and shew that whatsoever summes of forraine readie moneyes are yeerely sent from hence into the East Indies, his Maiestie in the Letters Patents granted to that Companie, hath notwithstanding with singular care provided, that the brethren of the Companie, shall yeerely bring in as much Silver, as they send forth; which hath bene alwayes truly performed, with an ouerplus, to the increase of this Kingdomes treasure: Neither is it likely that the money which is thus contracted for by the Companie at certaine prices, and to be deliuered them at times appointed, would be otherwise brought into England, but onely by vertue and for the performance of the said Contracts: for, without this assurance of vent, together with a good price for the said moneyes, the Merchants would vndoubtedly make their returnes in other 30 Wares; the vse and extraordinary consume whereof, would be found lesse profitable to the Common-wealth, when the matter should be duly considered, as I shall yet further endeavour to demonstrate.

Our stocke may be much increased by Trade from Port to Port in the Indies. For this see the former relations, of the Trade from Surat to Achen, and all the Southerne and further Eastern Indies: as thence also to the red Sea &c.

And here I will suppose, That the East India Companie may ship out yeerely one hundred thousand pounds sterling: yet it is most certaine, that the Trade being thus driuen, with sums of readie moneyes, it will not decay, but rather much increase the treasure of the Kingdome: which to proue, I will briefly set downe the substance of the English Trade vnto the East Indies, concerning the quantitie of the seuerall sorts of Wares, to be yeerely bought there, and sold here; with the vsuall prices giuen for them in both places. And first, I will beginne with their cost and charges laden cleere aboard the ships in the East Indies.

The money sent to the Indies is all forraine Coyne. The East India Companie are obliged to bring in as much money as they carrie out of the Realme. Tobacco, Raisons, Oyles, and Wines, whereof there is no want, but rather too much Smoke. A proportion of such Trade as is hoped yeerely to be brought into this Realme from East India.

In the East INDIES.

40 Two thousand five hundred thousand pounds of Pepper, at two pence half-penie the pound, cost twentie six thousand fortie one pounds thirteene shillings foure pence. One hundred and fiftie thousand pounds of Cloues, at nine pence the pound, cost five thousand six hundred twentie six pounds. One hundred and fiftie thousand pounds of Nutmegs, at foure pence the pound, cost two thousand five hundred pounds. Fiftie thousand pounds of Mace, at eight pence the pound, cost one thousand six hundred sixtie six pounds thirteene shillings foure pence. Two hundred thousand pounds of Indico, at fourteene pence the pound, cost eleuen thousand six hundred sixtie six pounds thirteene shillings foure pence. One hundred and seven thousand one hundred fortie pounds of China raw Silkes, at seven shillings the pound, cost thirtie seven thousand foure hundred nintie nine pounds. Fiftie thousand of Callicoes of seuerall sorts, rated at seven shillings the piece one with another, fiftene thousand pounds. The whole summe of all 50 is, one hundred thousand pounds.

All the said Merchandize haue bene often experienced, or bought at or about the prices aboue written; and we doe hope for our parts (besides the Trade of raw Silkes from Persia) yeerely, to lade from the Indies, such quantitie of the seuerall sorts of Wares as are here set downe (if it shall please his Maiestie, to protect and defend vs concerning the Articles of agreement made with the Dutch, that they may not violate any of them to our hindrance or damage) all which 60 wares in England will yeeld (as I doe conceiue) the prices hereafter following, viz.

In ENGLAND.

Two hundred and fiftie thousand pounds of Pepper, at twentie pence the pound, cost two hundred and eight thousand three hundred thirtie three pounds six shillings eight pence. One hundred and fiftie thousand of Cloues, at six shillings the pound, cost fortie five thousand pounds.

How much the Kingdomes Stocke may increase yearly by trading to the East Indies. 2500. tunnes of shipping will lade home all the wares afore written from the East Indies. And the materials of the said shipping (vnto wrought) is worth about 15000. sterling

India wares will bring readie money into the Realme. We haue no other meanes to procure Treasure but by Trade and Merchandize. The French and the Venetians send the value of 600000. sterling yearly in ready money into Turkey.

Trade maketh some States very rich which haue little other meanes. If the generall Trade of this Kingdome doth export a greater value in wares then it doth import yearly, then doth our treasure increase.

The Trade to the East Indies may be said to export 480000 pounds and to import 120000 l.

yearly. So the ouerballance is 360000 l. sterling.

Euery action ought especially to be considered in this end.

The East Indian wares which were sent beyond the Seas, are sold and haue their fallend in money, which might bee

One hundred and fiftie thousand pounds of Nutmegs, at two shillings six pence the pound, cost eightene thousand seven hundred and fiftie pounds. Fiftie thousand pound of Mace, at six shillings the pound, cost fifteen thousand pounds. Two hundred thousand pounds of Indico, at five shillings the pound, cost fiftie thousand pounds. One hundred and seven thousand one hundred fortie pounds of China raw Silkes, at twentie shillings the pound, cost one hundred and seven thousand one hundred fortie pounds. Fiftie thousand pieces of Calicoes of severall sorts, rated at twentie shillings the piece one with another, cost fiftie thousand pounds. The whole summe of all is, foure hundred ninetie foure thousand two hundred twentie three pounds six shillings eight pence.

So that here would be our owne money againe and more, the summe of three hundred ninety foure thousand two hundred twentie three pounds six shillings eight pence advanced towards the generall Stocke of the Kingdome. For although the East India Companie shall disburse the greatest part of the said summe advanced vnto his Maiestie for Custome and Impost; and also vnto the Factors, Officers, and Mariners, for wages, together with the cost of shipping Victuals, Munitions, Assurance and the like: yet all these (the Materials of shipping onely excepted) are but transmutations and no consumption of the Kingdomes Stocke.

But if any man object and say, that the said Commodities being brought into England (as is before written) they are either consumed in the Land, or being transported into forraigne parts, they are changed into other Wares: So that still we want our hundred thousand pounds in readie money. The answer is, First, that in the occasion of this dispute, wee must conceiue the said Wares to be of no vse for this Kingdome, but onely for so much, as doe concerne the Trade thereof. And Secondly, in the said Trade we must consider, that although the said goods be sent out, and returned home in other Wares from forraigne parts; yet still, they are negotiated to the increase of the said Stocke, and for the imployment of the Subiects. Lastly, if there be a resolution to determine and end the businesse: who doubteth, that the whole value may not bee presently returned hither in readie moneyes? For in Italie, Turkey, and other places, where they are most vendible to profit, there likewise is the money free to be exported at all times and by whomsoever.

And as it is most certaine, that some other Merchandize, sent out of this Kingdome, were the meanes to bring in the hundred thousand pounds in readie moneyes, which is here supposed to be sent and imployed in the East Indies (as aforesaid) so likewise, there is the same power in these Indian wares, to procure other summes of readie moneyes, to bee brought into this Kingdome: For let not man doubt, but that money doth attend Merchandize, for money is the prize of wares, and wares are the proper vse of money; so that their coherence is vnseparable. And if the French and the Venetians, made any doubt of this, they would not so willingly permit the value of sixe hundred thousand pounds sterling, or more in Spanish Rials and Dollers, yearly to be carryed out of their Dominions into Turkey: whereof three quarter parts at least are imployed, onely for the buying of Persia raw Silkes, which commoditie doth presently enable them with readie money from diuers other States to performe the Trade; whereby their wealth doth much increase, and their people are greatly imployed. So to conclude this point, I will onely adde, that the East India Trade alone (although it be driuen in no amplyer manner then is afore written) is a meanes to bring more treasure into the Realme then all the other trades of this Kingdome (as they are now managed) being put together. For if the rule be true, that when the value of our commodities exported doth ouer-balance the worth of all those forraigne wares, which are imported and consumed in this Kingdome, then the remaynder of our stocke which is sent forth, must of necessitie returne to vs in Treasure. I am confident, that vpon a diligent and true inquirie it will be found, that the ouer-balance of all our other Trades together, will not amount vnto so great a summe of money as the East India Trade alone doth ouer-balance in this kinde.

And to make the matter yet more plaine, whereas it is already said that one hundred thousand pounds in money exported, may import about the value of five hundred thousand pounds sterling, in wares from the East Indies, we must vnderstand that part thereof to be properly called our importation that this Realme doth consume, which is about the value of one hundred and twenty thousand pounds sterling yearly. So the remaynder being three hundred and eighty thousand pounds, is matter exported vnto forraigne parts in the nature of our Cloth, Lead, Tin, or any other native commodities, to the great increase of this Kingdomes stocke, and that also in so much treasure, so farre as the East India Trade can be rightly vnderstood to subsist in this particular. For as all humane actions haue their Termination and Ends, so likewise there must bee an end assigned vnto the affaires of the East Indies; which are then truly said to bee finished, when this Realme is serued, and the remainder of those Wares which are sent from hence beyond the Seas, sold there and conuerted into money; which likewise from thence may bee brought away freely and without the danger of Law, or prohibition. Forasmuch therefore as it is well knowne to many men, that moneyes are thus procured by the Sales of Indian Wares to profit, in the parts of Turkey, and at Ligorne, Genoway, the Netherlands, Marcellis, and other places:

ces : yet notwithstanding if all the said Coyne, or any part thereof should bee diuerted from this Realme by some other new employments or affaires, it must neuerthelesse bee granted, that the said India wares had their finall end in monies. But I will cease to heape vp any more arguments, to proue a matter which is already made so plaine; wherefore leauing this Obiection, I will endeouour to giue Answer to the next.

brought into this Realme in that kind, if our other Trades did not diuert the same.

The second Obiection.

- 10 The Timber, Planke, and other materials, for making of shipping, is exceedingly wasted, and made dearer,, by the building of so many great Ships, as are yeerely sent to Trade in the East Indies; and yet the State hath no use of any of them upon occasion. For either they are not here; or else they come home very weake and vnseruiceable.

The Answer.

THis East India Trade seemeth to be borne and brought up an Unthrif, for it wasteth and consumeth all; Neither doth it good to any.

- 20 1 But the Obiection, in some part is very weake:
2 And in the rest it is mistaken.

For first, concerning the weaknesse thereof; would men haue vs to keepe our woods and goodly trees to looke upon? they might as well forbid the working of our wools, and sending forth our cloth to forraigne parts; for both are meanes alike to procure the necessary wares, which this Kingdome wanteth. Do they not know that trees doe liue and grow: and being great, they haue a time to dye and rot, if oportunitie make no better use of them? and what more noble or profitable use then goodly ships for Trade and Warre? Are they not our Barnes for wealth, and plentie, seruing as wals and bulwarkes for our peace and happinesse? Doe not their yeerely buildings maintayne many hundred poore people, and greatly increase the number of those Artesmen which are so needfull for this Common-wealth? And is not all

The first Part concerneth the folly of the Obiection.

- 30 this good performed also (with great prouidence) by bringing in yeerely store of Timber, and other provisions from Ireland? Why then, where is the great waste and dearenesse? I am sure, the East India Companie finds it not; for whereas they doe onely buy their provisions in Hampshire, Essex, Kent, and Barkshire, in all which places they now may haue both Timber, Plankes, Sheathing boards, Trenails and the like, both for goodnesse and price, as cheape (yea better cheape) then they haue bene this fiftene yeeres; and likewise in all that course of time their Bookes doe plainly shew that those wares haue neuer varied much; for if they haue risen any small matter in one yeare, they haue fallen as much the next. And yet I pray you obserue (besides the East India Companies buildings) the many goodly ships which are daily made for other priuate Merchants (such as England neuer had before) and that which is most remarkable, is the continuall late buildings of his Maiestie, thereby yearely adding more strength and glory of great ships, to his Royall and matchlesse Nauy; so that here we see this supposed waste and want is not considerable.

The prouidence of the East India Company for Timber and Plancke. The East India Trade hath not indeared the materials which serue to make ships.

Yea but, say they, the East India ships are neuer here to serue the Kingdome upon occasion: Or if they be at home, they are weake and unfit for seruice.

The second Part sheweth the mistaking in the Obiection. The Warlike prouision which the East India Company keepe in store. His Maiesties strength in the East India Company alone.

- 50 In Trade of Merchandize our ships must goe and come, they are not made to stay at home; Yet neuerthelesse, the East India Company are well prepared at all times, to serue his Maiestie and his Kingdomes, with many warlike provisions, which they alwayes keepe in store; such as Timber, Plankes, Iron-workes, Maists, Cordage, Anchors, Caske, Ordnance, Powder, Shot, Victuals readie packed, Wine, Sider, and a World of other things, fitting the present building, repairing and dispatch of ships to Sea; as may be plentifully seene in their yards and store-houses at Deptford, and more especially in those at Blacke-wall; which are growne so famous, that they are daily visited and viewed by strangers, as well Embassadors as others; to their great admiration of his Maiesties strength and glorie, in one only Company of his Merchants, able at short warning to set forth a Fleet of ships of great force and power.

For it is well knowne to all men who please truly to bee informed, That the East India Companie (besides their Fleets of ships going and coming, and also abiding in the Indies) are continually building, repaying, rigging, victualling, and furnishing to Sea, with all provision needfull for such a long Voyage, some seuen or eight great ships yearely; which are to bee seene at an Anchor in the Riuer of Thames in a great forwardnesse some five or sixe moneths together, before they commonly depart for the Indies, which is about the moneth of March: and they are no sooner got off from the Coast of England, but shortly after, is the season of our shippes to returne from the Indies; who come not home so

The shippes which returne from the East Indies home, may be repayed in a very short time.

- 60 weake as some would haue them; for how often hath experience bene made of our ships which haue performed two or three seuerall Voyages to the East Indies? Yet at their returne, they haue bene indocked, new trimmed and launched out againe, fitted for the like Voyages, in lesse then two monethes. But it will be needlesse to spend any more time in shewing the errors of this second Obiection: therefore I will rather come to the handling of that which followeth.

The

The third Obiection.

The Voyages to the East Indies doe greatly consume our victuals, and our Mariners: leaving many poore Widdowes and Children unrelieved; Besides, that many Shippes are yeerely sent forth to the East Indies, and few we see as yet returned; Also, this Trade hath greatly decayed the Traffique and shipping, which were wont to be employed into the Streights: And yet the said Trade to the East Indies, is found very unprofitable to the Adventurers: Neither doth the Common-wealth find any benefit by the cheapnesse of Spice and Indico, more then in times past.

The Answer.

WHy, what a World of Mischiefs haue we here? First, Dearth. Secondly, Mortalitie. Thirdly, Destruction. Fourthly, Beggerie. Fifthly, And neuer a whit the neere. A very Teame of Calamities, drawing on to miserie; is it not then high time to seeke a remedie? yes verily, and it will be easily done, because these euils neuer were (as yet at least) procured by the East India Trade, as I shall shew, by answering all the parts in order as they stand: and first of Dearth.

The first Part concerneth Dearth.

It is both naturall and iust, that euery Kingdome, State, or Common-wealth, should feede and cherish vp the Natiue people of all degrees and conditions whatsoever, to their preservation of life and health, with such meanes and moderation, as their plentie shall afford; and this is not onely due to them in the time of their aboad at home, but also vpon all occasions of Voyages into other Countries beyond the Seas, wherein they shall bee employed for their owne maintenance, and for the good of the Common-wealth.

The manner
how the East India Company do victuall their ships.

Now therefore concerning the pouision of victuals (which in this Kingdome is yeerely prepared for the setting forth of those shippes which saile to the East Indies) it is well knowne to many men, that it is alwayes proportioned, for about eighteene monethes; whereas commonly the Voyages proue a yeare longer, so that this ouer-plus of time, is furnished with the victuals of forreine parts.

And likewise for the Bread and Bisket which is shipped from hence, hath it not alwayes bin made of French Corne, purposely brought ouer hither (and that at a deare rate) onely to preserve the plentie of our owne graine? vntill now of late dayes that the Farmers heere beginne to cry out and say, That the cheapnesse of Corne doth disable them to pay their deare Rents: Thus doe the East India Company euery way accomodate their proceedings for the good of the Kingdome.

And further concerning their Drinke, is it not a very great part water? Some Wine and Sider and but little Beere.

Also the Fleish they eate, is Beefe and Porke, and that onely for three dayes in a weeke; the rest of their victuals is Fish, some Butter, Cheefe, Pease, Oat-meale, and other things; all which is proportioned into a very sparing Dyet to euery man by allowance: so that heere is no Excesse nor Riot, or any other meanes to make our victuals scant and deare, as is by some erroneously supposed; but rather by this course of life, our plentie is much aduanced. And so I will giue answer to the next part which is mortalitie and great decay of Mariners.

The second Part concerneth Mortality

The life of man is so precious, that it ought not lightly to be exposed to danger; And yet we know, that the whole course of our life, is nothing but a passage vnto Death; wherein one can neither stay nor slacke his pace, but all men runne in one manner, and in one celeritie; The shorter liuer runnes his course no faster then the long, both haue a like passage of time; howbeit, the first hath not so farre to runne as the later.

Now, it is this length of life which Nature seekes, and States likewise endeouour to preserve in worthy men; but none are accounted so worthy in this nature, saue onely they, who labour in their vocations and functions, both for the publike good, and for their priuate benefit.

Good Mariners are accounted worthy men in a Common-wealth.

Thus may we esteeme our good Mariners, to be of no small vse vnto this Common-wealth: but take them from their laudable and accustomed employments, for want of Voyages to Sea; we see what desperate courses they doe then attempt, by ioyning, euen with Turkes and Infidels, to rob and spoyle all Christian Nations; so that we may conclude, we must not onely breed vp Mariners, but also seeke by Trade, to giue them maintenance.

Well, all this is true, but (say they) the East India Company doth neither breed nor maintayne, but destroy the wonted number of our Mariners. How can this be, when it is most certaine, that England (besides the East India Fleets) had neuer yet more shipping then at this present? neither doe any of them stay at home for want of Mariners, no, not at this time, when many hundred Sailers are employed in extraordinarie seruice, for his Maiestie in a Royall Fleet of ships, now at Sea: besides those great numbers of our best Mariners, which haue beene and daily are wasted and taken Prisoners by the Turkes; so where is this want; or what is our miserie more then the want of true information in them that are so ill perswaded of our Company?

Is it not certaine that as the East India Voyages are long, so likewise in Natures course many should dye by length of time although they stayed at home? And to recompence the losse of those that dye, doe not the East India Company with great prouidence, yeerely ship out at least foure hundred Land-men in their Fleets, which in one Voyage proue good Mariners to serue the Kingdome and Common-wealth, vnto which many of them were a burthen before they obtained this employment? And thus is the Kingdome purged of desperate and vntuly people, who kept in awe by the good discipline at Sea, doe often change their former course of life, and so aduanceth their fortunes.

Neither indeed are these Voyages so dangerous and mortall, as is reported; for how many of our ships haue gone and come from the East Indies, without the losse of five men in a hundreth? Others againe haue had worse successe in the first beginning, when the seasons, the places and their contagions were not so well knowne vnto vs; yet time hath taught vs many things, both for the preleruation of health, and speedier performance of our Voyage then heretofore. But the Method of my Discourse bids me write more of this in the next part, which is destruction; and this I must diuide into two parts.

20 In the first, I will consider the want of diuers ships sent to the East Indies, which are wasted there.

And in the second, I will answer the supposed ouerthrow of the Turkie Trade, together with much of our shipping which were wont to be employed thither.

First therefore, concerning the decay of our shippes in the Indies, it cannot bee denyed, but there hath beene great spoyle of them in these three last yeeres; not by the dangers of the Seas, or by the strength of Enemies; but by vnkind and vnexpected quarrels with our Neighbours the Hollanders, who haue taken and surprized twelue of our ships at seuerall times; and in sundry places, to our vnspeakeable losse and hinderance; together with the death of many of our worthyest Mariners, who haue beene slaine and dyed Prisoners vnder their hands: and this hath 30 so much the more encreased the rumour of their Mortalitie: Neither list I here to aggrauate the fact, more then thus briefly to giue answer to the Obiection: for our late vnion with the Dutch, doth promise a double recompence of gaine in time to come.

And they who make this Trade so poore and vnprofitable, are much mistaken in the reckoning; for the present losses which causeth many Aduenturers so much to despaire, is not in the substance of the Trade, but by the euill accidents which haue befallen the same: and to make this point more plaine, I must yet declare some other particulars: in which I will endeavour very briefly to set downe the summe of the whole businesse, which the English hath hitherto performed in the East Indies.

First, therefore I doe obserue that since the beginning of this Trade, vntill the moneth of Iuly last, Anno 1620. there haue beene sent thither seuentie nine ships in seuerall Voyages, whereof thirtie foure are already come home in safetie richly laden, foure haue beene worne out by long seruice, from Port to Port in the Indies: two were ouerwhelmed in the trimming there: fixe haue beene cast away by the perils of the Seas; twelue haue beene taken and surprized by the Dutch, whereof diuers will be wasted, and little worth before they bee restored: and one and twentie good shippes doe still remayne in the Indies. So this is a true account of our shippes.

And next concerning our stocke, it is a certaine truth, that in all the said ships there hath bin sent out in readie money as well out of this Realme, as from all other places wheresoeuer beyond the Sea (which hath not beene landed in this Kingdome) the value of five hundred fortie 50 eight thousand and ninetie pounds sterling in forraigne Coyne; and together with the said money, there hath been shipped the value of two hundred ninety two thousand two hundred eighty six pounds sterling, in sundry sorts of English and forraigne Commodities; all which monies and wares amounting vnto eight hundred fortie thousand three hundred seuentie fixe pounds, haue beene disposed as hereafter followeth,

First, there hath beene lost thirtie one thousand seuentie nine pounds sterling in the fixe ships which are cast away: and in the thirtie foure ships, which are returned in safetie, there hath beene brought home three hundred fiftie six thousand two hundred eighty eight pounds sterling in diuers sorts of wares, which haue produced here in England towards the generall stocke thereof, one million nine hundred, fourteene thousand fixe hundred pounds sterling; for the charges arising here, is but a change of effects from one to another, as hath beene said before in this Discourse: So there ought to remayne in the Indies, to bee speedily returned hither, foure hundred eighty foure thousand eighty eight pounds: neither can wee conceiue that our charges and troubles with the Dutch, will haue wasted more then the odde eighty foure thousand eight 60 sterling, hath beene returned from the East Indies which did produce here towards charges, 1914600. pounds

The breeding of 400. Mariners yeerely. Besides that the feare of a few mens death ought not to ouerthrow or hinder the performance of Honourable actions for the seruice of the K. and Common-wealth.

Our Mariners owne disordered life is that which killeth many of them. The third part concerns the decay of shipping which haue beene sent to the Indies.

Of the Dutch wrongs & the ships taken by them, see the former Relations of Spurway, Hore, Knowles, &c. with the Depositions of diuers men, & in manner all these Indian Voyages. The twelue shippes are the Swan, Defence, Salomon, Attendance (all taken at Banda before Sir Tho. Dale began the war) the Speedwell, the Starre, the Dragon, the Beare, Expedition, Rose; and the Samson, with the Hound. Our troubles with the Dutch. The summe of the affaires to the East Indies euer since the Trade began. Account of all the money and goods which hath been sent to the East Indies euer since the beginning of the Trade. 256288.1.

tic

There remains yet in the East Indies to bee returned home from thence about 400000 pounds sterling.

Concerning the decay of shipping and Trade into Turkey.

The Turkey Merchants can and will iustifie this truth.

The strength of the East India ships.

The fourth part concernes the pouertie of widdowes, &c. The East India Trade doth employ many poore men, & debaist people which other Trades refuse. Wages before hand is not giuen in other Merchants Voyages, neyther yet so great wages as the East India Company pay.

tie eight pounds sterling : so that I am confident, that there yet remayneth foure hundred thousand pounds sterling of good estate, for both the ioynt Stockes. And what a great value of Indian goods this summe of money may (by Gods blessing) shortly returne in our shippes, which are there readie to bring them, the example here doth teach vs to make vp the reckoning. So that notwithstanding our great charges of Discoueries, our losses by the danger of the Seas, our quarrels and infinite hinderance by the Dutch : yet here the kingdome hath and shall haue her stocke againe with a very great increase, although the Merchants gaines concerning the two ioynt stockes will proue but poore, in respect of the former Voyages, which haue not had the like hinderance.

And thus in a few lines may be seene, much matter truly collected with some paines, out of 10 the diuers Volumes of the East Indian Bookes.

Now concerning the decay of Trade and shipping which were wont to bee employed into Turkey, I doubt, that in time it will likewise be affirmed, that the East India Company, haue hindered the vent of our white Cloth in the Netherlands, which to report were a very strange thing. But (praysed be God) to our comfort, we see the great increase of goodly shippes, daily built and employed by the Turkey Merchants, with vent of more of our English Cloth (by one third part at least) then in times before the East India Trade began.

Yea, but (say they) wee haue lost the Trade of Spices, and Indico from Aleppo into England.

Wel, I grant they haue; yet the Kingdome hath found it with more profit by another way, and they likewise are recompenced with a greater Trade, by the exporting from hence of the selfe-<sup>20</sup> same Commodities into Italy, Turkey, and other places : neither can it be lesse profitable for this Kingdome, to turne the Trade of raw Silkes from Aleppo, and to bring them from the Persian Gulfe, with one third part lesse money, then it doth now cost in Turkey; Besides, that by this meanes, the money proceeding of our English Cloth, Tinne, and other wares in Turkey (not finding Commodities fitting to returne for England) would vndoubtedly bee brought home in Gold, as it hath beene performed heretofore, when by superfluitie of stocke sent from hence in Spice, together with our English wares; the Merchants (beeing thereby furnished with a sufficient quantitie of Turkish Commodities) brought home the remaynder of their stocke of those yeares in gold for a great value.

Thus doth it plainly appeare, that these reuolutions of Trades, haue and doe turne to the good of the Common-wealth; neither hath the affaires of the East Indies impayred or decayed any other Trade, Shipping or Mariners of this Realme; but hath mightily increased them all in it selfe. Wherefore let vs now take a view of this Noble addition of the Kingdomes strength and glorie.

But this I must not doe, by setting downe the number of our English shipping now in the Indies, or lately gone that way; for they haue beene heaped thither, these three last yeares together without returne, saue onely five shippes in all that time; the rest haue beene kept there to oppose the furie of the Dutch; but now wee are at vnion, wee shall (by Gods assistance) daily expect diuers great ships with rich returns.

And for the future time, this Trade I doe conceiue, will royally maintayne tenne thousand<sup>40</sup> tunnes of shipping continually : (That is to say) going, and returning, and abiding there in the Indies; which said shipping will employ two thousand and five hundred Mariners at least; and the building with the repaying of the said ships, heere at home will set to worke five hundred men, Carpenters, Cawkers, Caruers, Ioyners, Smiths, and other Labourers, besides many Officers; and about one hundred and twentie Factors, in seuerall places of the Indies. And so from these matters of great consequence, I must begin to write of Beggerie.

The pouertie of Widdowes and Fatherlesse is matter of great compassion, and doth alwaies moue Christian hearts to commiseration and charitie; whereby many receiue reliefe and helpe of those whom God hath blessed with better meanes : but how this pouertie should totally bee<sup>50</sup> preuented, it seemeth not onely difficult, but altogether impossible : For besides the euill accidents and miseries, which euer attend on our humanitie, we see how many daily (euen through their owne folly and wilfulnesse) doe as it were desperately plunge themselves into aduersitie. And thus the number of those is great, who hauing the charge of wife and children, are notwithstanding altogether without meanes and Artes to procure their maintenance; whereby some of them wanting grace, doe run a desperate course, and haue vntimely ends. Others againe beeing better inspired, seeke for employment, but find it not, or with great difficultie : for, who doth willingly entertaine a man poore and miserable, charged with a family, and peradventure debauched in conditions? Neither doe any of our other Merchants voyages to forraine parts accept of those nouices, who neuer haue been vsed to the Sea : So that when all the other doores of charitie<sup>60</sup> are shut, the East India gates stand wide open to receiue the needy and the poore, giuing them good entertainment with two Moneths wages before hand, to make their needfull prouisions for the Voyage. And in the time of their absence, there is likewise payd vnto their wiues for main-maintenance, two other moneths wages vpon account of euery yeares seruice: and also if any chance to dye in the Voyage, the wife receiueth all that is found due vnto her husband (if he doe not otherwise dispose it by will:) and this often happeneth to be more money, then euer they had of their owne together in any one time. And likewise, are not many poore Widdowes, Wiues and Children of Black-wall, Lime-house, Ratcliffe, Shadwell, and Wapping, often relieved by the East India Company with whole Hogheads of good Biefe and Porke, Bisket and Doales of ready money? Are not diuers of their children set on worke to picke Okam, and other labours fitting their age and capacitie? What might I not say of repaying of Churches, maintenance of some young Schollers, relieuing of many poore Preachers of the Gospell yearely with good summes of money; and diuers other acts of charitie, which are by them religiously performed, euen in the times now of their worst fortunes? for all which I hope there shall be a reward vnto them and theirs. And so I come to the fift part of this third Obiection.

When did any of these Widdowes beg for reliefe in our Churches, as others often doe?

The East India company their charitie.

The fifth Part concerneth the cheapenes of Spice and Indico at this present, in respect of former times.

Prices of spice and Indico in former times.

Prices of spice and Indico in these latter times.

Lesse then eightene thousand pounds sterling in the Indies, will buy Spice and Indico to serue this Realme for a yeare, which is not halfe so much money as it spendeth beyond the seas to buy Currants only, or to buy Tobacco.

The wares on- plus of all man-

And here I must intimate how much they are deceiued, who thinke, that Spices and Indico are no better cheape in England now, then in times past, before the East India trade began. For, it is an vndoubted truth, that in those dayes we often paid sixe shillings, or more for a pound of Pepper, and seldome or neuer lesse then three shillings and sixe pence the pound; whereas since the Trade hath come directly from the Indies, it hath been bought commonly at seuerall prices betweene sixteene pence and two shillings the pound: but I will make the difference of price appeare more plainly by setting downe the quantities of Spices and Indico, which are yearely spent in the Realme of England, together with the lowest prices, which they were wont to sell at, when we brought them from Turkey and Lisborne; and the like concerning their vsuall prices now that we bring them from the East Indies directly: And first as from Turkey, foure hundred thousand pounds of Pepper at three shillings six pence the pound, is threescore & ten thousand pounds: Fortie thousand pounds of Cloues at eight shillings the pound, is sixteene thousand pounds: twenty thousand pounds of Maces at nine shillings the pound, is nine thousand pounds: One hundred and sixty thousand pounds of Nutmegs, at foure shillings sixe pence the pound, is six and thirtie thousand pounds: One hundred and fiftie thousand pounds of Indico at seuen shillings the pound, is fifty two thousand five hundred pounds. All these summes being put together, comes to one hundred eightie three thousand five hundred pounds Sterling.

And the selfesame quantity and sorts of wares are commonly sold at the prices here vnder written now in these later times: Foure hundred thousand pounds of Pepper at twenty pence the pound, is thirtie three thousand three hundred thirtie three pounds, sixe shillings, eight pence: forty thousand pounds of Cloues at six pence the pound, is twelue thousand pound: twenty thousand pounds of Mace at six shillings the pound, is six thousand pounds: one hundred sixty thousand pounds of Nutmegs at two shillings six pence the pound, is twentie thousand pounds: one hundred fiftie thousand pounds of Indico at five shillings the pound, is seven and thirtie thousand pounds. All these summes beeing put together, is one hundred eight thousand three hundred thirtie three pounds sixe shillings eight pence sterling.

So that this Trade in Spice and Indico only, doth saue the kingdom yerely seuentie foure thousand nine hundred sixtie sixe pound thirteene shillings foure pence, which is a matter worthy to be obserued; and so much the rather, because it is a certaine truth, that lesse then a quarter part of this summe of mony which is thus saued yearely, shall buy in the Indies the full quantitie of all the seuerall sorts of wares before written, which doe serue for a yeares prouision for this Realme of England; but still it must be remembred, that the custom, impost, wages, victuals, shipping, and other charges (which are to be added) will be a greater summe, then the mony which is paid for these wares in the Indies: but as I haue noted before, the said charges doe not consume the Kingdomes stocke, although it doth greatly abate the Merchants gaine.

And to conclude this point, I will adde vnto that which hath been said; that the commodities onely which we now send yearely into the East Indies and Persia, are of sufficient value there to returne vs Indico, Spices, Drugs, and all other sorts of Indian wares (Raw-silkes of Persia only excepted) for one yeares consume, or more in this Kingdome: so that now all the money which is sent forth in our Ships doth procure an ouer-plus of the said wares, to the furtherance of Trade from India hither, and after from hence to forreine parts againe, to the great imployment of the Subiects, and enriching of this Realme, both in Stocke and Treasure; all which is matter verie worthy to be diligently obserued. And so I come to giue answere vnto the fourth and last Obiection.

ly which are sent out of this Kingdome into the East Indies, are of sufficient value to furnish this Realme with an ouerplus of all manner of Indian wares (Persian Raw Silkes only excepted.)

The fourth Obiection.

It is generally obserued, that his Maiesties Mint hath had but little employment euer since the East India Trade began; wherefore it is manifest, that the onely remedy for this, and so many euils besides, is to put downe this Trade: For what other remedie can there be for the good of the Common-wealth?

The Answer.

The first Part concerneth his Maiesties Mint.

Twentie five thousand pound waight at least of Siluer yearly melted downe into Plate, besides old Plate new fashioned, as by credible report.

There hath been coyned great store of Gold and Siluer in his Maiesties Mint, since the East India Trade began.

There hath been little or no Siluer coyned in some yeares, when the East India Company sent out very small summes of money.

Some causes and meanes which were wont to bring Siluer into the Realme are ceased at this present time.

The second Part concerneth the putting downe of the East India Trade.

The East India Trade is greatly decayed by other Christian Nations.

The Dutch might grow strong and rich by our destruction.

The third Part concerneth the counsell which the Obiectors demand.

THis fourth obiection may be deuided into three parts: First, An euill declared: Secondly, A remedie propounded: Thirdly, And counsell demanded.

And first concerning the Euill or want of Siluer, I thinke it hath been, and is a generall disease of all Nations, and so will continue untill the end of the world; for poore and rich complaine, they neuer haue enough: but it seemeth the maladie is growne mortall here with vs, and therefore it cries out for remedy. Well, I hope it is but imagination maketh vs sicke, when all our parts be sound and strong: For who knoweth not the inestimable treasure of this Kingdome, in Plate possessed by the people thereof almost of all degrees; in such measure, as neuer hath been seene in former ages? And for his Maiesties Mint, it is well knowne, that there hath been coyned in five yeares together since the East India Company began, six thousand two hundred fourteene pound waight of Gold, and three hundred eleuen thousand three hundred fourescore and foure pound weight of sterling Money; all which Gold and Siluer doe amount vnto the summe of twelue hundred thirteene thousand eight hundred fiftie pounds of sterling Money: How then doth this Trade turne the currant and employment of the Mint?

But upon the sight of this truth, perhaps it will be said, That we must resort vnto the present times (the Mint being idle now.) To which I answer, That likewise the Mint had little or no employment for coynage of Siluer in former times, when the said Company did not export aboue fiftene or twentie thousand pounds sterling at the most per annum; no, nor yet in the yeares 1608, and 1612; when in the former they shipped out but sixe thousand pound, and in the latter but one thousand two hundred and fiftie pounds sterling. So that both wayes we see, that the Mint hath had very great employment five yeares together, since the East India Trade began; and also it hath been without employment diuers yeares, when the East India Company haue sent away but verie small summes of money; wherefore of necessitie there must bee some other causes and meanes whereby our Siluer is not exported onely, but also it is not imported into the Realme as in former times. For wee haue not had the meanes by our owne plenty, nor by the scarcitie of our Neighbours (for the space of the last foureteene yeares together) to send out hundreds of Ships laden with Corne, as in times past, which was returned home in Siluer; but rather of late yeares (as is much to be feared) a great quantitie of our money hath been carried out of the Kingdome for that Corne, which hath been brought vs from the East Countreies, and other places, to supply our wants. Thus times doth change, and our fortunes change with them: neither list I to make this matter plainer, by setting downe those meanes, which heretofore brought vs store of money, euen out of France, and other places, which now are ceased. But without any further meddling in the Mint, I will come to the remedie which some propound, by putting downe the East India Company.

But here our comfort is, that the Obiectors are not our Iudges, whose wisdom and integritie labouring for the honour of his Maiestie, and the good of his Kingdome, will soone perceiue the mischiefs of this supposed remedie. And that the pretended euill which many with malice chase, is that great good, which other Nations seeke by policie and strength to keepe, and likewise to obtaine; in which proceedings, it concerneth vs especially to obserue the diligences and practises of the Dutch, who with more gladnesse would undertake the whole Trade to the East Indies, then with any reason wee can abandon that part thereof which we now enioy; neither can our restraint from the Indies keepe our Siluer from thence, as long as the Dutch goe thither: for we know, that deuices want not to furnish such designes; and when their Ships returne from India, shall not our Siluer out againe to helpe to pay a double price, or what they please, for all those wares which we shall want for our necessities?

Thus should the Dutch increase their honour, wealth and strength, whilst we abate, grow poore and weake at Sea for want of Trade: And call you this a Remedie? no, rather tearme it Ruine, Destruction, or what you list. And so I come vnto the conclusion or last part.

And here I must confesse my self aground, for this matter is much too high for my handling: besides, my excuse is faire, hauing already done my taske to cleare the East India Trade from imputation; the which for want of learning, although I haue performed, without varietie of words or eloquence: yet it is done with all integritie of truth, in euery particular, as I shall be ready to make prooffe vpon all occasions, which may be offered. And yet before I make an end, although I cannot satisfie euery mans desire, in such measure as is necessarie: yet I thinke it not amisse to performe the same so farre, as I am able by common practice, and my obseruations in the Trade of Merchandize, which is my profession.

And first therefore, all men doe know, that the riches or sufficiencie of euery Kingdome, State, or Common-wealth, consisteth in the possession of those things, which are needfull for a ciuill life. This sufficiencie is of two sorts; the one is naturall, and proceedeth of the Territorie it selfe; the other is artificiall, and dependeth on the industrie of the Inhabitants.

The riches of a Kingdom is of two sorts.

The Realme of England (praised be God) is happily possessed of them both: as first, having great plenty of naturall riches, both in the Sea for Fish, and on the Land for Wooll, Cattell, Corne, Lead, Tinne, Iron, and many other things for Food; Rayment, and Munition; insomuch that upon strict termes of need, this Land may live without the helpe of any other Nation. But to live well, to flourish, and grow rich, we must find means by Trade to vent our superfluities; therewith to furnish and adorne us with the treasure and those necessarie Wares which forraine Nations doe afford: and here Industrie must begin to play his part, not onely to increase and guide the Trades abroad, but also to maintaine and multiply the Arts at home: for when either of these faile, or are not effected with such skill as their misteries shall require, then doth the Common-wealth abate and grow poore: neither is it easily perceived at first, untill some evil accidents doe stirre up our diligence to search out the true causes; that so they being removed, the effects may cease. And this is the subject of our Discourse which wee now pursue.

This Kind of industrie maketh some Countries which are poor of themselves, to grow rich and strong by other Nations, who have greater means, and are lesse industrious. Foure principall Causes which carry away our Gold and Silver.

That which I have hitherto delivered hath beene altogether negative, still defending and prouing by arguments, that the East India Trade hath not hurt this Common-wealth: And now changing my stile, I must affirme as fast the true causes of those evils which we seeke to chase away.

The First Cause concerneth the Standard. Proceedings against entercourse.

These causes then (as I conceive) are principally foure. The first, is the breach of Entercourse by forraine Nations. The second, is the abuse of the exchanges betwixt us and other Countries. The third, is neglect of dutie in some Subjects. The fourth, is our damage in commerce with Strangers. Now concerning all these, I might make a very large discourse; but my purpose is onely to explaine the meaning of every point in order, as briefly as I can.

And first for the breach of Entercourse; by this I understand those Nations, who have either debased their Standard, or else over valued the price of their Coynes from that equiualence which formerly they had with the Standard and Moneys of this Realme: and also doe tolerate, not onely their owne Moneys, but also the Coyne of other Countries (and especially of this Kingdom) to bee current with them at higher rates, then the prices of the exchange; by which courses (being directly against the Entercourse) there is a greater cause given of exportation of the Moneys of this Realme, then otherwise there would be. For although this is done with great danger to the Exporters of the same, (it being an act against the Law of the Land) yet notwithstanding covetousnesse being ever conuersant in wicked actions, thinketh nothing unlawfull which promiseth a certaine gaine; and how to remedie this euill practice I find it not easie. For the debasing of the Coyne, or raising the price thereof in this Realme, would much impoverish the estates of particular men, and yet in the conclusion, would prone a businesse without end: for who doth not conceive that which would follow beyond the Seas upon any such alteration here with us? so that still the euill will remaine, untill we find some other remedie.

And for the exchanges of money used betwixt Nations, although the true vse thereof is a very laudable and necessarie practice for the accommodating of Merchants affaires, and furnishing of Travellers in their occasions, without the transporting of Coyne from one State to another, with danger and losse both to the publike and priuate wealth: yet is the abuse thereof very preiudiciall unto this Kingdom in particular; whilst in the interim the benefit doth arise unto other Countries, who diligently observing the prices whereby the moneys be exchanged, may take advantage to carrie away the Gold and Silver of this Realme at those times, when the rate of our sterling money (in exchange) is under the value of that Standard, unto which place they are conuayed: For in respect the prices of the exchanges, doe rise or fall according to the plenty or scarcitie of money, which is to bee taken up, or delivered out, the exchange is hereby become rather a Trade for some great moneyed men, then a furtherance and accommodation of reall Trade to Merchants, as it ought to bee in the true vse thereof. And thus many times money may be made over hither by strangers to a good gaine, and presently carried beyond the Seas to a second profit; and yet the mischief ends not here: for by this means the takers up of money in forraine Countreys must necessarily drive a Trade to those places, from whence they draw their moneys; and so doe fill us up with forraine Commodities, without the vent of our owne Wares: but for this great euill, there is an easie remedie, and so I come to handle the next cause which is neglect of dutie.

The Second Cause concerneth the exchanges of moneys with forraine Countries.

The practice of those Strangers here in this Realme, who make a Trade by exchange of moneys.

Forraine Wares brought in with our ready moneys carried out of this Realme.

The Third Cause concerneth neglect of duties.

Our heauie money is conuayed beyond the Seas, and melted downe into Plate here in the Realme.

Neither is it my intent to write of duties in their severall kinds; but onely of that kind of dutie which is here thought to be neglected by some men in their severall vocations. As it might peradventure come to passe, in those who have the working of his Maiesties Coyne, either gold or silver; if diligent care be not had in the size of every severall piece, to answer iustly to his weight: for howsoever upon triall of many pieces altogether, the weight may be found according to the Covenants, and within the remedies ordained in the Indentures: yet notwithstanding many of those pieces may be sized too light, and others as much too heauie; which giueth the greater advantage to some people, to carrie away that which is over weight, and so to leaue us them which are too light, if they leaue us any. And this mischief is not single; for thereby also some Goldsmiths, regarding profit more then dutie, may bee the more readily drawne to melt downe the heauie Coyne into Plate and other ornaments both of gold and silver. But what might wee thinke of those men who are placed in authoritie and office for his Maiestie, if they should not with all dutifull care discharge their trust concerning that excellent Statute, wherein it is ordered,

Anno 17. Edward. 4.

The Fourth Cause concerneth our commerce with Strangers. Vnskilfull Merchants overthrow our Trades.

Merchants by education are onely fit to trade in forraigne parts.

How rich Common-wealths may become poore. Forraigne Wares brought in for Trade cannot hurt, but greatly helpe the Common-wealth. Hopes to increase Trade by exportation of Indian Wares to forraigne parts.

The particular Trade to the East Indies will bring great store of treasure into this Realme, if the generall Trade of this Kingdome doe not hinder and consume it. The Dutch in particular, are said to reape such infinite wealth yeerely by this fishing Trade, that without more certaine knowledge thereof I dare not set downe the summe, it seemeth so incredible. See hereof D. Dees booke: as also Cap. Smith.

red, that all the moneys received by strangers for their Merchandize, shall be employed upon the Commodities of this Realme? the due performance whereof would not onely prevent the carrying away of much Gold and Silver, but also bee a meanes of greater vent of our owne Wares: whereof I purpose to write some thing more in the next part which concerneth our commerce with strangers.

And now I come to the last point, which I feare is not the least amongst the causes of our want of money (so farre as any such may be,) and let it not seeme strange to any man, that Trades should hurt and impouerish a Common-wealth, since it hath beene alwayes accounted an excellent meanes to helpe and enrich the same: for, as this truth cannot be denied with reason, so it is likewise most certaine, that the vnskilfull managing thereof hath ever proued a great decay vnto those Nations who haue beene entangled with such errors. And are not the examples too frequent in many of our owne Merchants, who not onely by the perils of the Seas and such like misfortunes lose their goods, but also enen through want of knowledge, wisely to direct their affaires, doe overthrow their whole estates? Neither may we properly call this their losse, but rather the Kingdomes losse in them. Wherefore it were to be wished, that this mystorie of Merchandize might be left onely to them who haue had an education therunto; and not to be undertaken by such, who leauing their proper vocations, doe for want of skill in this, both overthrow themselves, and others who are better practised.

But there is yet a farre greater mischiefe by our Trades beyond the Seas, when peraduenture, there might be imported yeerely a greater value in forraigne Wares, then by any way or meanes wee doe export of our owne Commodities; which cannot oiberwise come to passe, then with a manifest impouerishing of the Common-wealth: for as it is a certaine course to make vs rich, both in Stocke and Treasure, when wee shall carrie out a greater value of our owne goods then wee bring in of forraigne Wares; so by consequence, a course contrarie to this, must of necessity worke a contrarie effect. Neither is this importation meant otherwise: then concerning those Wares, which are consumed in this Realme: for the Commodities which are brought in, and after carried out vnto forraigne parts againe, cannot hurt, but doe greatly helpe the Common-wealth, by encrease of his Maiesties Customes and Trades, with other employments of the Subiects: by which particulars I might yet set forth the glorie of the East India Trade, which hath brought into this Realme in fifteene moneths space, not onely so much Spice, as hath serued the same for the said time; but also by the superfluitie thereof, there hath beene exported into forraigne parts for about two hundred and fiftene thousand pounds sterling. So then let all men iudge, for what a great value we may hope hereafter to export yeerely; when vnto these Spices wee may (by Gods assistance) adde the infinite worth of raw Silkes, Indicoes, Callicoes, and some other things: all which are to be issued in the nature of Cloth, Lead, Tinne, or any of our owne Merchandize to the enriching of this Kingdome by encrease of the common Stocke. So then to conclude this point, wee ought not to auoid the importation of forraigne Wares, but rather willingly to briaie our owne affections to the moderate consuming of the same: for otherwise, howsoener the East India Trade in particular is an excellent meanes greatly to encrease the Stocke of money which wee send thither yeerely, by returning home five times the value thereof in rich Commodities; all which (in short time) may be conuerted into Treasure, as is plainly shewed already. Yet notwithstanding, if these Indian Wares thus brought home cannot be spared, to serue for that purpose of Treasure; but must bee sent forth together with our owne native Commodities; and yet all litle enough, to provide our excesse and extraordinary consume of forraigne Wares: then is it likewise as certaine, that the generall Trade of this Kingdome doth hinder and diuert the coming in of the said Treasure, by over-ballancing the value of our Wares exported with the importation and immoderate consume of forraigne Commodities.

Therefore, forasmuch as the number of the people in this Realme are thought to be greatly encreased of late time (both in themselves and strangers,) whereby necessarily the Commodities of this Kingdome, and also forraigne Wares, are the more consumed and wasted, (a double meanes to abate the Common-wealth) it therefore concerneth vs all in generall, and euey man in his particular, to stirre up our minds and diligence, to helpe the naturall Commodities of this Realme by industrie, and increase of Arts; seeing that the materials cannot be wanting to make such Stuffles, and other things as are daily brought vnto vs from forraigne parts, to the great advantage of Strangers, and to our no lesse damage. Neither should wee neglect the riches which our Seas affoord, whilst other Nations by their labour doe procure themselves great Treasure from the same. And as the diligent performance of these things would plentifully maintaine the Poore, and much increase the common Stocke of this Kingdome: so likewise for the better furtherance thereof, wee ought religiously to auoyd our common excesse of food and rayment, which is growne to such a height in most degrees of people (aboue their abilitie) that it is now beyond all example of former Ages. Neither is it needfull for mee to set downe the particulars of these abuses; for they are too well knowne: and I am confident, that the wisdom of our Government doth endeavour to see them as well amended, to the glorie of God, the honour of the King, and the good of the Common-wealth. Amen.

Courteous Reader, I could have added others in this defensive Argument for the East Indian Trade; and especially that of that learned Gentleman Sir Dud. Diggs: But because himselfe is now absent in weightier Employments, and I knew not whether he would be willing to see it mustered and marshalled in my Files, I was loth to doe it: For his ill-will I have cause to bee unwilling to purchase, whose good-will hath purchased mine and mee (a worthlesse Purchas) in effecting my present good, in affecting greater, that I might have bene enabled to have bestowed on the world my promised perfected World. Wherein not to have succeeded, is yet (as that vast and incompetible designe of mine) to have exceeded, as others otherwise, so herein himselfe. Besides, later occurrences have ministred other Strings for busie 10 Fingers to harpe on, (though not with best Harmonie) since the edition of that Booke. I had thought also to have added somewhat out of Master Misseldens FREE TRADE, fitting the present businesse: but seeming to have made not an Indian Voyage, but a Plantation, in so long stay there, I will bring you homewards: and because the wonted way of returne is by encompassing Africa, that course also wee will here take: and to prevent Sea-sickness, and the lazie Scorbute, we will not onely touch on the Shoare, but adventure into the maine Land, and follow the best Guides, both English and others, thorow the African both Desarts and Habitations: of whom John Leo is the best that hath written in that Argument, and as a Lion may conduct the most fearefull thorow the most perillous passages. For 20 what may not Cowards doe, having a Lion to their Guide and Captaine?
